Another argument has been made here in the Senate to maintain the moderate rates imposed in the pending bill, and that is the necessity and the prospect of being obliged to levy higher taxes in the future. That argument has fallen from the lips of Senators in debate; that argument is set out here in the report of the majority of the committee, that taxes should be moderate now lest we must be obliged, as we will be obliged, to resort to the imposition of higher taxes in the future. There is also a fundamental fallacy underlying that argument. Why should we keep taxes down now lower than these profits can bear and issue bonds instead, in order that we may, when the exigency becomes more urgent, raise the taxes in the future? Would not wisdom recommend that we levy now the highest tax upon war profits consistent with continued prosperity; that we minimize the use of the public credit for the present and resort to that expedient only when driven to it by untimely necessity? This is an argument to keep taxes down on the war profits of 1917 lest we should be obliged to levy a higher rate upon the war profits of 1918.

Mr. President, there is a hiatus between the premises and the conclusion; in reasoning thus Senators do not close the circuit between their premises and their conclusion. The argument not to tax the war profits of 1917 up to a reasonable limit in order that we may levy a higher tax upon the war profits of 1918 is a good deal like a fire company that would refuse to turn on the full pressure, would refuse to play the hose with full might and main upon a burning building out of fear that the fire might possibly spread, and that if it did spread they would need the water even worse than before. It is not a sound argument.

Now, Mr. President, if we will levy a reasonable tax on war profits in the pending bill we can eliminate the taxes upon consumption—the tax on tea, the tax on coffee, the increased tax on sugar; we can eliminate the increased postal rate on letters from 2 to 3 cents; we can eliminate the tax on parcel post, the tax on passenger rates, and last, but not by any means least, we can eliminate the 3 per cent tax on freight. To my mind a more objectionable tax can not even be imagined than a tax on freight; it is nothing but the willful imposition of friction upon the business of this country. Nobody can calculate in advance the amount of hardship and the amount of injury it will entail. It will operate like sand in the bearings of commerce and industry. The tax on freight, it is estimated, will raise about $70,000,000. If we increase the tax on war profits 1½ per cent we can eliminate the entire tax on freight, which would do infinite injury, and place the tax where it would do no appreciable harm. Moreover, we lose sight of this dilemma on one or the other horn of which we are impaling ourselves. We have established the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain and maintain reasonable rates. If the commission is to-day maintaining reasonable rates, then such rates can not bear a tax of 3 per cent. If, on the other hand, freight rates can bear a tax of 3 per cent, then we convict the commission of having defaulted its duty in tolerating rates which are higher than necessity or justice demand.

Mr. President, Great Britain is now levying a tax of 80 per cent on war profits, allowing a certain small discount; on shipping profits she is levying a tax of 88 per cent. Now, what is the effect? The Senator from Minnesota expressed great solicitude, which we all share, that the taxes should not be so high as to cripple industry. In the next breath he declared that the business of Great Britain was never more prosperous than at the present hour—staggering under the weight of an 80 per cent tax on war profits, yet enjoying a golden prosperity unexampled in her history. That ought to spirit us up; that ought to reinforce our courage to follow the example of Great Britain in drafting money as well as men.

In this connection I wish to emphasize the fact that the aggregate annual earnings of the United States are estimated to be three times as large as such earnings in Great Britain, those of Great Britain being estimated at $12,500,000,000 a year and those of the United States at $37,000,000,000. We must not forget the ominous estimate that 2 per cent of the people of the United States own 65 per cent of the property and presumably control 65 per cent of the aggregate income. When the Roman republic and Roman liberties fell under the feet of autocratic power it is said that 2 per cent of the people owned more than 90 per cent of all the wealth in the Roman world.

When the draft measure was under consideration one of the chief arguments in its favor was that Great Britain had resorted to the draft. True, she deferred that action for something like 18 months, until public opinion was led to its support, but that was one of the dominant arguments in this Chamber in its behalf.

One of the controlling reasons, it was said, why America should adopt the draft was the fact that Great Britain had adopted the draft. I do not now discuss the weight of that argument, but why should we not now follow the example of Great Britain in drafting the profits of war in order to defray the expenses of war?

It is said that where a man's treasure is there is his heart also; where a mother's child is there is her heart also. When you have drafted a mother's only son, you have taken 100 per cent of her heart's treasure. Then, why should we refuse to levy a tax of 60 per cent on war profits when they have exceeded the profits of peace by 300 per cent?

But, Mr. President, lying back of all this argument, and even more potent than this, is the fact that if we rely upon taxation now and do not overuse our national credit we will husband our resources, we will conserve our energies for the stupendous task of the future. It will be necessary to revive a faint and a stricken world—I had almost said to resurrect the world itself. The task of rehabilitating human society and civilization surpasses in importance all the tasks of former history. I want the United States to do her full share in this vast work of reconstruction. When peace comes let us lay our hand to the task; let us be equipped and able to carry forward this service to a splendid consummation.

Of course, we can not at this time discuss international peace. This is the darkest hour in all the history of that once mighty movement. Perhaps we are not privileged to hope that the impending darkness is that ominous darkness which precedes and which presages the coming splendors of the dawn. That must be a work of evolution; but, sir, only weakness despairs. Had progress despaired none of the great monuments of civilization could have been erected which mark the highways of the past.

Mr. President, it was a long way from the drag pole and the log wheel to the Corliss engine and the Twentieth Century Limited; it was a long way from the gum-tree canoe to a floating palace like the Mauretania, to a floating Gibraltar like the Oklahoma; it was a long way from the foot messenger, making 4 or 5 miles an hour, to the electric current girdling the globe while we but tell the tale; it was a long way, it was a weary way, from the naked savage gnawing a bone in a sunless cavern unto the comforts and refinements of modern civilization. Some one has said that all the varieties of the rose, with their beauty, their fragrance, and their splendor, have been evolved from the modest hedgerose that blushes unseen by the wayside. If this be true, then all that has been evolved from the hedgerose must have been involved in the hedgerose. Mankind has passed through many stages of progress, through many stages of savagery, barbarism, and civilization. How to define the present stage or age I do not know; but it is not the stage in which the word "war" can be marked as obsolete in our dictionaries. Certainly the rumors of war have not passed from the lips of men, nor has war itself ceased to scourge the race of man.

Some one may say that the time has never been, that the time will never be, when wars will be unknown among the sons and daughters of men. That, sir, may be true. The time has never been when poverty was unknown among men. Shall we for that reason cease to wage war against want, to wage war against all the social evils that follow as the brood of pauperism?

The time has never been when disease was unknown among men. Shall we for that reason cease to wage war against the pestilence that stalks at noontide? Shall we disband the Red Cross and dismantle the hospital?

The time has never been when crime was unknown among men. Shall we for that reason repeal the penal code and abandon society to the criminal and his crime?

The time has never been when mankind was free from the effects of that "forbidden tree whose mortal taste brought sin into the world and all our woe with loss of Eden"; but, sir, shall we for that reason profane the shrines, shall we desecrate the altars, shall we tear down the temples of the Most High?

There is less of poverty, there is less of disease, there is less of crime and kindred evils, than there would have been had brave men and women, had moral heroes and heroines, not been unwilling to cease their perpetual warfare against these social evils and their train of multiplied miseries. Shall we cease in the future to wage war against the possibility of war?

The time was when dueling was characterized as the code of honor. To decline a challenge was to invite ostracism and disgrace. The enlightened conscience of mankind has abrogated that criminal code of honor. To-day the sending, the bearing, the accepting of a challenge is an infamous crime under the laws of the land. Is it, then, too much to hope that the time may yet come when dueling between nations will be as repugnant to the enlightened conscience of mankind as dueling between mere individuals? Is it too much to hope that the time may yet come when, in the rich light of an ampler day, the nations of the earth will cease to determine which is right and which is wrong by the amount of bloodshed and of slaughter the one is able to inflict upon the other?

When that time comes, if it should come, I want this great Republic to take its appointed place in the vanguard of human progress, building a better and a brighter and a more enduring civilization. I want this Republic to be in a situation, financially and in every other capacity, to gird up its loins for the performance of this stupendous task and render this incalculable service to civilization and unto all the generations that are to come.

Let us strive upon appropriate occasion to build a peace upon principles that will be at once acceptable and lasting. Let us strive for a peace, when that time shall come, that will endure so long as the grass grows, that will endure so long as the water flows.

Mr. President, I wish to print in connection with my remarks a clipping or two from newspapers, and a letter or so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE DAILY OKLAHOMAN,
Oklahoma City, Okla., May 9, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am taking the liberty of inclosing you a copy of a letter I have written to Hon. JOE B. THOMPSON in further reference to the proposed increase in postal rates and the proposed taxation of 5 per cent on the gross receipts of advertising.

I can not urge you too strongly to give this matter your most careful and considerate attention.

We are only too glad to pay any tax that is reasonable or that is proportionate with that of other lines of business, but when the Government increases our transportation expenses by from 200 to 700 per cent and in addition demands a 5 per cent tax on gross advertising receipts, and not only confiscates all profits of practically all publishers, but forces them to create an enormous annual deficit in addition, it is certainly going further than it has in any other line of business.

To my mind newspapers and farm papers are absolutely essential to the carrying out of the Government's program for the increased production of food, feed, and raw materials. Every issue of practically every publication in the country is urging the public to organize its labor and its efforts toward the supplying of our Army and that of our allies. If farm papers are killed and rural subscriptions to daily newspapers are cut off by a tax, which neither the farmers nor the publishers can or will pay, then the Government's chief aid in extending the propaganda of preparedness will have been assassinated. Don't you think this is shortsighted policy on the part of the Government?

Very truly, yours.

E. K. GAYLORD, General Manager.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS WRITTEN BY SENATOR GORE.

It seems to me that every patriotic and self-respecting guardsman would realize that it is better for him, better for his family, and better for his country for him to remain at home in the discharge of his civic and domestic duties and remit the defense of the Republic to those gallant young heroes whose death would be deplored by their countrymen but would leave no legacy of want and woe, no legacy of sorrow and suffering to widows and orphans, who, like Rachel of old, could not be comforted—nay, not with all the gold of Ophir and of Ind.

There were two opposing theories advanced upon the payment to the guardsmen and their families. The House resolution and its supporters proposed to tear the guardsman from the bosom of his family, even though he had a dependent mother, wife, and children. They proposed to console and compensate these weeping women and children with the miserable pittance of $50 a month. A majority of the Senate, like myself, was opposed to tearing asunder those whom God had joined together. We did not believe, in a war like this, that it was necessary to break up the home, to separate the family, to run the risk of widowhood, to orphan the children, and then make a vain effort to repair their loss and dry their tears with what would be little else than blood money amounting to $50 a month. I do not know how to estimate the sorrow of women and children in the coin of the realm. I do not know the market price of the mother's sigh, of the widow's tear, or the orphan's sob. I think it infinitely better to leave these men in their homes and with their families rather than send them to the cactus deserts of Mexico and mock the miseries of their loved ones with an offer of so much per sigh and so much per heart-ache. With the hand of a Shakespeare Mr. Blake depicts two distressing scenes. The one, a young guardsman torn from his loving young wife who was about to enter the holy estate of motherhood; the other, the wife of a guardsman with a baby nestling in her arms and two children clinging to her skirts seeking shelter at the hands of public charity. These two pathetic scenes make the issue between Mr. Blake and myself as clear-cut as the issue between life and death. Mr. Blake, with a heart of a Medusa, would have this great Government compel, rather than avert, the enactment of these heart-rending tragedies and would then undertake to heal the hearts he had broken with dollar marks and decimal points. He would appraise the anguish and pay these women and children in hard cash, just as he would assess the damages for a pennyroyal yearling killed by a Rock Island train. I can not reduce the most sacred sentiments of the human soul to a common denominator of dollars and cents. I would prevent these distressing tragedies in this enlightened land. I would give these women their husbands instead of filthy lucre. I would give these children their fathers instead of a $50 bill. Unlike Mr. Blake, I do not attribute to that gilded idol the power to dry the tears of the sorrowing. I would restore these guardsmen to their families. Mr. Blake would feed them to the red dragons of war. Let faith, hope, and love sit in judgment between us. There shall be no vacant chair in the family circle with my voice and vote—no crepe on the door. The ghosts of these slaughtered soldiers can not shake their gory locks at me. Heartbroken widows and orphans shall not breathe a curse upon my memory as the despoiler of their hearts and their homes. I prefer the grateful blessings of devoted wives and loving, laughing children as one who had sprinkled the doorposts to turn aside the angel of destruction.

I concede your right to think as you think. I claim only the equal right to think as I think. Neither should deny this right to the other. Of course, if you think that I ought to vacate my own views, my own judgment, and my own conscience and accept without question the views of the President on the question of peace and war there is a point of irreconcilable difference. To accept such a view would be to admit that democracy is a failure, that our representative institutions should be dismantled and that popular government ought to be converted into an absolute despotism. I am pleased whenever I can agree with the President, and generally have agreed with him. It is a matter of regret to be obliged to disagree. I belong to the department of this Government charged and vested with the power to declare war. The doctrine that the President can do no wrong would be as deadly to democracy as the ancient doctrine that the king can do no wrong was fatal to human liberty. It might as well be understood now as later that I never have, that I never shall, bow the knee and place my hands in the hands of mortal man and pledge myself to be his man. I own no other master than the sovereign people of Oklahoma.

The Rubicon is crossed and I am as anxious as any man to carry this war to success. We can not afford to fail. We must succeed. But in carrying democracy to people who would rather die than become Democrats we ought not to begin by sacrificing our own.

If to cherish with reverence and surrender with regret the most sacred ideals and traditions of our fathers be an offense then, indeed, have I offended.

The subsidized press of this country is to-day the kept mistress of plutocracy.

Let us not in our unique attempt to substitute democracy for military despotism in Germany incur the risk of substituting military despotism for democracy in America.

I would rather subject myself to unmerited criticism now on account of prudence than to incur merited criticism hereafter on account of imprudence. A short and successful war, an early, honorable, and lasting peace. As to these ends we have no right to differ. But as to the means to be employed for the accomplishment of these ends there is just ground for difference and debate. All possible wisdom should be employed in adapting the means to the speedy and effective consummation of the end. He does not serve his country best who supports shortsighted and inconsiderate legislation merely in order to win the favor of the President or to escape the criticism of the press.

Where you and I seem to differ most is in this. My love for democracy is universal, not local. My hatred for autocracy is not local but universal. Your love of democracy seems to be localized and not universal. You seem to hate autocracy in Germany and to love autocracy in America. I despise despotism everywhere, alike in Germany and in America, but most of all I would despise it in dearly beloved America.

It seems to me that every practical safeguard to insure economy and to prevent waste should be established by the Congress, the department charged with the raising and expenditure of money. The auditing committee (proposed by Senator OWEN) could not possibly have encouraged extravagance. It might possibly have discouraged extravagance and prevented waste. In supporting the amendment I felt that I was acting not only as a friend of the President but as a friend of Congress, as a friend of the people, and last, whether or not least, as a friend of the Democratic Party.

In this connection permit me to say that one of the few things in the food bill which I favored was the Senate committee amendment to prohibit men from representing both the Government and their own concerns in the negotiation of contracts for their own products. To cite a concrete case, Mr. Davis, who is president of the Aluminum Co. of America (the Aluminum Trust of the world), is also chairman of the aluminum purchasing committee. It has already been brought out before a House committee that Mr. Davis is expecting to sell canteens for 74 cents apiece, the raw material value of which is only 14½ cents apiece. At the head of the oil purchasing committee is A. C. Bedford, president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey (the mother company), of 26 Broadway, New York. At the head of the advisory committee for the purchase of alcohol stands Horatio S. Rubens, president of the United States Industrial Alcohol Co. At the head of the committee on steel and steel products is E. H. Gary, the head of the Steel Trust. Associated with Mr. Gary on the steel committee is Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co. And so on ad infinitum. An occasional inspection to see that the sheep's clothing is genuine and to see that there is no wool in the teeth of these industrial benefactors can hardly be set down as an act either of imprudence or disloyalty. It is still pretty hard for a man to serve two masters. I doubt whether it is any more possible for a man to serve both the Government and mammon than to serve both God and mammon. During this hour of the Nation's peril nothing should be done in a corner that would wink or blink in the full blaze of the most pitiless and penetrating publicity.

Permit me to say, finally, that much as I was opposed to the war I shall do whatever is necessary to be done to carry our arms to a speedy and complete triumph, subject only to the limitations of the Constitution and to the obligations of international law and humanity. We are now waging war against the spirit of absolutism and the doctrine of State necessity. I agree with you entirely that we must avoid not only the substance, but even the semblance of Prussian autocracy. I hope it will not be necessary to confer autocratic power on any officer or department of the Government. It would be unfortunate to familiarize the people even with the forms and phrases of despotism. As a matter of tactics and prudence I think it of the highest importance that we should not go so far so fast as to occasion a revulsion of public sentiment that would be prejudicial to the vigorous prosecution of the war.

Fox, Burke, and the elder Pitt thundered in the British Parliament like intellectual Titans against the Revolutionary War. John Bright thundered against the Crimean War. Webster, Clay, and Lincoln thundered without apology or impeachment against the Mexican War. Lloyd George, to day Prime Minister of Great Britain, led in the British Parliament the opposition to the South African War. I do not emulate their example. We must wage the war to an honorable end.

It is said that Italy now has an army of 2,000,000 of men which she is not in a situation to arm and equip. We can arm and equip them. They are near the firing line. They would not have to be transported over sea. Shipping space would not be required which could otherwise be devoted to transportation of arms, munitions, and other essentials of military triumph.

An honest and fearless free press is the palladium of popular liberty. The will of the people is the soul of democracy. The consent of the governed is its seal and signet.

[From the Washington Post, July 28, 1917.]

Aid small publishers—Association will supply paper through Northcliffe mill—Paper to be sold below market.

New York, July 27.—The Editor and Publisher will publish to-morrow an announcement by the paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association that through a contract made by the committee with Lord Northcliffe's New Foundland mill, 80,000 tons of newsprint annually will be available without contract for small newspaper publishers in the United States and others who have been paying high prices for their print paper requirements. The entire output of the Northcliffe mill will be available.

[From the Washington Times, Aug. 30, 1917.]

Thirty thousand new millionaires in the United States since the war started. Do you happen to be one of them? If so, congratulations. If not, do you wonder that there is some prosperous opposition to peace in a hurry? Thirty thousand newly made war millionaires are apt to be rather particular about the kind of peace they will accept. They easily find newspapers to express their thought.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 14, 1917.]

Not very pleasant for public reading, what Mr. McLean's Ryley Granon says about "the aircraft combination."

He predicts no efficient flying machine action against Germany for two years, charges criminal price-fixing, alleges the existence of a close combination to let only a few manufacturers compete, and describes in detail a scheme to pay over two millions of dollars in "patent fees" to two Wall Street concerns. Serious charges that call for careful investigation and complete reply.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 21, 1917.]

Peking, Sept. 15.—Announcement was made in governmental circles to-day that the Chinese cabinet, provided the entente powers approved, was willing to send 300,000 soldiers to France in compliance with the French request. An appeal has been made to the United States to aid China, as the entente allied powers were helped financially, to equip her troops.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am aware that a number of Senators desire to speak before the time for debate upon this bill expires; and what I have to say I shall endeavor to condense as much as possible, in order that other Senators may have time to present their views.

Mr. President, I have had printed and expect to offer a substitute bill, so it becomes quite important that I should briefly direct the attention of Senators to the salient and important features of that bill as distinguished from the pending measure, to the end that when the roll call shall come upon the substitute measure, after debate has ceased, Senators will be able to vote understandingly.

My substitute bill, Mr. President, would collect from surplus incomes $162,000,000 more than the pending bill. The substitute bill which I shall offer proposes a 76 per cent flat rate upon war profits. I have determined to offer that flat rate upon war profits for the reason that the committee bill imposes upon corporations a tax of 4 per cent as a new war tax, in addition to the old 2 per cent rate on corporations as provided in the act of 1909, as amended by that of 1913. This new tax of 4 per cent added to the 76 per cent flat rate which I propose in the substitute bill makes an even 80 per cent upon war profits. That, Mr. President, is exactly the rate which Great Britain imposes upon war profits.

Some time before the votes were taken upon any amendments increasing the rates upon war profits over those proposed in the committee bill I introduced a series of amendments, eight in number, each proposing a different rate upon war profits. The highest rate in the eight amendments which I offered relating to war profits was 76 per cent, which, as I have before stated, supplemented by the 4 per cent additional tax laid upon corporations in this bill, would make the even and flat rate upon corporations as to war profits 80 per cent, the same as that of Great Britain. I did not formally offer that amendment, and it has not been submitted to a vote in the Senate. I did not offer it because the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] offered one imposing a tax of 73 per cent, which, because of its priority of offer, was entitled to the first vote in the Senate; and it was rejected. Therefore, after the Senate had rejected the 73 per cent rate it seemed to me futile to offer the 76 per cent rate. For that reason I did not offer it, but offered instead the next rate, of which my amendments took account, 70 per cent. But in the substitute bill which I shall propose when the time comes I have incorporated the 76 per cent rate as the flat rate on war profits, which I think the Senate should adopt.

That rate, Mr. President, would collect as a war-profits tax $994,000,000 more than would be collected by the war-profits tax provision of the pending bill on the basis of $3,000,000,000 of taxable war profits.

I state further the difference between the proposed substitute and the pending bill:

The substitute bill eliminates the dangerous provision in the pending bill which gives legislative recognition to the capitalization of surplus taken from the public in extortionate charges. The pending bill gives to the surplus thus taken the same status as the law and the courts now give to the capital put into the business by the owners of the business.

I must not dwell upon that provision, though it is an exceedingly important one, because I wish to yield the floor just as soon as possible. But, Mr. President, I will say that the provision, incorporated in the new amendment which reaches corporations that would not otherwise be taxed under the war-tax provisions by taxing their excess profits, is fraught with more evil, in my humble opinion, than any other one provision in this bill. Impelled by a sense of duty, I beg to say in one word to Senators on this floor that that provision in the bill, which has received no attention in the course of this debate except such as I have been able to give to it, will overturn by congressional action the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will write into the law a legislative recognition that surplus wrong from the people by excessive charges, whether by the monopoly power of the United States Steel Corporation, or by the natural monopoly power of a railroad, or by the excessive charges of other corporations, shall have the same standing as capital as would new capital furnished by the means of the issuance and sale of stock and added to the old capital of the corporation.

I do not wish to dwell upon that, but I do hope the Senate understands it.

The substitute bill also provides an additional tax of 10 per cent on the surplus of any corporation which remains undistributed after six months. It is a recognition of the principle embodied in the amendment offered in committee by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], which I know he is waiting to discuss, so I must make haste and give him the opportunity to discuss his amendment to this, one of the most important provisions in this bill.

The substitute bill retains on liquor and cigars the taxes just as these are in the committee bill, except that it eliminates the taxes upon so-called soft drinks.

The substitute bill eliminates all the consumption and stamp taxes and the tax upon passenger tickets, freight, express, parcel post, telegraph and telephone facilities which remain in the committee bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator to have me ask him a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not at all.

Mr. GRONNA. I am exceedingly interested in the question which the Senator is discussing. I want to ask the Senator if it is his opinion that if we pass the bill as it has been reported by the majority of the committee it would be establishing a precedent with regard to surplus and undivided profits which the Interstate Commerce Commission would have to recognize in fixing rates, or did I misunderstand the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator does not misunderstand me. Mr. President, I wish it were within my power—I wish I had some gift by which I could illuminate that subject in a few sentences so that Senators upon this floor could understand it. The Interstate Commerce Commission, by the only decision which it has written upon this subject—the decision in 1910 in the Advance Rate Cases, Secretary Franklin K. Lane writing the opinion—absolutely refused to recognize surplus taken out of the people by excessive freight charges as a part of the capital of the railroads upon which, when expended for improvements and extensions and permanent additions to their plants, they had the right to charge to make a return. The railroads asked the commission to recognize surplus as capital upon which they were entitled to earn dividends as upon other capital and to fix the rates high enough to permit of earnings to pay dividends upon this surplus. The commission refused to recognize surplus as a part of the capital of the roads, and in a decision rendered by Mr. Lane as a member of that commission, since which no decision contrary to it has been rendered, he said distinctly that surplus could not be so recognized. This bill, if enacted, will place a legislative construction upon surplus as a part of capital which will forever license corporations, whether they be corporations like the United States Steel Corporation or railroad corporations or otherwise, to gather into their surplus by extortionate charges vast sums of money from the people of this country, and then to use that surplus as a part of their capital. The courts have held again and again that all the railroads are entitled to charge are rates sufficient to provide for maintenance and operation and for a fair return upon the investment and to provide a small surplus which, in meager years, should keep the rates up to the level which would enable them to provide for the three things that I have enumerated. If this provision be adopted, so far as legislative construction can do so these decisions will be set aside and this Congress will have voted into the regulation of corporations a distinct recognition of surplus wrongfully taken from the public as part of the capital, just as though it had been furnished as new capital invested in the business.

Oh, Senators, when you console yourselves in voting for this bill by the notion that you are taking some excess-profits taxes that these corporations would not pay under the rule for determining war profits written into the bill as it was reported by the committee—that is, by ascertaining the average net profits of the business for three prewar years and only taxing the difference, because in some instances there would be no war profits and no tax—you must not overlook the great wrong that will be done to secure these excess-profits taxes. The war-profits plan was not perfect, but against its imperfection remember that in reaching these excess profits of corporations that otherwise would go untaxed you are fastening upon the people this rankly iniquitous recognition of surplus as capital. There has been incorporated in this bill a provision, a definition of capital, which makes that surplus a part of the capital, no matter how great it may be or how wrongfully it may have been taken from the public.

Mr. President, the substitute bill adds two new paragraphs to which I think I should specifically call the attention of the Senate, because I know that when it comes to voting upon these measures it is difficult to get, from the reading of a bill as long as the substitute bill will be, all of the variations between that substitute bill and the pending bill; and I think, in fairness, I ought to direct the attention of the Senate to these now.

The substitute bill, I say, adds two new paragraphs providing for the publicity of income and corporation-tax returns, which, in addition to the provisions of existing law, will more effectively compel honesty in making these returns and will result in saving a large amount of income to the Government. That provision does not mean that these income returns made by individuals and others shall be published, but it does make a public record of such returns. At present you can not go to the internal-revenue office and ascertain what any corporation or what any individual pays as a corporation or an income tax. A seal of secrecy is thrown over that record; and behind that shield of secrecy, as it has been worked out by experts, there is a vast evasion of those taxes. But if, Mr. President, any citizen was entitled to demand that record in any case where he thought there had been an evasion of those taxes, he would have a right to inquire, and he could give publicity to the facts elicited by his inquiry. I think it a very important provision, and one worthy of the serious consideration of the Senate.

The substitute bill also has a provision empowering the Tariff Commission to investigate and report, for the information of Congress, as to additional sources of revenue, if there be any, which are escaping the pressing necessities of our time and which ought to contribute. Such an investigation, Mr. President, I believe will be of great service to the public.

Now, Mr. President, not taking any more time upon that, I wish to ask that I may insert at this time in my remarks the roll call, when it shall have been taken in the Senate, upon that substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The roll call above referred to, subsequently taken, is as follows:

YEAS—15.

Borah	Hardwick	Jones, Wash.	Norris
Brady	Hollis	Kenyon	Reed
Gore	Husting	La Follette	Vardaman
Gronna	Johnson, Cal.	McNary

NAYS—65.

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sterling
Brandeggee	Kellogg	Pittman	Stone
Calder	Kendrick	Poindexter	Sutherland
Chamberlain	King	Pomerene	Swanson
Colt	Kirby	Ransdell	Thompson
Curtis	Knox	Robinson	Trammell
Dillingham	Lewis	Saulsbury	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Fletcher	McKellar	Sherman	Watson
France	Martin	Shields	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Gerry	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Hale	New	Smith, Md.
Harding	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
James	Overman	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst	Gallinger	McLean	Thomas
Broussard	Goff	Owen	Tillman
Culberson	Hitchcock	Phelan	Townsend
Cummins	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S substitute was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, as rapidly as I can, I wish to review what has taken place in the Senate during the consideration of this bill.

First, I shall take up the votes upon the amendments offered to increase the income tax over the amounts proposed by the committee. In what I say for the next few minutes I shall make no comment upon those votes, but I wish at this point in the proceedings of the Senate to have these votes appear again in the RECORD.

On August 23 the Senate voted upon an amendment which I offered to the income-tax section of the bill which would raise a war revenue of $850,043,712. The actual rates of taxation under this amendment increased by gradual steps from 0.66 of 1 per cent on an income of $3,000 to 59.91 per cent on an income of $2,000,000.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 21 yeas to 58 nays.

I ask leave to incorporate that roll call in connection with my remarks without reading it to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—21.
Borah	Husting	McKellar	Townsend
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Trammell
Gore	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Vardaman
Gronna	Kenyon	Owen
Hardwick	Kirby	Poindexter
Hollis	La Follette	Reed
NAYS—58.
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Md.
Beckham	James	Page	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	Kellogg	Phelan	Smoot
Calder	Kendrick	Pittman	Sterling
Colt	King	Pomerene	Stone
Culberson	Knox	Ransdell	Sutherland
Curtis	Lewis	Robinson	Swanson
Dillingham	Lodge	Saulsbury	Thompson
Fletcher	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
France	Martin	Sheppard	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sherman	Weeks
Gerry	Nelson	Shields	Wolcott
Hale	New	Simmons
Harding	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
NOT VOTING—17.
Ashurst	Gallinger	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Chamberlain	Goff	Thomas	Williams
Cummins	Hughes	Tillman
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Underwood
Fernald	McLean	Walsh

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

On that vote pairs were announced as follows:

Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator FALL.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN with Senator GALLINGER.

Senator THOMAS with Senator MCLEAN.

Senator WALSH with Senator WARREN.

Senator TILLMAN with Senator GOFF.

Senator JOHNSON of South Dakota with Senator FERNALD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 7, the Senate voted upon an amendment which would increase the taxes on individual incomes. The surtax rates of this amendment upon incomes of $5,000 and not in excess of $10,000 were lower than the committee amendment and higher on the large incomes. The surtaxes began with a rate of one-half of 1 per cent on incomes in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $6,000, and increased by easy stages until upon incomes in excess of $1,000,000 the surtax would be at the rate of 50 per cent. The actual rates under this amendment ranged from one sixty-sixth of 1 per cent on an income of $3,000 to 59.78 per cent on an income of $2,000,000. That amendment would yield $162,000,000 more revenue than the committee bill, with the so-called Lenroot and Gerry amendment added.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 19 yeas to 55 nays.

I ask at this point to insert that roll call in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—19.
Borah	Husting	McNary	Sutherland
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Thompson
Gronna	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Trammell
Hardwick	Kenyon	Reed	Vardaman
Hollis	La Follette	Sheppard
NAYS—55.
Bankhead	Gerry	Nelson	Simmons
Beckham	Hale	New	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	Overman	Smith, Md.
Broussard	Hitchcock	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Calder	James	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Pittman	Stone
Curtis	Kendrick	Pomerene	Swanson
Dillingham	Knox	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fall	Lewis	Robinson	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Saulsbury	Watson
Fletcher	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
France	Martin	Sherman	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Shields
NOT VOTING—22.
Ashurst	Hughes	Newlands	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Underwood
Cummins	King	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Gallinger	Kirby	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
Goff	McKellar	Thomas
Gore	McLean	Tillman

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator WEEKS with Senator CUMMINS.

Senator MCLEAN with Senator GORE.

Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.

Senator PHELAN with Senator MCKELLAR.

Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator TOWNSEND.

Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.

Senator WALSH with Senator UNDERWOOD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 7 the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] offered an amendment to the individual income-tax section increasing these rates so as to raise $80,000,000 more revenue than the committee bill with the so-called Lenroot and Gerry amendments added.

That amendment was rejected by a vote of 26 yeas to 51 nays. I ask leave to insert in this connection that roll call, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—26.
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	McKellar	Shafroth
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Sheppard
Brady	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sutherland
Gronna	Kenyon	Norris	Trammell
Hardwick	King	Phelan	Vardaman
Hollis	Kirby	Poindexter
Husting	La Follette	Reed
NAYS—51.
Bankhead	Gerry	New	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Hale	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Harding	Page	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smoot
Colt	James	Pittman	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Stone
Curtis	Kellogg	Ransdell	Swanson
Dillingham	Knox	Robinson	Wadsworth
Fall	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman	Watson
Fletcher	McCumber	Shields	Williams
France	Martin	Simmons	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
NOT VOTING—19.
Ashurst	Gore	Owen	Townsend
Broussard	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Cummins	Kendrick	Thomas	Walsh
Gallinger	McLean	Thompson	Weeks
Goff	Newlands	Tillman

So Mr. HOLLIS's amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator WEEKS with Senator CUMMINS.

Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator TOWNSEND.

Senator MCLEAN with Senator GORE.

Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.

Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.

Senator WALSH with Senator UNDERWOOD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 7 the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] offered an amendment to levy an additional 10 per cent tax upon all incomes in excess of $25,000 per annum and providing $50 per month additional pay for soldiers so long as they are engaged in the war in a foreign country. The amendment would yield $194,000,000 additional revenue, whereas the additional expense for this fiscal year would be $155,000,000.

That amendment was defeated by the Senate in committee of the whole by a vote of 5 yeas to 75 nays. I am glad that there will be an opportunity in the Senate for Senators to reconsider their votes upon this amendment.

Mr. President, as that amendment is to be voted upon when the bill reaches the Senate, as it is reserved by the Senator from Georgia for a vote at that time, if there is a roll call at that time I ask leave to insert the roll call upon its final vote, together with the statement as to what is done with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If there should be no roll call allowed upon the amendment at the time I then ask leave to insert the roll call in Committee of the Whole had upon that amendment on September 7, together with the statement of what occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

YEAS—5.
Gronna	La Follette	Reed	Vardaman.
Hardwick
NAYS—75.
Bankhead	Harding	Martin	Shields
Beckham	Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Husting	New	Smith, Md.
Broussard	James	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smoot
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling
Fall	Kenyon	Phelan	Sutherland
Fernald	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Fletcher	Kirby	Poindexter	Thompson
France	Knox	Pomerene	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gerry	Lodge	Robinson	Warren
Hale	McCumber	Saulsbury	Watson
	McKellar	Shafroth	Williams
	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott
		Sherman

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst
Cummins
Gallinger
Goff

Gore
Hughes
Kendrick
McLean

Owen
Smith, Ariz.
Thomas
Tillman

Townsend
Underwood
Walsh
Weeks

So Mr. HARDWICK's amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator WALSH with Senator HUGHES.

Senator WEEKS with Senator CUMMINS.

Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.

Senator McLEAN with Senator GORE.

Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator TOWNSEND.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to say just a few words about that amendment, and I will be just as expeditious as I possibly can. Senators who voted for that amendment have been arraigned in this body as having done an unworthy thing. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who moved that amendment, has been criticized before the Senate as seeking to create dissatisfaction among the troops to be sent to foreign shores to prosecute this war.

Mr. President, can it be possible that the Senate of the United States is to permit any other country engaged in this war against Germany to pay more money to soldiers fighting in Europe than the United States pays to her soldiers fighting in Europe? If it can be called Hessianizing the American troops to add $50 a month to the pay of soldiers who leave their homes and leave those dependent upon them for subsistence in these trying times, when the cost of living is going beyond the reach of every family of moderate income, if that is to be denounced as disloyal to the country, then, Mr. President, I beg to say that there is a standard of loyalty in this country to which the great body of the people will never subscribe.

Mr. President, it was not considered Hessianizing the troops of this country to double their pay less than a year ago when it was not expected or suggested that our soldiers were to be sent abroad. Now that they are being taken away from their families, with the cost of subsistence for those families mounting every day, now that they are ordered to a foreign country, strange to them in language and in surroundings, when there is proposed an additional pay for those soldiers in an amount that will relieve their minds of anxiety as to their families, that will make them feel that the loved ones at home under this extra pay will be reasonably taken care of, is it to be taken as a measure of wishing to create dissension and disloyalty in this country and dissension and dissatisfaction among the troops to vote for and to sustain such an amendment?

Sir, it ought to be received as an evidence of a desire to put those troops into the best fighting spirit, not solely because of the advantage which the increase in pay would be to them individually but because of what it will enable them to do for their families at home. They are the husbands of wives, they are the sons of fathers and mothers many of whom are hard pressed to live. They receive $33 as the rate now stands. They would receive $50 more under this proposed amendment. That would bring their pay about to the level of what policemen and firemen receive in first-class cities.

Canada pays her troops $33 a month for foreign service, just as we pay $33 per month for service abroad; and on top of that Canada gives from $20 to $60, known in her law as separation allowances, for every family.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Wait just a moment. It begins at $20, ranging up, taking corporals and sergeants and lieutenants and captains and majors and lieutenant colonels, and when it reaches lieutenant colonels the separate family allowance is $60 in addition to the regular pay. Shame upon this country! Shame upon anybody who votes against giving as much to the men whom we are to send to wallow in the mire and blood of the trenches in a foreign country as Canada gives to her troops in that same service!

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield in just a moment. Mr. President, what makes an effective army? Freeing them from every consideration except getting at the enemy, relieving their minds of any apprehension regarding the old folks, their wives, or their little ones at home.

In God's name, is a man to be arraigned here as a traitor who would put the troops of this great country at least in something approaching as good a position as the troops of Canada? Read, Senators, the account of the battles in Europe. Who are the men who carry the flag farthest into the enemy's lines? Who are the men who are free to forget everything except that for which they are fighting? The Canadian troops. The report of every battle gives you that record. Will you not be willing to do as much for our troops?

Will it put a 10 per cent additional charge upon small incomes? No, no; this additional tax is to be raised from incomes in excess of $25,000, and we just take the additional amount of 10 per cent out of those incomes. When men with an income of $25,000, and from that up to those with incomes of from one to ten million dollars, can not give out of such incomes 10 per cent to provide this tax to put our soldiers not just on a par with Canada, but on a little better basis than Canada, Mr. President, I can not understand it. I can not understand the spirit which prevailed in the Senate when an amendment of that kind was offered here and is derided and denounced as disloyal. It seems to me that every Senator should have risen in his place and that this amendment should have been adopted by the unanimous vote of this body.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Georgia. I yield to him.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator the fact that I have discovered since the debate the other day that the State of Minnesota pays a bounty of something over $3 a day in order to secure enlistment of members of the National Guard at the present moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have not done with Canada. Providing a separate allowance of from $20 to $60 per month is not all that Canada has done for her soldiers. In addition to that there is provided a life insurance on which the premiums are not taken out of the soldier's pay, as is proposed in this country, where fortunes are considered more precious than human life, but in Canada they provide for their enlisted men a life insurance on which the premiums are paid by the municipalities. They do not stop there. There is a Canadian Patriotic Fund.

This fund was incorporated in August, 1914, to render financial assistance to dependent relatives of men in active service. It is intended that this assistance shall be given to those whose income from all sources, including the assigned pay and the separate allowance provided by law, is insufficient to enable the family to live according to a standard which would provide a reasonable amount of comfort. It is supported by voluntary contributions, appropriations by some of the Provinces and grants from cities, counties, and other political subdivisions. Take the case of a Canadian private with a wife and three children; that family will receive as an assignment of a portion of the father's pay $15, from the separate allowance fund $20, and from the Canadian patriotic fund $25—a total of $65.

Canada did not wait to be driven to make this provision. It adopted it right at the beginning of the war. That country recognized from the start its obligation to its soldiers and their dependents and it patriotically made the most liberal provision for them ever written into the law of any country. It contributed in no small degree to stimulate a popular response to the call for men. The men who were responsible for that legislation in Canada were not reviled as disloyal nor accused of attempting to make the war unpopular.

Mr. President, I have not said it here, but it has been said in the course of this debate, that this war is unpopular in this country. If this great, rich country, with its incomes and war profits exceeding any country on earth is to deal penuriously, grudgingly, stingily by its soldiers, if when an amendment is offered in the interest of our soldiers who are to be sent abroad, such as that offered by the Senator from Georgia, we are to have on the floors of Congress men rise and denounce it as disloyal, as they have denounced everything attempted throughout the consideration of this bill that sought to impose a just tax upon wealth then I assert that if the war is unpopular you are aiding directly to make it more unpopular by that course.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to remind the Senator that when the law was passed appropriating $50 a month for the support of the dependent families of the soldiers serving on the border last summer there was little or no protest against it. There might have been a few Senators who opposed it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Ah, Mr. President—

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I want to say that when the measure was proposed some months ago doubling the pay of the private soldier there was little or no protest, but the difference between that question and the one before the Senate now is this: The soldier was to be paid out of money taken from the general fund, whereas he is to be paid $50 per month under the pending proposition, which money is to be derived from taxes levied upon the incomes of the rich. The people in this country with incomes of $25,000 per year are to be taxed to give this pittance to the man who offers his life for the flag in a foreign land. That is the vital difference and may probably account for the furious and unwarranted assault made by distinguished Senators upon those of us who favored the proposition a day or two ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. And, Mr. President, there is one other difference. Those propositions came before the election and just before the election, and that sometimes makes a difference to Senators and to Members of the other House when they come to a vote. I regret to say that, but every man in his place here knows that that is true.

I fear the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] will think I am not keeping my word with him. I leave that matter for the present, just closing with this summary of it. Why is it regarded unpatriotic to offer an amendment to vote extra pay to the soldiers who go abroad?

I have lying on my desk an account of four suicides which have already occurred in Pershing's army since we began to land our men on the other side. I do not know, and the dispatches do not disclose, what caused those suicides, but, oh, Mr. President, with new surroundings, in a strange land, cut off from communication with everybody but their immediate comrades, the thoughts of these men turn to home; they think about the loved ones gathered around the family board and about the fire-side in the evening, and the worry that comes at the end of the month in these times when they must pay the bills. Will you not do at least this much to relieve the minds of those soldier boys, of whom we are only permitted to know, that they are "Somewhere in France"?

Will you not help them to take a little better care of themselves over there by making this small addition to their pay?

Will it not enable them to allot to their dependent loved ones here who are deprived of their services a part of this extra pay to meet the excessive cost of living which war brings to their families?

Is not that a desirable provision to make for those boys—those husbands, fathers, sons 4,000 miles from home?

Will it not take a burden, an anxiety, off their minds to know that they can assign a part of that $50 every month to their families?

Is it not an exhibition of a greater regard for the surplus incomes of the overrich than for the soldiers of our country wallowing in the mire and blood of the trenches to vote against an amendment which would grant those soldiers this extra $50 a month.

Now, Mr. President, I hope that I shall have a better roll call to insert in the RECORD upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] when the roll is called in the Senate of the United States than we had in Committee of the Whole. I prefer to insert that roll call rather than the one that was had. I have disposed of the amendments relating to incomes. I want to say just a word to complete the record about the amendments offered here and voted upon as to war profits.

Upon war profits, Mr. President, September 1 the Senate voted upon an amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], to levy a tax of 73 per cent upon war profits. Under this amendment it was estimated there would be derived by this war-profits tax on the basis of $4,100,000,000 of war profits, revenue to the amount of $2,993,000,000, and on the basis of $3,000,000,000 of war profits revenue to the amount of $2,190,000,000. This amendment was defeated by a vote of 17 yeas to 62 nays. I ask leave to insert in this connection that roll call without reading it, together with the brief statement following the roll call as to the disposition of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—17.

Ashurst	Hollis	Kenyon	Thompson
Borah	Husting	Kirby	Vardaman
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	La Follette
Gore	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary
Gronna	Jones, Wash.	Norris

NAYS—62.

Bankhead	Hale	New	Shields
Beckham	Harding	Newlands	Simmons
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Broussard	James	Owen	Smith, Md.
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Penrose	Smoot
Colt	Kendrick	Phelan	Sterling
Culberson	King	Pittman	Stone
Curtis	Knox	Polindexter	Townsend
Dillingham	Lewis	Pomerene	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Robinson	Watson
Fletcher	McKellar	Saulsbury	Weeks
France	Martin	Shafroth	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sheppard
Gerry	Sherman	Sherman

NOT VOTING—17.

Cummins	McLean	Swanson	Warren
Gallinger	Reed	Thomas	Wolcott
Goff	Smith, Ariz.	Tillman
Hardwick	Smith, Mich.	Trammell
Hughes	Sutherland	Walsh

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of California to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator SMITH of Michigan with Senator REED.
Senator WALSH with Senator WARREN.
Senator MCLEAN with Senator SWANSON.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.
Senator SUTHERLAND with Senator HARDWICK.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 3 the Senate voted upon my amendment to levy a tax of 70 per cent on war profits. Under that amendment, on the basis of $4,100,000,000 of war profits, the revenue would amount to $2,870,000,000, or, on the basis of $3,000,000,000 of war profits, revenue to the amount of $2,100,000,000.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 20 yeas to 55 nays. The vote will be found on page 6542 of the RECORD, and at this point I ask leave to insert without reading that roll call, in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—20.

Ashurst	Hollis	Kenyon	McNary
Borah	Husting	King	Norris
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Kirby	Thompson
Gore	Johnson, S. Dak.	La Follette	Trammell
Gronna	Jones, Wash.	McKellar	Vardaman

NAYS—55.

Bankhead	Hale	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	Page	Smith, Md.
Broussard	James	Penrose	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Smoot
Colt	Kendrick	Polindexter	Sterling
Culberson	Knox	Pomerene	Stone
Curtis	Lewis	Ransdell	Underwood
Dillingham	Lodge	Robinson	Wadsworth
Fall	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Fernald	Martin	Shafroth	Watson
Fletcher	Myers	Sheppard	Weeks
France	New	Sherman	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Newlands	Shields	Wolcott
Gerry	Overman	Simmons

NOT VOTING—21.

Beckham	Hitchcock	Reed	Tillman
Calder	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Smith, S. C.	Walsh
Gallinger	McLean	Sutherland
Goff	Nelson	Swanson
Hardwick	Phelan	Thomas

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator CALDER with Senator HARDWICK.
Senator MCLEAN with Senator SWANSON.
Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
Senator NELSON with Senator SMITH of South Carolina.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.
Senator SUTHERLAND with Senator BECKHAM.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Immediately I offered an amendment to fix the tax rate on war profits at 65 per cent. On the basis of $4,100,000,000 of taxable war profits the revenue would amount to $2,665,000,000, or $1,379,000,000 more than would be raised by the committee war-profits rates, and on the basis of $3,000,000,000 of taxable war profits it would yield revenue to the amount of $1,950,000,000, or $664,000,000 over the amount that would be raised under the rates of the committee provision.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 17 yeas to 54 nays.

And at this point I ask to incorporate that roll call, without reading it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—17.

Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	La Follette	Trammell
Gronna	Jones, Wash.	McKellar	Vardaman
Hollis	Kenyon	McNary
Husting	King	Norris
Johnson, Cal.	Kirby	Thompson

NAYS—54.

Bankhead	Harding	Owen	Shields
Brandegee	James	Page	Simmons
Broussard	Kellogg	Penrose	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Pittman	Smoot
Colt	Knox	Polindexter	Sterling
Curtis	Lewis	Pomerene	Stone
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Underwood
Fall	McCumber	Robinson	Warren
Fernald	Martin	Saulsbury	Watson
Fletcher	Myers	Shafroth	Weeks
France	Nelson	Sheppard	Williams
Frelinghuysen	New	Sherman	Wolcott
Gerry	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Hale	Overman	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—25.

Ashurst	Goff	Phelan	Tillman
Beckham	Gore	Reed	Townsend
Brady	Hardwick	Smith, Ariz.	Wadsworth
Calder	Hitchcock	Smith, S. C.	Walsh
Culberson	Hughes	Sutherland
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Swanson
Gallinger	McLean	Thomas

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator CALDER with Senator HARDWICK.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
Senator WADSWORTH with Senator GORE.
Senator MCLEAN with Senator SWANSON.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to object, but I was just wondering the purpose of the Senator in having these roll calls printed in his speech.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Because I wish to collect right here in one connected statement the record that has been made by the United States Senate in the consideration of this bill. I think it will make wholesome and interesting reading for the people of this country.

Mr. KENYON. It is done for the benefit of the voters?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; I suppose that might be taken into consideration.

September 4 the Senate voted upon my amendment to levy a tax of 60 per cent on war profits. Under that amendment, on the basis of $4,100,000,000 war profits, the revenue would amount to $2,460,000,000, or $1,174,000,000 more than would be raised under the committee provision. On the basis of $3,000,000,000 of war profits the revenue would amount to $1,800,000,000, or $514,000,000 more than would be raised by the war-profit taxes of the committee bill.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 18 yeas to 50 nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—18.

Borah	Johnson, Cal.	La Follette	Thompson
Brady	Jones, Wash.	McKellar	Trammell
Gronna	Kenyon	McNary	Vardaman
Hollis	King	Myers
Husting	Kirby	Norris

NAYS—50.

Bankhead	Hale	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	Page	Smith, Md.
Broussard	James	Penrose	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Smoot
Colt	Kellogg	Poindexter	Sterling
Curtis	Kendrick	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Knox	Ransdell	Warren
Fall	Lewis	Saulsbury	Watson
Fernald	Lodge	Shafroth	Weeks
Fletcher	McCumber	Sheppard	Williams
France	Martin	Sherman	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Shields
Gerry	New	Simmons

NOT VOTING—28.

Ashurst	Gore	Owen	Sutherland
Beckham	Hardwick	Phelan	Swanson
Calder	Hitchcock	Reed	Thomas
Culberson	Hughes	Robinson	Tillman
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Ariz.	Townsend
Gallinger	McLean	Smith, S. C.	Underwood
Goff	Newlands	Stone	Walsh

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.
Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
Senator BECKHAM with Senator GORE.
Senator CALDER with Senator HARDWICK.
Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator WALSH.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
Senator MCLEAN with Senator SWANSON.
Senator SUTHERLAND with Senator SMITH of South Carolina.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 4 the Senate voted upon the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to levy a tax of 50 per cent on war profits. On the basis of $4,100,000,000 of taxable war profits the revenue yielded would amount to $2,050,000,000, or $784,000,000 more than would be raised under the committee rates, and on the basis of $3,000,000,000 of taxable war profits would amount to the sum of $1,500,000,000, or $214,000,000 more than would be raised under the committee provision.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 18 yeas to 52 nays.

I ask leave at this point to incorporate that roll call in my remarks, together with the statement of the Presiding Officer as to the disposition of the amendment upon that vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—18.

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	King	Myers
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Kirby	Norris
Gronna	Jones, Wash.	La Follette	Thompson
Hollis	Kendrick	McKellar
Husting	Kenyon	McNary

NAYS—52.

Bankhead	Harding	Page	Smith, Ga.
Borah	James	Penrose	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Knox	Poindexter	Smoot
Colt	Lewis	Pomerene	Sterling
Curtis	Lodge	Ransdell	Stone
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Trammell
Fernald	Martin	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Nelson	Shafroth	Warren
France	New	Sheppard	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Newlands	Sherman	Weeks
Gerry	Overman	Shields	Williams
Hale	Owen	Simmons	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—26.

Beckham	Goff	Phelan	Tillman
Brady	Gore	Reed	Townsend
Calder	Hardwick	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Culberson	Hitchcock	Smith, S. C.	Vardaman
Cummins	Hughes	Sutherland	Walsh
Fall	Kellogg	Swanson
Gallinger	McLean	Thomas

So the amendment of Mr. HOLLIS to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator CALDER with Senator HARDWICK.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
Senator SMITH of Arizona with Senator WALSH.
Senator MCLEAN with Senator SWANSON.
Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
Senator SUTHERLAND with Senator SMITH of South Carolina.
Senator BECKHAM with Senator GORE.
Senator BRADY with Senator VARDAMAN.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. September 5 the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] offered an amendment to increase the graduated war-profit tax proposed by the committee and which begins as low as a tax of 12 per cent and increases until in exceptional cases the rate of 60 per cent applies. The amendment would increase the committee rates levied at the several brackets, beginning with the tax of 20 per cent upon the war profits not in excess of 15 per cent, and increasing gradually until the war profits exceeded 300 per cent of the prewar profits, when the rate would be 70 per cent. This amendment was estimated to yield $1,681,000,000 of revenue, or $305,000,000 more than would be raised under the rates of the committee provision.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 24 yeas to 55 nays.

I ask to have that roll call incorporated in my remarks without reading, together with the statement of the Presiding Officer as to the disposition of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

YEAS—24.

Ashurst	Hollis	King	Norris
Beckham	Husting	Kirby	Phelan
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	La Follette	Sheppard
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Thompson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Trammell
Gallinger	Kenyon	Myers	Vardaman

NAYS—55.

Brandegee	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Calder	James	Pittman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Pomerene	Stone
Curtis	Knox	Ransdell	Sutherland
Dillingham	Lewis	Robinson	Swanson
Fall	Lodge	Saulsbury	Underwood
Fernald	McCumber	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Martin	Sherman	Warren
France	Nelson	Shields	Watson
Frelinghuysen	New	Simmons	Weeks
Gerry	Newlands	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Hale	Overman	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Harding	Page	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—17.

Bankhead	Gore	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Hardwick	Reed	Walsh
Cummins	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.
Gallinger	Kendrick	Thomas
Goff	McLean	Tillman

So Mr. HOLLIS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator MCLEAN with Senator HARDWICK.
Senator GALLINGER with Senator SMITH of Arizona.
Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
Senator HUGHES with Senator GORE.
Senator OWEN with Senator KENDRICK.
Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.

Mr. WEEKS. May I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he have what he has prepared inserted in the RECORD. I ask that that be done, because several Senators wish to explain amendments before 4 o'clock. I do not, of course, want to interfere with the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, exactly the same statement which I make here with respect to the other amendments upon war profits I will be very glad to do it and save the time.

September 5 the Senate voted on my amendment to increase the war-profits tax by increasing the rates of taxation at each of the brackets of the bill except the lowest. The amendment would tax war profits at the following rates:

War profits not in excess of 15 per cent of the deduction allowed as prewar profits, 12 per cent.

In excess of 15 per cent but not in excess of 25 per cent of such deduction, 20 per cent.

In excess of 25 per cent but not in excess of 50 per cent of such deduction, 25 per cent.

In excess of 50 per cent but not in excess of 75 per cent of such deduction, 30 per cent.

In excess of 75 per cent but not in excess of 100 per cent of such deduction, 35 per cent.

In excess of 100 per cent but not in excess of 150 per cent of such deduction, 40 per cent.

In excess of 150 per cent but not in excess of 200 per cent of such deduction, 45 per cent.

In excess of 200 per cent and not in excess of 250 per cent of such deduction, 55 per cent.

In excess of 250 per cent but not in excess of 300 per cent of such deduction, 65 per cent.

In excess of 300 per cent of such deduction, 75 per cent.

That amendment was estimated to yield revenue to the amount of $1,505,830,000, or $219,800,000 more than would be raised under the war-profit taxes of the committee bill.

It was defeated by a vote of 23 years to 56 nays.

YEAS—23.

Ashurst	Husting	Kirby	Phelan
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	La Follette	Sheppard
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Thompson
Brady	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Trammell
Gronna	Kenyon	Myers	Vardaman
Hollis	King	Norris

NAYS—56.

Bankhead	Hale	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Brandeggee	Harding	Page	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smoot
Calder	James	Poinexter	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Stone
Colt	Kellogg	Ransdell	Sutherland
Curtis	Knox	Robinson	Swanson
Dillingham	Lewis	Saulsbury	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Sherman	Warren
Fletcher	Martin	Shields	Watson
France	Nelson	Simmons	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	New	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Gerry	Newlands	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—17.

Culberson	Hardwick	Pittman	Townsend
Cummins	Hughes	Reed	Walsh
Gallinger	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.
Goff	McLean	Thompson
Gore	Owen	Tillman

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

On this vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator McLEAN with Senator HARDWICK.
 Senator OWEN with Senator KENDRICK.
 Senator CULBERSON with Senator WALSH.
 Senator GALLINGER with Senator THOMAS.
 Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
 Senator HUGHES with Senator GORE.

The following announcement was also made:

Mr. STONE. Several days ago I was handed a dispatch from my colleague [Mr. REED], which I think I ought to put in the RECORD:

"I want my pair to be employed in the manner most favorable to high taxation of war profits and to low burdens upon small incomes. At the same time I do not want to vote for any proposition that is so extreme as to be ridiculous."

September 5 the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] offered an amendment to increase the war-profits tax when such tax is more than 200 per cent in excess of the deduction allowed by the majority. The amendment would increase the 45 per cent, 50 per cent, and 60 per cent rates of the committee bill to 50 per cent, 60 per cent, and 70 per cent, respectively.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 25 years to 55 nays.

YEAS—25.

Ashurst	Husting	La Follette	Sheppard
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	McKellar	Thompson
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Trammell
Brady	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Vardaman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Norris
Gronna	King	Phelan
Hollis	Kirby	Shafroth

NAYS—55.

Bankhead	Dillingham	Harding	Lodge
Brandeggee	Fall	Hitchcock	McCumber
Broussard	Fernald	James	Martin
Calder	France	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson
Chamberlain	Frelinghuysen	Kellogg	New
Colt	Gerry	Knox	Newlands
Curtis	Hale	Lewis	Overman

Page	Saulsbury	Smith, S. C.	Wadsworth
Penrose	Sherman	Smoot	Warren
Pittman	Shields	Sterling	Watson
Poinexter	Simmons	Stone	Weeks
Pomerene	Smith, Ga.	Sutherland	Williams
Ransdell	Smith, Md.	Swanson	Wolcott
Robinson	Smith, Mich.	Underwood

NOT VOTING—16.

Culberson	Gore	McLean	Thomas
Cummins	Hardwick	Owen	Tillman
Gallinger	Hughes	Reed	Townsend
Goff	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So Mr. SHAFROTH'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator McLEAN with Senator HARDWICK.
 Senator GALLINGER with Senator SMITH of Arizona.
 Senator CULBERSON with Senator WALSH.
 Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
 Senator KENDRICK with Senator THOMAS.
 Senator HUGHES with Senator GORE.

September 5 the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] offered an amendment to increase the tax on war profits that fall within the two highest brackets from 50 per cent and 60 per cent to 60 per cent and 70 per cent, respectively. This amendment would reach war profits 250 per cent in excess of the deduction allowed for the prewar period.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 28 yeas to 52 nays.

YEAS—28.

Ashurst	Gronna	King	Overman
Beckham	Hollis	Kirby	Phelan
Borah	Husting	La Follette	Shafroth
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	McKellar	Sheppard
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Trammell
Fletcher	Kenyon	Norris	Vardaman

NAYS—52.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Brandeggee	James	Pittman	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Poinexter	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Pomerene	Stone
Curtis	Knox	Ransdell	Sutherland
Dillingham	Lewis	Robinson	Swanson
Fall	Lodge	Saulsbury	Underwood
Fernald	McCumber	Sherman	Wadsworth
France	Martin	Shields	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Simmons	Watson
Gerry	New	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Hale	Newlands	Smith, Md.	Williams
Harding	Page	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—16.

Culberson	Gore	McLean	Thomas
Cummins	Hardwick	Owen	Tillman
Gallinger	Hughes	Reed	Townsend
Goff	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of California to the committee amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator McLEAN with Senator HARDWICK.
 Senator CULBERSON with Senator WALSH.
 Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
 Senator HUGHES with Senator GORE.
 Senator GALLINGER with Senator SMITH of Arizona.
 Senator KENDRICK with Senator THOMAS.

September 5 the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] offered an amendment to increase the tax on war profits over 300 per cent in excess of the deduction for the prewar period from 60 per cent to 70 per cent.

That amendment was defeated by a vote of 29 yeas to 51 nays.

YEAS—29.

Ashurst	Hollis	La Follette	Sheppard
Beckham	Husting	McKellar	Sutherland
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Thompson
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Trammell
Broussard	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Overman
Fletcher	King	Phelan
Gronna	Kirby	Shafroth

NAYS—51.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Brandeggee	James	Pittman	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Poinexter	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Pomerene	Stone
Curtis	Knox	Ransdell	Swanson
Dillingham	Lewis	Robinson	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Sherman	Warren
France	Martin	Shields	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Simmons	Weeks
Gerry	New	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Hale	Newlands	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Harding	Page	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—16.

Culberson	Gore	McLean	Thomas
Cummins	Hardwick	Owen	Tillman
Gallinger	Hughes	Reed	Townsend
Goff	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of California to the committee amendment was rejected.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:
 Senator McLEAN with Senator HARDWICK.
 Senator CULBERSON with Senator WALSH.
 Senator TOWNSEND with Senator REED.
 Senator HUGHES with Senator GORE.
 Senator GALLINGER with Senator SMITH of Arizona.
 Senator KENDRICK with Senator THOMAS.

August 18 the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] moved to strike from the bill the section imposing a tax upon parcel-post packages which carry postage of 25 cents or more. The effect of that amendment would be to save $2,000,000 to the users of the parcel post.

The Senate refused to strike this from the bill, and retained the tax upon parcel-post packages, by the following vote:

YEAS—28.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Simmons
Brandeggee	Knox	Page	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Lodge	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Dillingham	McCumber	Pomerene	Smoot
Gerry	Martin	Ransdell	Swanson
Hale	Myers	Saulsbury	Thompson
Harding	Nelson	Sherman	Underwood

NAYS—27.

Beckham	Gronna	Kirby	Sheppard
Borah	Hardwick	La Follette	Shields
Brady	Husting	McKellar	Sterling
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	Polandexter	Vardaman
Gore	Kenyon	Reed

NOT VOTING—41.

Bankhead	Hitchcock	Owen	Townsend
Caldor	Hollis	Penrose	Wadsworth
Colt	Hughes	Phelan	Walsh
Culbertson	James	Robinson	Warren
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Shafroth	Watson
Fall	Kellogg	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Fernald	King	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Fletcher	Lewis	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
France	McLean	Stone
Gallinger	Newlands	Thomas
Goff	Overman	Tillman

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

On that vote the following pairs were announced:

Senator KNOX with Senator CHAMBERLAIN.
 Senator WADSWORTH with Senator THOMAS.
 Senator WARREN with Senator OVERMAN.
 Senator SHAFROTH with Senator COLT.
 Senator TOWNSEND with Senator ROBINSON.
 Senator WEEKS with Senator JAMES.
 Senator FRANCE with Senator WALSH.
 Senator WATSON with Senator WOLCOTT.
 Senator FLETCHER with Senator GALLINGER.
 Senator McLEAN with Senator SMITH of Arizona.
 Senator FALL with Senator HUGHES.
 Senator FERNALD with Senator JOHNSON of South Dakota.
 Senator GOFF with Senator TILLMAN.
 Senator PENROSE with Senator WILLIAMS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he has included in his list the vote of September 5 on the committee amendment as amended instead of the House provision?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I have not, Mr. President, because there is a good reason for not doing so. Every one of these amendments incorporated that amendment, and there was no sense in repeating the vote upon that amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. There are some of us who think there is a good reason for printing that vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas in his own time may take the floor and insert that, but not in mine.

Mr. CURTIS. I will take occasion to do it in my own time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am in great haste to get along with what I have to say, but I will say this in conclusion. I will say in comment upon the remarks of the Senator from Kansas that the only increases made by the Senate by unanimous vote have been upon exceedingly high incomes, where the increases, so far as the House amendments were concerned, were smaller than the increases proposed here by the amendments which I have offered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it has several times been charged in the course of the debate on this bill that those Senators who favor placing a considerable burden of taxation upon war profits and excess incomes to meet the expenses of this war, are inspired to such action by the sinister purpose of cooling the war ardor of the people, of making the war unpopular, and forcing the administration to make peace. The chairman of the Finance Committee, in an impassioned speech, made the charge here several days ago, and more recently another member of the committee, the Senator from North Dakota, repeated it.

The Senator from North Dakota, in a somewhat elaborate speech, gave to the chairman of the Finance Committee what I doubt not both regard as most able and efficient support in the latter's effort to sustain the charge. To the chairman seems to have been assigned the duty of discharging the wave of poisonous gas upon us of the minority, while the agile Senator from North Dakota was expected to follow up the attack, consolidate the positions gained, bring in the prisoners, and possibly count the dead. If it should turn out that no positions were gained, no prisoners taken, and that there were no dead to count, but that the wave of poisoned and envenomed gas has returned upon those who launched it, to their own discomfiture or destruction, it will be only one more instance of that retributive justice which has so often overtaken gentlemen who have unwisely launched an ill-considered attack in the hope of concealing the weakness of their own position.

Since the speech of the Senator from North Dakota of September 6 is before me, I shall say what I have to say upon this point in reply to that speech, though my remarks will be equally a reply to both the Senators and to all and every speech of that character.

The Senator from North Dakota begins his speech with a presentation of a table attempting to show from a supposititious case of extreme hardship how heavily the war-profits tax on the income of corporations bears upon the poor, defenseless stockholders. We may fairly assume that the case which the Senator supposes in his speech is the most extreme case that his imagination can conceive, for he does not pretend that it is a real case. It simply shows the extreme of horrible hardship which will fall upon the possessor of a $30,000 income under this tax imposed by the committee. Without repeating the table which will be found in the RECORD of the date of September 7, I think I can briefly summarize the facts the Senator assumes.

He assumes a corporation with $100,000 invested capital, net income for the taxable year $100,000, excess profits above the 10 per cent allowed before the war-profits tax attaches $90,000. The unfortunate individual who is ground into the dust under this tax the Senator supposes to be the owner of 30 per cent of the capital stock of this corporation. In his table the Senator then figures out the percentage of the war tax applying to this $90,000 income and reaches the conclusion that it would amount to $46,715. From this he deducts a flat corporation tax of 6 per cent, which leaves for distribution to stockholders $50,088. He then taxes out $10,000 for reserve—no good corporation manager ever forgets to take out reserve—which leaves as a balance for distribution $40,088, of which the unfortunate stockholder owning 30 per cent of the stock only receives for his $30,000 investment $12,026. The Senator then takes out the income tax of the stockholder, all State and municipal taxes, as nearly as he can guess at these, and reaches the conclusion that this poor, unfortunate investor, because of the enormous and burdensome and cruel taxes that it is proposed to place on him, will receive for the taxable year $10,690, net, over and above all taxes of every description, State and national, upon an investment of $30,000.

Now, Mr. President, without saying anything about the normal profits of 10 per cent which the Senator deducted before reaching the war profits, one-third of which must, of course, go to this supposed stockholder, and without dwelling upon the fact that the profits which this stockholder has received are war profits, I submit to the Senate whether allowing a return of 33½ per cent to the stockholder of this corporation upon his investment is such a hardship that it is calculated to cool the ardor of the stockholder for a continuation of the war. But the Senator says it will. I quote his exact words:

Mr. President, I hate to see a bill the purpose of which is to carry this Government through the bewildering difficulties which naturally and inevitably beset a wholly unprepared nation when suddenly thrown into a great world-wide conflict used as a vehicle to cripple or paralyze its efforts. When the Nation is athirst I hate to see the fountain from which alone that thirst can be slaked poisoned at the source.

Think of a man whose thirst for war profits has to be quenched with only 33½ per cent on his investment! Again, the Senator says:

It is due to those boys who have gone to the front in defense of national rights and honor that they shall have back of them at all times an enthusiastic war spirit and sentiment. That spirit and sentiment are just as essential to the successful termination of this war as are guns and ammunition. I want, therefore, a revenue bill that, while it supplies every war need of the country, will at the same time create and maintain a sentiment for aggressive warfare, a popularity to insure vigorous prosecution of the war, and a courage to meet its exactions.

Behold a man upon whom the exactions of war falls so heavily that he receives only 33½ per cent upon his investment even though he remains snugly and safely at home. "Sentiment for aggressive warfare" can not, it seems, be maintained among investors unless they get more than 33½ per cent on their investment as a result of the war. Continuing the Senator says:

I know human nature well enough and I am sufficiently acquainted with the history of the world to understand that no matter how patriotic a people may be, you can impose on them such onerous burdens as will dampen their ardor and destroy their war spirit.

There you have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. REED. It would be interesting now at this point to compare the logic that the Senator from Wisconsin has just referred to with the argument which was made on the floor of the Senate the other day—that an attempt to raise the wages of the men in the trenches is an insult to their patriotism, and that to make such a proposition is a species of high treason.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. It is all well enough to add to the profits of wealth as a result of war or to leave the possessors of wealth profits so that they can have 33½ per cent dividends upon their investment; but if you are going to provide a meager, stingy $50 a month to the men who bare their breasts to all the horrors of modern warfare, who are subjected to the foul life that must be led in the trenches—vermin, rats, sleepless nights, and days without rest—then you must be careful not to touch these war profits of more than 33½ per cent profit or the war will fail, patriotism will lag. In God's name, who in the United States Senate is furnishing the best support to this war—those who would impose a tax upon incomes and war profits even less than other countries impose upon wealth, who would provide for our soldiers but a trifle more than the little country of Canada provides, or the men who denounce such action as disloyalty and as an effort to curtail and diminish support among the people for this war?

The ardor and war spirit of wealth and the wealthy will be destroyed if you reduce their profits down to a beggerly 33½ per cent on their investments. That is too "onerous a burden," to quote the language of the Senator from North Dakota, for their patriotism to bear.

But, Mr. President, underlying these words of the Senator from North Dakota, and of the chairman of the Finance Committee, and of every man who has given utterance to such sentiments in this debate, is the most pregnant admission that has been made in this entire discussion. That admission is this: That it is the wealth of this country that can stop this war, and that it will stop it, unless it is permitted to make exorbitant profits out of it. That is the plain, grisly fact that the argument of the Senator from North Dakota uncovers and lays bare to the view of the Senate and of the country and, I may say, to the world, also. The people—the 100,000,000 people of the country—do not count. The 2,000,000 or 5,000,000 boys who are going to be put into the trenches do not count. Their parents, their families, their dependents, do not count. Of the 2,000,000 young men you are drafting for trench service under the first draft act, at least 80 per cent of them do not want to go, so far as published reports of exemption claims indicate their attitude.

It is fair to assume that a much larger percentage of their parents and members of their families do not want them to go. But that is not the thing that is going to stop the war, according to the arguments of the Senator from North Dakota. These young men are tied hand and foot. They are bound by the unbreakable chains of the draft law. They need no longer to be reckoned with; it seems to make but little difference to the United States Senate what you do as to them. Their wishes are immaterial according to the logic of the Senator, but it is the wealth and the wealthy that must not be offended by what we may do here. They must not be made to feel the pinch of a little taxation or, forsooth, we will, to quote the language that has been used in this debate, "dampen their ardor and destroy their war spirit."

Mr. President, upon this proposition I fundamentally disagree with Senators who have taken that attitude. I tell them one and all that by their refusal to justly tax war profits and excessive incomes they are destroying the war spirit among the hundred million people of this country which is absolutely necessary if we are to acquit ourselves even creditably in this great war. Mr. President, the two or three hundred thousand people in this country—for there are no more—who are the possessors of large incomes, and the few thousand corporations who are making these war profits, are not the people of this country. Why, Mr. President, there is a strange misunderstanding on the part of the Senator as to who are the people of this country. The Senator says that high taxes on large incomes and high taxes on war profits will "create dissatisfaction." Where?

He says "among the people"; that will "lessen their ardor"—and I quote his words—"among the people"; that it will "lessen their ardor for the conflict which is before them, and thereby cripple and hinder our war efforts." Who does the Senator think are the people of this country? Is it the 2 per cent, owners of two-thirds of the wealth, or is it the 98 per cent of the population who have to divide among themselves the meager balance of this country's wealth, which, apportioned among them per capita, is a little over $800 apiece? Will the latter be dissatisfied because the swollen and unnecessary incomes of the former are taxed to pay a little of the frightful cost of this war? Does the word which you are getting from the country indicate that the people—the 98 per cent, the people upon whom this Nation must depend in this and every other crisis—are dissatisfied with the suggestion that excessive incomes and war profits should pay a high rate of taxation? No, Mr. President; the Senator may think that the people of this country are composed of the fortunate possessors of large incomes and the happy recipients of the bloody profits of this war; he may think that the success of this war depends upon the ardor with which these profiteering patriots support it.

I know not what associations or habits of thought incline him to that opinion, but I declare, Mr. President, in that view he is mistaken; and all persons who entertain like views are mistaken. And, Mr. President, if that view is written by this bill into the law of this country, by that very act you are liable to create, if it does not already exist in the public mind, the belief that the war is a profiteering enterprise. The sound of military preparations may continue to fill the land, drums may beat, soldiers march, patriotic organizations financed by war profits may acclaim the glory of a war for democracy, but in every humble home in this country where manhood counts more than dollars, where patriotism is not associated with profits, will have entered the conviction, and rightfully so, that a monstrous injustice has been done to the mass of the people. With the war spirit tainted with mercenary interests, in those homes you will render the prosecution of this war more and more difficult.

No man can justify the refusal of the Senate to impose the highest rate of taxation on war profits and incomes which has been demanded here. The Senators who have attempted to justify that course in this body have failed. The country knows that they have failed. They have failed for no lack of ability in themselves, but for the lack of justice in their cause. A popular war could hardly survive the spirit of resentment the injustice of this bill will arouse; and if it be a fact that this is already an unpopular war, then such a course will but intensify that feeling.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he will kindly yield to me while I make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record the final vote on the adoption of the Senate committee excess-profits tax amendment as amended instead of the House provision, as found on pages 6623 and 6624 of the Record of September 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The vote referred to is as follows:

YEAS—71.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nelson	Simmons
Beckham	Hollis	New	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Husting	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Brandegge	James	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sterling
Colt	Kellogg	Phelan	Stone
Curtis	Kenyon	Pittman	Sutherland
Dillingham	King	Poinexter	Swanson
Fall	Kirby	Pomerene	Thompson
Fernald	Knox	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	Lewis	Robinson	Wadsworth
France	Lodge	Saulsbury	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Shafer	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Hale	Martin	Sherman	Wolcott
Harding	Myers	Shields

NAYS—7.

Bankhead	Gronna	La Follette	Vardaman
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Underwood

NOT VOTING—18.

Culberson	Hardwick	Owen	Townsend
Cummins	Hughes	Reed	Walsh
Gallinger	Kendrick	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Gore	McLean	Thomas
	McNary	Tillman

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in this connection I desire to state that under the House provision only $200,000,000 would have been raised, while under the Senate committee amendment as amended it is estimated that $1,200,000,000 will be raised.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will yield to me just for one word, I want to say that it was stated upon this floor that the increases made by the amendments which were adopted on the floor of the House and which were adopted here would add but $30,000,000 to this bill, and that is well understood by the chairman and every member of the committee; in fact, the amount was a little less than that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to submit a substitute for section 902, on page 88 of the bill, and ask to have it pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for leave, subject to the privilege of withdrawing the request later, to print in the Record certain documents relating to the postal rates on second-class matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to state in this connection in just a word—in view of the fact that the people of the United States expend in the neighborhood of $700,000,000 a year for public education in institutions supported wholly or in part by the United States Government or by the States or school districts—that even though it were conceded that the amount of expense for transporting magazines and newspapers is anywhere near that claimed to be the case, over and above the receipts from that source, it would, in my opinion, be a wise public expenditure. I regard the magazines and newspapers of the country, although there are some that perhaps would not be regarded as beneficial, upon the whole as almost, if not quite, as great an educational factor in the United States as the public-school system.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think, if the United States Government is going to spend this vast sum of $89,000,000 for educating the public, it ought to be done through governmental channels and not in the way of bounty or gratuity to private corporations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not regard the existing rate as a system of bounty; and, even though it were a bounty, it still is subject to the public purpose which I stated a moment ago—general public education.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in 35 minutes the debate on this bill, the greatest measure of its kind in the history of this country, and perhaps in the history of the world, will have closed. I do not intend to discuss the bill generally; I have done that, and there are other Senators who wish to have something to say before the debate closes. I shall not attempt to present evidence of the statements which I am going to make, for I have done that. On the 20th of August I presented in great detail the question to which I am now going to refer; I presented the facts, the evidence of the statements which I then made, and from that day until this no Senator has risen in this Chamber to question any statement or fact or conclusion of policy or judgment made in my observations at that time. No Senator has appealed to the Senate more earnestly than have I to support the Finance Committee upon matters of judgment; in many instances I have surrendered my own judgment to the majority of my fellow members of that great committee, and if the matter which I intend to present now was a matter of judgment only I would surrender now to the will of the majority of the committee. But, Mr. President, it is not a question of judgment only involved in this proposition; it is a question of fundamental justice as between the citizens of our common country.

It may startle you for me to say that under this bill, as presented to the Senate, there is one rate of taxation provided for one man doing business and another rate provided for another man doing business in the same block. Does that strike you as fair? Take an illustration here in the city of Washington. If the net income from the business of Woodward & Lothrop should be $100,000 a year, they would pay a tax of $6,000. If the net income of the Palais Royal should be $100,000, it would pay $20,430 tax. Bringing the illustration to this Chamber, if the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] should make $100,000 profit in his business, he would pay a tax under this bill of $20,430, while if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] in his business should make a similar income, he would get off with a tax of $6,000.

Does that startle you? It is in this bill; and why? Because the Palais Royal is owned by an individual, while Woodward & Lothrop is a corporation.

The junior Senator from Wyoming is doing business as an individual. The senior Senator from Wyoming is doing business as a corporation. If that is sufficient reason, does it not startle every Senator here to think that that is what is embodied in this bill? But it is here. It is not only here, but the injustice to which I have just referred exists under the present law. The injustice crept into this law in 1909, was continued in 1913, and this bill proposes to perpetuate it in a much magnified degree.

The vice of this bill lies in the fact that we impose upon the net income of individuals surtaxes ranging from 1 per cent to 63 per cent. Upon the corporation, this bill imposes a surtax of 2 per cent. An ex-Senator of this body who is doing business in the name of a corporation, with an income of $10,000,000 a year, gets off with a paltry tax of $200,000; but if he were doing the identical business as an individual his tax would be over $6,000,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I have unfortunately been obliged to be absent from the Senate during the last few days. I want to ask the chairman of the committee, with the permission of the Senator from New Mexico, what he has to say to the statement just made. I should like to have that point settled.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have not been following the statement of the Senator, but I assume that he has been discussing the question of the distribution of the surplus.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have been showing the difference between the income tax which a person doing business as an individual would pay as compared with the tax which the same person would pay if he were doing it through the formality of a corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. That involves the question of the distribution of the surplus.

Mr. REED. The statement that the Senator made was in substance this—and if I get it wrong, the Senator will correct me—that if a corporation doing a certain business had an income of a million dollars, it would pay, under this bill, a tax of $200,000, but that if the same volume of business were done by an individual the tax would be—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I used this illustration: Here is the junior Senator from Wyoming doing a live-stock business. Assuming him to have a net income of $100,000 a year, his tax under this bill would be $20,430. The senior Senator from Wyoming doing a live-stock business as a corporation, with the same income, would pay a tax of $6,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I can not exactly follow the argument of the Senator, but I will state that this is the situation: If an individual engages in business and makes an income, the whole of that income, of course, is subject to the income tax and to the surtax that may accompany the amount of income which he has. If a corporation is doing business, the corporation pays a flat tax of 6 per cent as against an individual's tax of 4 per cent. Now, the corporation is not liable as a corporation to a surtax. The corporation pays a normal tax just as an individual pays a normal tax. Then the income of the corporation is divided among its stockholders, and when it comes into the hands of its stockholders then the stockholders pay the surtax just as the individual pays the surtax.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator still yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. REED. When this money is collected by the corporation, if it runs into large amounts, the surtax, if one were levied, would be large. If it went into the hands of an individual, it would be large; but when it is divided and scattered among a large number of stockholders it may fall so that no income tax whatever will be paid on a large part of it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, Mr. President, that is perfectly clear. If a corporation has a thousand stockholders and its income is distributed among those 1,000 stockholders, each one of those stockholders has to pay the income tax upon such part of the income as comes to him. Naturally, that divides or breaks up the income, and instead of its having to pay the tax as a flat, solid amount, it pays the tax according to the amount coming to each stockholder by way of dividends. The same thing is true with reference to a copartnership, Mr. President. There may be a copartnership composed of a dozen partners. These partners have to pay income taxes just like individuals; but the total amount of the earnings of that copartnership, instead of paying the income tax in solid, is divided among the several partners, and each partner gives in his amount, and in that way the surtax that will have to be paid is greatly reduced.

Mr. REED and Mr. PITTMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield for just a moment to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The amount of it is this: That a corporation, which has all the advantages of acting as one body, does escape paying a heavy surtax, and that surtax is never collected from the earnings of the corporation, because the profits become so divided and scattered among the many stockholders that the surtax is never levied upon the profits of the corporation at all; whereas if it is an individual or a copartnership the money, being taxed at that point and before the distribution, does pay the tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President. If it is a copartnership, there is no income tax imposed under this law on a copartnership. The copartnership divides its profits among its members and the members pay the income tax.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is no income tax paid on a copartnership at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SIMMONS. In this bill there is a surtax imposed upon a corporation, and an excess-profits tax also.

Here is the situation, Mr. President. Under the original income act of 1909 a corporation paid no surtax. A corporation paid what was known as a normal tax, just as an individual pays a normal tax; and then, when its earnings were divided among the individual stockholders, the stockholders gave them in as income and paid the surtax if any attached to the amount. That law has been carried through the several acts that have been enacted since that time, and up to the present time that is the law. That is the law as it is written in the bill sent to us by the House, but, Mr. President, we change that, and we impose a surtax of 10 per cent upon undistributed corporate income. That part which is distributed goes into the hands of the stockholder, and once in his hands becomes subject to the income surtax. Upon that part which is not distributed we impose a tax of 10 per cent, with the proviso that if it be reasonably needed in its business, and is retained, it shall not be subject to that surtax. But for the purpose of counterbalancing or offsetting that possible advantage we have added 2 cents to the normal tax of corporations, by which we will raise $180,000,000, and if every dollar of the income of corporations were distributed, in my judgment we could not possibly get over $220,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has given an example where the senior Senator from Wyoming, earning $100,000 a year as a corporation, pays only $6,000 in taxes, while the junior Senator from Wyoming, earning the same amount in the same business, pays $20,000 because operating as an individual. If the senior Senator from Wyoming, operating as a corporation, were compelled to distribute that earning as a dividend, then he would pay $20,000 the same as the junior Senator from Wyoming, would he not?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Precisely.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then it is only a question of compelling the distribution of profits, and the Senator, I assume, has a remedy of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only wish to ask the Senator how he possibly works out the proposition under this bill that the junior Senator from Wyoming would be taxed $20,000 on that $100,000 income?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is worked out in this way: Under this bill a married man, with an exemption of $2,000, with a net income of $100,000, pays surtaxes of $16,430. You add to that the $4,000 normal tax which he pays, making $20,430. In that connection, Mr. President, and in connection with these remarks, I have a table here showing the total amount of tax which will be paid upon specified amounts, which has been worked out by the expert who has been aiding the committee. I ask permission at this point to have this table printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Table showing the income tax upon specified net incomes of persons under the provisions of the present law, pending bill, and the total tax; exemption allowed of $2,000 under pending bill and $4,000 under the present law.

Income.	Present law.		Pending bill.		Total tax.
	Amount.	Per cent.	Amount.	Per cent.	Amount.	Per cent.
$2,000.....	$0	0	$0	0	$0	0
$4,000.....	0	0	40	1.00	40	1.00
$5,000.....	20	.40	60	1.20	80	1.60
$7,000.....	60	.85	120	1.71	180	2.57
$10,000.....	120	1.20	235	2.35	355	3.55
$12,000.....	160	1.33	335	2.79	495	4.12
$15,000.....	220	1.47	510	3.40	730	4.87
$20,000.....	320	1.60	910	4.55	1,230	6.15
$30,000.....	620	2.07	1,910	6.37	2,530	8.44
$50,000.....	1,320	2.64	4,110	8.22	5,430	10.85
$60,000.....	1,720	2.88	5,310	8.85	7,030	11.72
$75,000.....	2,470	3.29	7,710	10.28	10,180	13.57
$100,000.....	3,920	3.92	12,510	12.51	16,430	16.43
$150,000.....	7,420	4.95	24,010	16.01	31,430	20.93
$200,000.....	11,420	5.71	37,510	18.75	48,930	24.46
$250,000.....	15,920	6.37	53,510	21.40	69,430	27.77
$300,000.....	20,920	6.97	71,510	23.84	92,430	30.81
$400,000.....	31,920	7.98	110,510	27.63	142,430	35.61
$500,000.....	42,920	8.58	149,510	29.90	192,430	38.48
$600,000.....	54,920	9.15	191,510	31.92	246,430	41.07
$700,000.....	66,920	9.56	233,510	33.36	300,430	42.92
$800,000.....	78,920	9.87	278,010	34.75	356,930	44.62
$900,000.....	90,920	10.10	325,010	36.11	415,930	46.21
$1,000,000.....	102,920	10.29	372,010	37.20	474,930	47.49
$10,000,000.....	1,437,920	14.38	5,032,010	50.52	6,469,930	64.90
$30,000,000.....	4,437,920	14.79	15,452,010	51.51	19,889,930	66.30
$100,000,000.....	14,937,920	14.94	51,852,010	51.85	66,789,930	66.79

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator that I think it utterly impossible to work a $20,000 income-tax out of a $100,000 income. It can not possibly be done under these figures, worked out correctly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have it right in front of me here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The highest rate on the last $20,000, from $80,000 to $100,000, is 18 per cent, and it starts at 4.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is under the present bill; but I am adding the existing law to the present bill, and according to the expert's figures which I am quoting that is the amount given. With a net income of $100,000, under the existing law, the tax is $3,920. The additional tax under the present bill is $12,510. I expect probably the normal tax is worked in here. It is worked in here, and I am wrong to that extent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it went to $20,000 it would do what I had hoped it would do; but it does not reach anything like that sum.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But I am correct within $4,000. The amount would be $6,000 in the case of the senior Senator, and $16,430 in the case of the junior Senator. I think the difference is a substantial sum.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then if the senior Senator drew his income to spend for his own use, he would have to pay an additional tax exactly similar to that paid by the junior Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If he did, if he drew it out of his business; but, Mr. President—and that is the point which I want to make now—they do not draw it out of the business of the corporation. I presented here the other day in detail the evidence which to my mind demonstrated that the corporations of this country on an average retain annually 50 per cent of their net income, which is never distributed, but which is an addition to capital.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course I shall have no opportunity to reply to the Senator, because other Senators want to speak. I just want to say this, Mr. President:

The entire surtax which it is estimated will be collected under the present bill is $393,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I can not yield longer. I am going to make a statement of those facts myself.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will not the Senator let me finish that one sentence?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; I will permit that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has just said that one-half of the earnings of corporations is distributed. One-half is distributed, and that one-half represents about one-half of the total amount of surtax estimated under this bill, which will be $196,000,000. If the other half were distributed, it would pay another $196,000,000; but we have imposed a tax of 2 additional per cent in order to offset that, and that would amount to $180,000,000; so that the loss, if we required every single, solitary cent to be distributed, would only be $16,000,000 at best.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, as I stated, the corporations of this country retain in their business, as an addition to their capital, on an average not less than 50 per cent of their net income. Last year the net incomes of corporations amounted to $9,000,000,000. Upon the same basis, the amount of such net income retained will be $4,500,000,000. If there is no increase in the year 1917, there will be $4,500,000,000 of net incomes of corporations which will escape any tax except the 6 per cent tax.

The statement made by the chairman of the committee just now, that this 2 per cent additional tax upon corporate incomes would bring about the same amount of money, I deny. I deny that the 2 per cent tax will bring anything like what should be brought to equalize the surtaxes which individuals pay. The amount of net incomes of individuals subject to a surtax last year was less than $3,000,000,000. If it is $3,000,000,000 this year we are expecting to raise from surtaxes not less than $500,000,000. That is what we are expecting to gain in surtaxes from the net incomes of individuals in this country; and you permit the corporations of this country to retain $4,500,000,000 without any surtaxes except this 2 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, when the surtaxes upon individuals range from 1 to 63 per cent, does that sound to you like justice? Does that sound to you like the things we have heard here about "burdens upon corporations"? Does it not appear to you that in this good month of September, 1917, the corporations of this country have been put upon a shrine, and your Finance Committee kneels down and worships?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from New Mexico has given much consideration to the provision in the bill he is discussing. Will the Senator advise the Senate as to whether, in his opinion, the contingent reserve held by life insurance companies, as required by law, to meet possible losses, and accumulations required under deferred-dividend policies, will be subject to the 10 per cent tax provided for in this section?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, in my opinion they would not be, because the present proposal is only an amendment to the existing law; and the Senator, I think, will satisfy himself fully by reading the exemptions regarding insurance companies which exist in the present law. So I am sure that the exemptions suggested by the Senator are recognized by the existing law.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from New Mexico state those exemptions? Does the Senator know what those exemptions are?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. They are in the existing law, and as my time is limited I can only ask the Senator to read the existing law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator, if the same income tax were levied upon corporations that is levied upon individuals, what amount of revenue would be derived from corporations?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the same income tax were levied upon corporations that is levied upon individuals, in my judgment it would come pretty near doubling the revenues of this bill; but it is clearly apparent to my mind, at least, that it would be an injustice to do that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would not the same income as to each be fair, and consequently would not the repeal of the 6 per cent provision make it equitable as between the individual and the corporation?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think not; and if the Senator will permit me to answer him just in as few words as I can, I will state the reason why.

There are some corporations in this country that have a large number of stockholders who have not much income besides the income from the corporation; and if you were to levy graduated surtaxes upon the total incomes of corporations the same as you do upon individuals you would be doing an injustice, and an unwarranted injustice, to a vast number of those stockholders. So, Mr. President, we can not levy that kind of a tax. We can not make these surtaxes apply to corporate incomes the same as to individual incomes; but can we not do something? Can we not exercise our judgment to bring about some remedy that will at least tend to equalize the taxes imposed upon corporations and upon individuals? That is all that I am asking the Senate to do. Are you satisfied that 2 per cent will do it? When the surtaxes upon individual incomes range from 1 to 63 per cent, are you willing that Mr. Henry Ford, who last year made $58,000,000, should, in the midst of war, keep that $58,000,000 in his business and escape the payment of all surtax on it except 2 per cent, when if he took it out his war taxes would range up to 63 per cent? Do you believe that that is justice, and do you want to go before the people of this country telling them that that thing must be done?

Mr. President, with these surtaxes from 1 to 63 per cent upon individuals we are expecting to raise $500,000,000 of revenue. If this bill passes in its present form will not the junior Senator from Wyoming go and incorporate his business and save the additional $10,000? Will you not hear the news from one end of this country to the other that these individuals and these partners have been incorporating their businesses, and will you not jeopardize the $500,000,000 revenue which you are hoping to get from surtaxes upon individual incomes?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator has attacked the committee. The bill that the committee brought in here is the first income-tax law that has ever been presented to the Senate that imposed a surtax or a substitute for a surtax on the incomes of corporations. The act of 1909 imposed none. The act of 1913, which revised our income-tax laws, which was reported to the House by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and adopted by the Senate, did not impose a single, solitary cent in the nature of a surtax upon the income of a corporation. In 1916 we again revised our income-tax laws, and in that revision we did not impose any surtax upon the income of a corporation, but only upon the stockholder into whose hands it came. Now, Mr. President, when your committee considers it this time and imposes not only a 10 per cent tax upon the surplus but adds an additional 2 per cent tax upon the income, the Senator denounces the committee of which he was a member.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I want to say this in answer to the last proposition: When this matter was first presented to the Finance Committee every member of that committee voted in favor of it but one, and the committee, in its report to the Senate of its first bill, reported a provision levying this tax, with certain exemptions.

The Senator has just stated that the committee has imposed a tax of 10 per cent. So it has, Mr. President; but if it did not have a string to it you would not be listening to me now. The string is:

The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to that portion of such undistributed net income which is actually invested and employed in the business or is retained for employment in the reasonable requirements of the business: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury ascertains and finds that any portion of such amount so retained at any time for employment in the business is not so employed or is not reasonably required in the business a tax of 15 per cent shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid thereon, and the finding and ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury in any and all such cases shall be conclusive and final.

And it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain whether it is needed in the business or not—a provision as to which, I understand, most eminent lawyers in this country have recently given the opinion that it is absolutely unconstitutional. If it is not unconstitutional, it is absolutely inoperative and ineffective. You never will get a dollar of revenue under it. It enables the corporations to keep every cent they have employed or that they think they can employ in their business. The charter of the corporation is the measure of the business. The breadth of these charters is known to every lawyer in the Senate. If they are not broad enough now to enable them to engage in any activity in the country, in 24 hours they can be broadened; and will they not do it? And do you not, by supporting the provision in this bill, absolutely jeopardize $500,000,000 of revenue? And will you not force the individuals and partnerships of the country to form corporations and carry on their business in any and every line by means of corporations and keep these surtaxes?

Mr. President, I should like to discuss more at length the impracticability even of the Secretary of the Treasury supervising the business of every corporation in the country. There are 400,000 of them. Do you want to impose upon the Secretary of the Treasury the duty of supervising the business of all of those corporations?

What I propose is, and the amendments which I shall offer to the Senate are, first, a tax of 10 per cent without that string to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 4 o'clock p. m.). The hour has arrived when, under the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement, further debate is not in order. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Please let the Secretary state the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, in the committee amendment, strike out lines 20, 21, and 22—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not find it in the bill on page 85.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to Senators that they must use the old draft of the bill and not the newly printed one, because the Secretary can not report the amendments by the new print.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, Title IX, section 900, strike out lines 20, 21, and 22 in the committee amendment, which read:

(a) Upon all coffee or substitutes therefor produced or imported, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, a tax of 2 cents per pound, to be paid by the producer or importer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Being unable to obtain a transfer of that pair, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is unavoidably absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. Under the transfer which I have made of my pair he stands paired on this vote and other votes during the day with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, did not answer to his name. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. LEWIS. Let me supplement the announcement of the Senator from West Virginia to say that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is absent because of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—51.

Beckham	Fall	James	Kenyon
Borah	Fletcher	Bankhead	King
Brady	Gore	Johnson, Cal.	Kirby
Broussard	Gronna	Johnson, S. Dak.	La Follette
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Jones, N. Mex.	Lewis
Culberson	Hollis	Jones, Wash.	McKellar
Curtis	Husting	Kellogg	McNary

Martin	Phelan
Myers	Pittman
Newlands	Pomerene
Norris	Ransdell
Overman	Reed
Owen	Robinson

Brandegge	Harding
Calder	Knox
Colt	Lodge
Fernald	Nelson
France	New
Gerry	Page
Hale	Penrose

Ashurst	Goff
Cummins	Hitchcock
Dillingham	Hughes
Frelinghuysen	Kendrick
Gallinger	McCumber

NAYS—27.

Polindexter
Saulsbury
Sherman
Simmons
Smoot
Sterling
Stone

NOT VOTING—18.

McLean
Smith, Ariz.
Smith, Ga.
Smith, Md.
Thomas

Swanson
Thompson
Trammell
Underwood
Vardaman

Wadsworth
Warren
Watson
Weeks
Williams
Wolcott

Tillman
Townsend
Walsh

So Mr. BROUSSARD's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state it. The SECRETARY. On page 86, line 21, after the word "sugar," strike out the balance of the paragraph—that is, to the end of line 2, page 87—or strike out the words "1 cent per gallon in the case of molasses (except beet molasses) and sirup of cane juice, testing by polariscope above 40° and not above 56°, and 2 cents per gallon in the case of molasses and sirup of cane juice testing above 56°, such taxes to be paid by the producer or importer."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing his position on this question, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I repeat the announcement of the transfer of my pair made on the last vote and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I repeat the announcement of the necessary absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and this extends for the day. I announce further at this time that my colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. This announcement may stand for all votes taken during the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). May I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—50.

Bankhead	Hollis	McNary	Shafroth
Beckham	Husting	Martin	Sheppard
Borah	James	Myers	Shields
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Kellogg	Owen	Swanson
Curtis	Kenyon	Pittman	Thompson
Fall	King	Pomerene	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Underwood
Gore	La Follette	Reed	Vardaman
Gronna	Lewis	Robinson
Hardwick	McKellar	Saulsbury

NAYS—28.

Brandegge	Harding	Penrose	Stone
Calder	Kendrick	Polindexter	Wadsworth
Colt	Knox	Sherman	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
France	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Gerry	New	Smoot	Williams
Hale	Page	Sterling	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—18.

Ashurst	Goff	McLean	Tillman
Cummins	Hitchcock	Phelan	Townsend
Dillingham	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Jones, N. Mex.	Smith, Md.
Gallinger	McCumber	Thomas

So Mr. BROUSSARD's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not consent to my making a motion to strike out the balance of section 900 and all of section 901.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that would be the quickest way to dispose of the matter. The Senator proposes to move to strike out the balance of the title?

Mr. BROUSSARD. And the balance of section 900 and section 901. That motion would include striking out the tax on tea, on cocoa, and on sugar, and on glucose, grape sugar, and so forth.

Mr. SIMMONS. Down to section 902?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Down to section 902.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, I think that would be a proper motion.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And I move to strike out section 901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that the question is precisely the same as agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator just what the items are that are affected by the amendment?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will state to the Senator that it strikes out—

Mr. WEEKS. We can not hear what is being said on this side, and in the second place I make the point of order that this is entirely out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. There is nothing to be done under the unanimous-consent rule except to vote on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. STONE. I was trying to know what the amendment was.

Mr. PENROSE and others. Question!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended. The Chair will put the question in that form because it is equivalent to the motion made by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be stated. I presume that is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment as first proposed by the Senator from Louisiana under the circumstances is out of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. BORAH. That is inserting sections 900 and 901?

Mr. LODGE. Sections 900 and 901.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to make a further inquiry. I understand the Chair to state that the question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended; that is, upon the sections proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Two portions of it have already been stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. As amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As amended.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And on that those who favor striking out this tax will vote in the affirmative?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those who favor striking out the tax will vote against the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. KING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous votes, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Brandeggee	Harding	Penrose	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Polindexter	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Knox	Saulsbury	Warren
Fernald	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
France	Nelson	Smoot	Weeks
Gerry	New	Sterling	Williams
Hale	Page	Stone	Wolcott

NAYS—52.

Bankhead	Hardwick	McKellar	Robinson
Beckham	Hollis	McNary	Shafroth
Borah	Husting	Martin	Sheppard
Brady	James	Myers	Sherman
Broussard	Johnson, Cal.	Newlands	Shields
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Culberson	Kellogg	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Swanson
Fall	King	Pittman	Thompson
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Trammell
Gore	La Follette	Ransdell	Underwood
Gronna	Lewis	Reed	Vardaman

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst	Goff	McCumber	Thomas
Cummins	Hitchcock	McLean	Tillman
Frelinghuysen	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Townsend
Gallinger	Jones, N. Mex.	Smith, Md.	Walsh

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. OWEN, and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There still remains in that title a committee amendment to be disposed of, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert section 900 instead of 902 to read as follows:

Sec. 900. That so much of paragraph O of Section IV of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, as authorizes a drawback upon sugar is hereby repealed.

Mr. HARDWICK. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous votes, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the previous votes and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], but I am informed that if present he would vote on this question as I shall vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 69, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Broussard	Kirby	Pomerene	Stone
Gerry	La Follette	Ransdell	Williams
Gronna	Polindexter	Simmons

NAYS—69.

Bankhead	Hardwick	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Hollis	New	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Husting	Newlands	Smoot
Brady	James	Norris	Sterling
Brandeggee	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Sutherland
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thompson
Colt	Kellogg	Penrose	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Vardaman
Fall	King	Reed	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Robinson	Warren
Fletcher	Lewis	Saulsbury	Watson
France	Lodge	Shafroth	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McNary	Sherman
Hale	Martin	Smith, Ga.
Harding	Myers	Smith, Md.

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst	Goff	McCumber	Thomas
Culberson	Hitchcock	McLean	Tillman
Cummins	Hughes	Shields	Townsend
Gallinger	Jones, N. Mex.	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. OWEN, Mr. NEW, and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that all of Title IX, except the title itself, has been stricken out. Is unanimous consent of the Senate granted that the title be stricken out also and that the Secretary renumber the subsequent titles accordingly?

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that that be done.

Mr. OWEN. I object, because I propose to offer an amendment that will replace Title IX under another heading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of Title IX as stricken from the bill it is proposed to insert the following—

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not understand that the committee amendments have all been disposed of as yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment to Title IX was under consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but I do not understand because that title was under consideration that any but committee amendments could be at this stage in order. There are committee amendments that are left unacted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the Senator from North Carolina is accurately taken under the original unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the manner in which amendments should be considered; but the Chair understood that subsequently it was agreed by unanimous consent that amendments to a particular subject or title under consideration should be in order. The Chair would be glad to be informed if his impression is incorrect.

Mr. SIMMONS. If unanimous consent has been granted to that effect, of course I make no further point about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the recollection of the Chair that it was so agreed earlier in the consideration of the bill. The Chair will be glad to leave the question to the Senate, if it so desires.

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President, I make no such point as that. If the Chair says unanimous consent to that effect has been given, that settles it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue reading the amendments offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out "Title IX—War excise tax on coffee, tea, cocoa, sugar," and to insert the following:

TITLE IX.—INHERITANCE TAX.

SEC. 900. That a legacy tax shall be, and is hereby, imposed upon the transfer of any right, title, and interest in or to any property, real or personal, by will, grant, or transfer in any manner, or under the intestate law of any State or Territory, or of the United States, from any person in anticipation of death, or of any person dying, who is seized or possessed of such property while a resident of the United States, or of any of its possessions; or when the property of such decedent lies within the United States, or within any of its possessions, and the decedent or grantor was a nonresident of the United States, or of any of its possessions at the time of his death, in accordance with the following schedule, to wit:

Where the clear value of the entire estate is less than $100,000 it shall be exempt from legacy tax; otherwise, subject to the following duties, to wit:

Where the clear value of the entire estate is between $100,000 and $300,000, 1 per cent; between $300,000 and $500,000, 2 per cent; between $500,000 and $600,000, 3 per cent; between $600,000 and $700,000, 4 per cent; between $700,000 and $1,000,000, 5 per cent; and upon every excess in the clear value of such estate over and above $1,000,000 there shall be automatically added in addition to 5 per cent, and accumulative as to each additional increase, 1 per cent additional legacy tax to be laid upon each increase in the clear value of such estate of $1,000,000, or the major fractional part thereof, until such tax reaches 100 per cent cumulative duty upon such additional increase in the clear value of such estate and on all the estate above such amount: Provided, That when such estate, by will, devise, grant, or inheritance law, goes to collateral kin there shall be imposed the following additional legacy tax upon such portion only of such estate as may descend to such persons severally, to wit:

Brothers and sisters, or their descendants, 3 per cent; uncles and aunts, or their descendants, 5 per cent; other persons not children or parents, 10 per cent.

Any property conveyed, in anticipation of death, by any person, as a gift or grant to the extent conveyed without adequate consideration, where such estate would come within the rule imposed by this act, fixing such legacy taxes, such conveyance, gift, or transfer, however, made, shall be subject to the legacy duty herein provided, as if it were the estate of a decedent, and the estate shall be chargeable therewith unless otherwise paid. Where corporate stocks or bonds are transferred or placed under a trust for transfer within five years previous to death, as a gift, either in whole or in part, to that extent such transfer shall be conclusive evidence of its character as a legacy: Provided, however, That property devised or bequeathed by any decedent to any religious, educational, patriotic, charitable, or benevolent corporation or institution shall be exempt from legacy duty up to the amount of $1,000,000.

The legacy tax hereby imposed shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die as aforesaid, from the date of the death of such person, and shall be payable within one year, bearing 6 per cent from the date of the death for the first 12 months and thereafter at the rate of 8 per cent until fully paid.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make rules and regulations for the collection of the same: Provided further, That out of such legacy taxes there shall be set apart to the credit of the State the amount of inheritance taxes imposed by the then existing State law and paid over to the proper authorities of the State.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I assume that that is subject to amendment; and I suggest an amendment, on page 4, line 3, just before the word "existing," to insert the word "then."

Mr. OWEN. I accept the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification is accepted by the author of the amendment. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out the words "one hundred per centum," in lines 17 and 18, on page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof "forty per centum."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 of the proposed amendment, in lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "forty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it. The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced the determination on the amendment before the Senator asked for the yeas and nays. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OWEN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on previous roll calls, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Beckham	Hollis	McKellar	Reed
Borah	Husting	McNary	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newlands	Thompson
Fletcher	Kellogg	Norris	Trammell
Gore	Kirby	Owen	Vardaman
Gronna	La Follette	Phelan
Hardwick	Lewis	Pomerene

NAYS—51.

Bankhead	Hale	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Brady	Harding	Pittman	Smoot
Brandegge	James	Polindexter	Sterling
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Stone
Calder	Kendrick	Robinson	Swanson
Colt	King	Saulsbury	Underwood
Culberson	Knox	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Sherman	Warren
Fall	Martin	Shields	Watson
Fernald	Nelson	Simmons	Weeks
France	New	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Overman	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Gerry	Page	Smith, Mich.

NOT VOTING—15.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	McCumber	Tillman
Cummins	Hughes	McLean	Townsend
Gallinger	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Goff	Kenyon	Thomas

So Mr. OWEN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: In the same place insert the amendment which has been stricken out by the Senate committee, and to be found on page 76, with regard to war-estate tax, down to the fourth line, on page 78, and insert the further words: "and 1 per cent additional on each succeeding $1,000,000 up to 40 per cent, and all in excess thereof."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my understanding is that the Senate has heretofore agreed to that amendment of the committee.

Mr. OWEN. Striking it out; yes. I am now proposing to make an amendment to it, and reinsert it with the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but the amendment proposed by the committee has been agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. But, Mr. President, that does not preclude me, as I understand, from proposing language which includes that which has been stricken out, with an addition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator should have presented that amendment at the time the motion was made to strike out and insert.

Mr. OWEN. I then reserve the right to present that in the Senate, with the amendment which I now propose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that the remaining amendments on the part of the committee be now taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I may have misunderstood the Chair, but I understood the Chair to say that when we were on a subject like the duties on coffee and tea it would be in order, until that subject was disposed of, before we took up anything else, to offer any proper amendment or motion. If that is true, I want to move, before we leave this title, to strike out of the House text sections 1000 and 1001. That was disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has already been done, so the Chair is informed by the Secretary.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me inquire of the Chair whether Title IX, that was disagreed to, is not a substitute for the House Title X?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not, so the Chair is informed, and not so treated by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Then that is already stricken out of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is already out of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all I care about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to inquire whether, by unanimous consent, the single title which remains shall be stricken out and the subsequent sections numbered by the Secretary?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senate has made an order authorizing the Secretary to make these changes as to sections and titles to conform to the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary did not understand that that was covered. With the understanding that it is the unanimous consent that that be done, the Secretary is instructed to strike out that title and number the subsequent sections.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] reserved the right to vote in the Senate on the amendment which he offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done, the Chair thinks.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I insist that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the previous consent the committee amendments are first in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This is an amendment to the committee amendment on page 26. I think when the chairman hears the amendment he will consent to adopt it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that has already been agreed to, and the amendment the Senator from Colorado has in mind could not be acted upon unless there was a reconsideration of the vote by which the paragraph was adopted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Secretary will state the amendment, I will ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered for the purpose of offering that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it in order, before we have finished the committee amendments, to go back in the bill and move to reconsider the vote on some committee amendment that has already been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not if there is objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, I have objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was going to ask—

Mr. SIMMONS. When that is reached I probably will be able to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well. I will wait, then, until that time.

The SECRETARY. On page 105, beginning on line 5, the committee proposes to insert a new section in the bill, as follows:

SEC. 1204. (1) That subdivisions (c) and (e) of section 8 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Guardians, trustees, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and all persons, corporations, or associations, acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a return of the income of the person, trust, or estate for whom or which they act and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals. Such fiduciary shall make oath that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals: Provided, That a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries filed in the district where such fiduciary resides, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this paragraph: Provided further, That no return of income not exceeding $3,000 shall be required except as in this title otherwise provided.

"(e) Persons carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and the share of the profits of the partnership to which any taxable partner would be entitled if the same were divided, whether divided or otherwise, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid under the provisions of this title: Provided, That from the net distributive interests on which the individual members shall be liable for tax, normal and additional, there shall be excluded their proportionate shares received from interest on the obligations of a State or any political or taxing subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States and its possessions, and that for the purpose of computing the normal tax there shall be allowed a credit, as provided by section 5, subdivision (b), for their proportionate share of the profits derived from dividends. Such partnership, when requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any district collector, shall render a correct return of the earnings, profits, and income of the partnership, except income exempt under section 4 of this act, setting forth the item of the gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title, and the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to the net earnings, profits, and income if distributed. A partnership shall have the same privilege of fixing and making returns upon the basis of its own fiscal year as is accorded to corporations under this title."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At this point an amendment has been added and agreed to.

The SECRETARY (reading)—

"If a fiscal year ends during 1916 or a subsequent calendar year for which there is a rate of tax different from the rate of the preceding calendar year, then (1) the rate for such preceding calendar year shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership profits equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rate for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to the remainder."

(2) Subdivision (d) of section 8 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I wish to inquire where that provision is to be found.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary read the proposed amendment from pages 105, 106, and into page 107 of the original print of the bill. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 1205. (1) That subdivisions (b), (f), and (g) of section 9 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) All persons, corporations, partnerships, associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income of any nonresident alien individual, other than income derived from dividends on capital stock, or from the net earnings of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as provided in this title, are hereby authorized and required to deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income such sum as will be sufficient to pay the normal tax imposed thereon by this title, and shall pay the amount withheld to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same; and they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax, and they are each hereby indemnified against every person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company, or demand whatsoever for all payments which they shall make in pursuance and by virtue of this title.

"(f) All persons, corporations, partnerships, or associations undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under this title, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and whoever knowingly undertakes to collect such payments as aforesaid without having obtained a license therefor, or without complying with such regulations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each offense be fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"(g) The tax herein imposed upon gains, profits, and incomes not falling under the foregoing and not returned and paid by virtue of the foregoing or as otherwise provided by law shall be assessed by personal return under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The intent and purpose of this title is that all gains, profits, and income of a taxable class, as defined by this title, shall be charged and assessed with the corresponding tax, normal and additional, prescribed by this title, and said tax shall be paid by the owner of such income, or the proper representative having the receipt, custody, control, or disposal of the same. For the purpose of this title, ownership or liability shall be determined as of the year for which a return is required to be rendered.

The provisions of this section relating to the deduction and payment of the tax at the source of income shall only apply to the normal tax hereinafter imposed upon nonresident alien individuals."

(2) Subdivisions (c), (d), and (e) of section 9 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, beginning at the top of page 110, as follows:

SEC. 1206. (1) That the first paragraph of section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized in the United States, no matter how created or organized, but not including partnerships, a tax of 2 per cent upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources within the United States by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of any foreign country, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including the income derived from dividends on capital stock or from net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, whose net income is taxable under this title: Provided, That the term "dividends" as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of the earnings or profits so distributed: Provided further, That any distribution made to the shareholders of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, in the year 1917, or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the net income of the year in which such distribution is made or, if such income is insufficient, from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, and shall constitute a part of the annual income of the shareholder for the respective years in which earned by the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, and shall be taxed to the shareholder at the rate prescribed by law for such years."

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount, remaining undistributed six months after the end of each calendar or fiscal year, of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12."

"The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to that portion of such undistributed net income which is actually invested and employed in the business or is retained for employment in the reasonable requirements of the business: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Treasury ascertains and finds that any portion of such amount so retained at any time for employment in the business is not so employed or is not reasonably required in the business, a tax of 15 per cent shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid thereon, and the finding and ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury in any and all such cases shall be conclusive and final."

"The foregoing tax rate shall apply to the undistributed net income received by every taxable corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company in the calendar year 1917 and in each year thereafter, except that if it has fixed its own fiscal year under the provisions of existing law, the foregoing rate shall apply to the proportion of the taxable undistributed net income returned for the fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1917, which the period between January 1, 1917, and the end of such fiscal year bears to the whole of such fiscal year."

Before the reading had been concluded,

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will first conclude the reading of the section.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The language to which I offer the amendment has just been read, and there will be no controversy as to what follows. I think it would be advisable at this point to offer the amendment, for it is a substitute for that which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator desires the amendment read, it will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I understand the Senator's amendment, it applies only to that part of the section that has just been read, subdivision b.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so informed by the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not suppose there is any objection to the balance of the section. Let the Senator offer his amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Secretary had better continue the reading of the amendment, and then the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment will be read.

After the reading of the amendment had been concluded,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all beginning with line 17, on page 111, down to and including line 15, on page 112, and insert:

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually, an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount, remaining undistributed to stockholders 60 days after the end of each calendar or fiscal year of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12."

"The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to—

"(1) The sum of $5,000 of such undistributed net income.

"(2) Such portion of such net income necessarily retained by such corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies for the purpose of paying any taxes becoming due to the Federal Government for such calendar or fiscal year."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the vote will be upon the substitute offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to strike out a certain part of the committee amendment and insert.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely wish to ascertain on what page and under what title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment will be found on pages 110, 111, and 112, and two lines on page 113. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Announcing the same transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Upon this vote I have arranged a transfer of my pair so that the senior Senator from Colorado will stand paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Beckham	Husting	La Follette	Reed
Borah	James	McKellar	Robinson
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Shafroth
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Sheppard
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Thompson
Gore	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Trammell
Gronna	Kendrick	Pittman	Underwood
Hardwick	Kenyon	Polndexter	Vardaman
Hollis	Kirby	Ransdell

NAYS—45.

Bankhead	Harding	Page	Stone
Brandagee	Kellogg	Penrose	Sutherland
Broussard	King	Pomerene	Swanson
Calder	Knox	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Colt	Lewis	Sherman	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Simmons	Watson
Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Fernald	Martin	Smith, Md.	Williams
France	Nelson	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	New	Smith, S. C.
Gerry	Newlands	Smoot
Hale	Overman	Sterling

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst	Gallinger	McLean	Thomas
Culberson	Goff	Owen	Tillman
Cummins	Hitchcock	Shields	Townsend
Fall	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of New Mexico to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to offer another amendment, which is the same as that just voted upon, except that I exempt from the tax of 10 per cent 10 per cent of the net income.

Mr. SIMMONS. No explanation is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment to the amendment be read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is out of order. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Beginning at page 111, line 17, strike out all down to and including line 15 on page 112 and insert:

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount remaining undistributed to stockholders 60 days after the end of each calendar or fiscal year of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12.

"The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to—

"(1) The sum of $5,000 of such undistributed net income.

"(2) Such portion of such net income necessarily retained by such corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, for the purpose of paying any taxes becoming due to the Federal Government for such calendar or fiscal year.

"(3) An amount of the undistributed profits equal to 10 per cent of such net income of corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk; and, in order to save the time of the Senate, I will state that—

Mr. SIMMONS. I object to debate, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On pages 111 and 112, strike out all of said bill, beginning with line 17 on page 111 down to and including line 15 on page 112, and instead thereof insert the following:

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount remaining undistributed to stockholders 60 days after the end of each calendar or fiscal year of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12.

"The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to—

"(1) The sum of $5,000 of such undistributed net income.

"(2) Such portion of such net income necessarily retained by such corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, for the purpose of paying any taxes becoming due to the Federal Government for such calendar or fiscal year.

"(3) An amount of the undistributed profits equal to 20 per cent of such net income of corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as I did on the previous vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous votes, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous votes, I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Beckham	James	McKellar	Shafroth
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Thompson
Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Gore	Kendrick	Phelan	Underwood
Gronna	Kenyon	Pittman	Vardaman
Hardwick	King	Ransdell
Hollis	Kirby	Reed
Husting	La Follette	Robinson

NAYS—46.

Bankhead	Harding	Penrose	Sterling
Brandegge	Kellogg	Polindexter	Stone
Broussard	Knox	Pomerene	Sutherland
Calder	Lewis	Saulsbury	Swanson
Coit	Lodge	Sherman	Wadsworth
Curtis	McCumber	Shields	Warren
Dillingham	Martin	Simmons	Watson
Fernald	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
France	New	Smith, Md.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Newlands	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott
Gerry	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Hale	Page	Smoot

NOT VOTING—17.

Ashurst	Gallinger	McLean	Townsend
Brady	Goff	Owen	Walsh
Culberson	Hitchcock	Smith, Ariz.
Cummins	Hughes	Thomas
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Tillman

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I offer the amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On pages 111 and 112 strike out all of said bill beginning with line 17, on page 111, down to and including line 15, on page 112, and instead thereof insert the following:

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 5 per cent upon the amount remaining undistributed to stockholders 60 days after the end of each calendar or fiscal year of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12.

"The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to—

"(1) The sum of $5,000 of such undistributed net income.

"(2) Such portion of such net income necessarily retained by such corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies for the purpose of paying any taxes becoming due to the Federal Government for such calendar or fiscal year."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, if in order, I should like to offer an amendment at this time. I will say that I do not believe the chairman of the committee opposes the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 201, on page 14, after line 14, it is proposed to add a new paragraph, as follows—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not to the pending committee amendment, and is therefore not now in order.

Mr. HUSTING. I will offer it a little later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 113, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 1207. (1) That paragraphs third and fourth of subdivision (a) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the sum of (a) the entire amount of the paid-up capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, or, if no capital stock, the entire amount of capital employed in the business at the close of the year, and (b) one-half of its interest-bearing indebtedness then outstanding: Provided, That for the purpose of this title preferred capital stock shall not be considered interest-bearing indebtedness, and interest or dividends paid upon this stock shall not be deductible from gross income: Provided further, That in cases wherein shares of capital stock are issued without par or nominal value, the amount of paid-up capital stock, within the meaning of this section, as represented by such shares, will be the amount of cash, or its equivalent, paid or transferred to the corporation as a consideration for such shares: Provided further, That in the case of indebtedness wholly secured by property collateral, tangible or intangible, the subject of sale or hypothecation in the ordinary business of such corporation, joint-stock company, or association as a dealer only in the property constituting such collateral, or in loaning the funds thereby procured, the total interest paid by such corporation, company, or association within the year on any such indebtedness may be deducted as a part of its expenses of doing business, but interest on such indebtedness shall only be deductible on an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the actual value of such property collateral: Provided further, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness, which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed, or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty, shall be allowed; and in the case of a bank, banking association, loan or trust company, interest paid within the year on deposits or on moneys received for investment and secured by interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued by such bank, banking association, loan or trust company;

"Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories, or possessions, or any foreign country, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits."

(2) Paragraphs third and fourth of subdivision (b) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the proportion of the sum of (a) the entire amount of the paid-up capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, or, if no capital stock, the entire amount of the capital employed in the business at the close of the year, and (b) one-half of its interest-bearing indebtedness then outstanding, which the gross amount of its income for the year from business transacted and capital invested within the United States bears to the gross amount of its income derived from all sources within and without the United States: Provided, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty shall be allowed; and in case of a bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof, interest paid within the year on deposits by or on moneys received for investment from either citizens or residents of the United States and secured by interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued by such bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof.

"Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories or possessions, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits."

(3) Section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision as follows:

"CREDITS.

"(d) For the purpose of the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10, the income embraced in a return of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be credited with the amount received as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of any other corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as provided in this title, less that proportion of such amount which the amount received by the distributing corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company from similar sources bears to the entire net income of such distributing corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment which has just been adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to the committee amendment, but the confusion was so great that I did not realize that the committee amendment had been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only way amendments can now be offered to the committee amendment is by reconsidering the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make that motion.

Mr. WEEKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. I understand the chairman of the committee will make no objection to that.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am responsible for temporarily diverting the attention of my colleague, and I hope the motion to reconsider will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment on page 117, line 4, after the word "company," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That funds derived from the sale of ships and other marine equipment, or through loss because of the agencies of war, or through marine disasters, in excess of the value at which such ships or marine equipments were carried on the books of the owners, shall not be deemed "profits" or "income" within the meaning of the provisions of this act or the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916: Provided further, That the said excess fund shall be invested as soon as practicable in the purchase, acquisition, or construction of other tonnage under American registry: And provided further, That said funds for the purposes stated shall be turned over to a trustee or trustees designated by the owner and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the terms and conditions of such acquisition, construction, or contract for construction shall be acceptable to and approved by the Shipping Board.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I see no objection to that amendment, and on behalf of the committee I accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to this section, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new subdivision at the end of section 1207, as follows:

(4) That subdivision (a) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Fifth. Reasonable amounts set aside during the year out of income received in that year, as shrinkage funds, to meet losses that may result from the shrinkage in value of merchandise, materials, and supplies on hand, or purchased and not delivered: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint, shall find in the particular case that such shrinkage funds are reasonably necessary and shall ascertain the reasonableness of the amounts thereof; and the finding and ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury in any and all such cases shall be conclusive and final: Provided further, That any amount so set aside in such a shrinkage fund, or any part thereof, that shall not be used during the year next succeeding the year in which it shall have been set aside to meet such losses shall be included in the return of the taxpayer for such succeeding year, and shall be taxed at the rate prescribed by law for the year in which it shall have been set aside."

"The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the income without taking into account the shrinkage funds provided for in this paragraph, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this paragraph may, at the time of making the return, file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds the tax computed upon the basis of the income when such shrinkage funds are taken into account. In such event collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall, upon final decision of the application, be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected."

(5) That subdivision (b) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Fifth. Reasonable amounts set aside during the year out of income received in that year, as shrinkage funds, to meet losses that may result from the shrinkage in value of merchandise, materials, and supplies on hand, or purchased and not delivered, in the maintenance and operation of its business and property within the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint, shall find in the particular case that such shrinkage funds are reasonably necessary, and shall ascertain the reasonableness of the amounts thereof; and the finding and ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury in any and all cases shall be conclusive and final: Provided further, That any amount so set aside in such a shrinkage fund, or any part thereof, that shall not be used during the year next succeeding the year in which it shall have been set aside to meet such losses shall be included in the return of the taxpayer for such succeeding year, and shall be taxed at the rate prescribed by law for the year in which it shall have been set aside."

"The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the income without taking into account the shrinkage funds provided for in this paragraph, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this paragraph may, at the time of making the return, file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds the tax computed upon the basis of the income when such shrinkage funds are taken into account. In such event collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby, he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall, upon final decision of the application, be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send forward to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

Section 4 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. The following incomes shall be exempt from the provisions of this title:

"The proceeds of life insurance policies paid to individual beneficiaries upon the death of the insured; the amount received by the insured as a return of premium or premiums paid by him under life insurance, endowment, or annuity contracts, either during the term or at the maturity of the term mentioned in the contract or upon the surrender of the contract; the value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent (but the income from such property shall be included as income); interest upon the obligations of a State or any political subdivision thereof, or upon the obligations of the United States (but, in the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, only if and to the extent provided in connection with the issue thereof) or its possessions or securities issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916; the compensation of the present President of the United States during the term for which he has been elected and the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States now in office, and the compensation of all officers and employees of a State, or any political subdivision thereof, except when such compensation is paid by the United States Government."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if that is the last of the committee amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not inform the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is the last of the committee amendments that I wish now to present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, in section 302, already agreed to—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A reconsideration will be necessary before the amendment can be offered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, Mr. President, for the purpose of offering this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote by which section 302 was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, in section 302, on line 5, after the word "islands," it is proposed to insert the following as part of the matter included in parentheses:

And not then into any State or Territory or District of the United States in which the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the pending bill, and to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that motion until I can offer an amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDELL. I understand that the chairman of the committee does not object to this amendment. I have submitted it to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be no debate. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 98 of the bill it is proposed to insert, after section 1106, the following paragraph:

Nor shall said section be held to prohibit the use of the mails by regularly ordained ministers of religion or by officers of regularly established churches for ordering bona fide wines for sacramental uses, or by manufacturers and dealers for quoting and billing such wines for such purpose only.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask if the amendment has ever been printed? If not, I should like to have the first part of it reread.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana will state it.

Mr. MYERS. Have the committee amendments been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have.

Mr. MYERS. Is the bill open to individual amendments now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to offer an amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to this amendment; and I hope he may see fit, for the committee, to consent to its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin, who has been recognized, has been yielding to other Senators.

Mr. MYERS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought perhaps he was offering his substitute.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rose for the purpose of offering the substitute, but I do not wish to cut off other Senators.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to offer my amendment first, with the Senator's permission. The committee may accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No further debate is in order. Without objection, the Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 203 of the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of subdivision (a) a further paragraph numbered (3), so that section 203 will read as follows:

"SEC. 203. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

"(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

"(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, and such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered;

"(2) An exemption of $50,000; and

"(3) All bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts to the United States, or to any State, or to any political division thereof, for exclusively public purposes, and all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

"(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States that proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated. But no deductions shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 205 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to know where this amendment is to be inserted and under what title?

Mr. MYERS. It will be a new section to be added to the bill, and numbered section blank.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to know the title. It is a new section to what title? We have a unanimous-consent agreement that has disposed of two titles, and an amendment could not now be offered to either one of those titles under the unanimous-consent agreement. That is why I ask to which title it is a new section, or whether it affects either Title I or Title II.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the point of order—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MYERS. Well, I will call it a new title, then—a new title and a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from Montana evidently is an amendment to the provision of the House in regard to inheritance taxes.

Mr. MYERS. It is intended as an amendment to the inheritance-tax feature of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is it in order for me to ask the Senator a question? My understanding is that the Senator's amendment does not change the present law at all except as it allows an exemption in case of a bequest.

Mr. MYERS. That is all the change that is made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not tell, from the amendment, just to what section or title it relates. That is not stated in the amendment, and the Chair can not determine. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a division, then.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I reserve the right to offer that amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HUSTING. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 201, line 14, page 14, insert a new subdivision (c) to read—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That falls under the unanimous-consent agreement and can not be considered at this time.

Mr. HUSTING. I do not so understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Title II, War-profits tax, was included under the unanimous-consent agreement so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned.

Mr. HUSTING. Then I reserve the right to present the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. NEW. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Under Title III, page 39, add a new section, to be known as section 317, which shall provide and consist of the following:

SEC. 317. Nothing in this title shall be construed to levy any tax in addition to the tax imposed by existing law upon alcohol used as a solvent or preservative in any medicinal product.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW].

Mr. NEW. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. NEW. I call for a division.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 1302. That whenever, upon protest and appeal from the decision of the collector of customs as to the rate or amount of duties as now provided by law, it shall appear that a clerical error was made in invoicing or entering merchandise, resulting in the assessment of more duties than would have been otherwise payable had such error not been committed, relief may be granted and a reliquidation of the entry by the collector of customs ordered, if necessary, upon a value below the entered value of such merchandise, according to the equity and justice of the case, whenever it shall plainly and distinctly appear from the evidence taken at the trial of such case before the Board of United States General Appraisers that such clerical error causing such excessive assessment of duties was in fact made.

SEC. — That the Board of United States General Appraisers, in determining the correct rate or amount of duty upon protest and appeal from the decision of the collector of customs, shall review all questions of law and fact involved in the action or nonaction of all executive and administrative officers upon which said decision of the collector may depend or be in any way predicated.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Wisconsin yields to me, as it will take only a moment; and I offer an amendment which was offered when there was some talk of invoking the cloture rule, and which I intended to perfect. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read. This involves the principle, although the amendment is not complete; but in case it should be adopted I would offer supplemental provisions which I have prepared and which would render it a workable system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place insert the following additional section:

SEC. — Before any money shall be withdrawn from the Treasury or expended to transport over the seas any citizen of the United States who has been drafted into the military service thereof the question of sending drafted citizens over the seas for military service shall be submitted to a vote of the people, upon the direction of the President, as hereinafter provided, and approved either by a majority of the total vote cast in the several States or by a majority of all the States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I understood the ruling of the Chair a few minutes ago to be that an amendment is not in order at this time to the excess-profits title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that in Committee of the Whole that that was determined by the unanimous-consent rule.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to inquire if a separate vote in the Senate has been reserved on sections 1101 and 1106? I know it was reserved as to one of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reserved by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] on section 1101, the Chair is informed by the Secretary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I reserve the right to have a separate vote on section 1106.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following. I made a full statement concerning it this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

TITLE I.—WAR INCOME TAX.

SECTION 1. That in addition to the normal tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a like normal tax of 2 per cent upon the income of every individual, a citizen or resident of the United States, received in the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the additional tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 1 of such act of September 8, 1916, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a like additional tax upon the income of every individual received in the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter, as follows:

One-half of one per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $6,000.

One per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $6,000 and does not exceed $7,000.

One and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $7,000 and does not exceed $8,000.

Two per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $8,000 and does not exceed $9,000.

Two and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $9,000 and does not exceed $10,000.

Three per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $11,000.

Three and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $11,000 and does not exceed $12,000.

Four per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $12,000 and does not exceed $13,000.

Four and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $13,000 and does not exceed $14,000.

Five per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $14,000 and does not exceed $15,000.

Five and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $15,000 and does not exceed $16,000.

Six per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $16,000 and does not exceed $17,000.

Six and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $17,000 and does not exceed $18,000.

Seven per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $18,000 and does not exceed $19,000.

Seven and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $19,000 and does not exceed $20,000.

Eight and one-quarter per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $21,000.

Nine per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $21,000 and does not exceed $22,000.

Nine and three-quarters per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $22,000 and does not exceed $23,000.

Ten and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $23,000 and does not exceed $24,000.

Eleven and one-quarter per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $24,000 and does not exceed $25,000.

Twelve per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $25,000 and does not exceed $26,000.

Twelve and three-quarters per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $26,000 and does not exceed $27,000.

Thirteen and one-half per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $27,000 and does not exceed $28,000.

Fourteen and one-quarter per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $28,000 and does not exceed $29,000.

Fifteen per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $29,000 and does not exceed $30,000.

Sixteen per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $30,000 and does not exceed $31,000.

Seventeen per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $31,000 and does not exceed $32,000.

Eighteen per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $32,000 and does not exceed $33,000.

Nineteen per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $33,000 and does not exceed $34,000.

Twenty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $34,000 and does not exceed $35,000.

Twenty-one per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $35,000 and does not exceed $36,000.

Twenty-two per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $36,000 and does not exceed $37,000.

Twenty-three per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $37,000 and does not exceed $38,000.

Twenty-four per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $38,000 and does not exceed $39,000.

Twenty-five per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $39,000 and does not exceed $40,000.

Twenty-six per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $40,000 and does not exceed $41,000.

Twenty-seven per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $41,000 and does not exceed $42,000.

Twenty-eight per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $42,000 and does not exceed $43,000.

Twenty-nine per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $43,000 and does not exceed $44,000.

Thirty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $44,000 and does not exceed $45,000.

Thirty-one per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $45,000 and does not exceed $46,000.

Thirty-two per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $46,000 and does not exceed $47,000.

Thirty-three per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $47,000 and does not exceed $50,000.

Thirty-four per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $60,000.

Thirty-five per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $60,000 and does not exceed $80,000.

Thirty-six per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $80,000 and does not exceed $100,000.

Thirty-seven per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $150,000.

Thirty-eight per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $200,000.

Thirty-nine per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $250,000.

Forty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $300,000.

Forty-one per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000.

Forty-two per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $500,000 and does not exceed $750,000.

Forty-five per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $750,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000.

Fifty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $1,000,000.

SEC. 3. That the taxes imposed by sections 1 and 2 of this act shall be computed, levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the same basis and in the same manner as the similar taxes imposed by section 1 of such act of September 8, 1916, except that in the case of the tax imposed by section 1 of this act (a) the exemptions of $3,000 and $4,000 provided in section 7 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended, shall be, respectively, $1,000 and $2,000, and (b) the returns required under subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 8 of such act, as amended, shall be required in the case of net incomes of $1,000 or over, in the case of unmarried persons, and $2,000 or over in the case of married persons, instead of $3,000 or over, as therein provided.

SEC. 4. That in addition to the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a like tax of 4 per cent upon the income received in the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter, by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, subject to the tax imposed by that subdivision of that section, except that if it has fixed its own fiscal year, the tax imposed by this section for the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917 shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid only on that proportion of its income for such fiscal year which the period between January 1, 1917, and the end of such fiscal year bears to the whole of such fiscal year.

The tax imposed by this section shall be computed, levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon the same incomes and in the same manner as the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this title shall not extend to Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, and the Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively.

TITLE II.—WAR-PROFITS TAX.

SEC. 200. That when used in this title—

The term "corporation" includes joint-stock companies or associations and insurance companies;

The term "domestic" means created under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the term "foreign" means created under the laws of any other possession of the United States or of any foreign country or government;

The term "United States" means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii and the District of Columbia;

The term "taxable year" means the 12 months ending December 31, excepting in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, in which case it means such fiscal year.

The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31, 1917, except that in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year it shall be the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917. If a corporation or partnership, prior to March 1, 1918, makes a return covering its own fiscal year and includes therein the income received during that part of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1916, the tax for such taxable year shall be that proportion of the tax computed upon the excess profits during such full fiscal year which the time from January 1, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year; and

The term "prewar period" means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in a trade or business during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation or partnership was in existence or the individual was engaged in the trade or business.

SEC. 201. That in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax) of 76 per cent upon war profits (determined as hereinafter provided).

For the purposes of this title all the trades and businesses in which a corporation or partnership is engaged shall be deemed to be a single trade or business, and all its income from whatever source derived shall be deemed to be received from such trade or business.

This title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description (whether continuously carried on or not), including the business of rendering any services for a commission or of acting as an agent of any description, except—

(a) An office or employment, including that of a commercial traveler or agent whose remuneration consists wholly of a fixed and definite sum irrespective of the amount of business done or any other contingency; and

(b) A profession the profits of which depend mainly on the personal qualifications of the individuals by whom such profession is carried on and in which there is not required the investment of more than a nominal capital.

SEC. 202. That the tax shall not be imposed in the case of a trade or business of a domestic corporation or partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States the net income of which trade or business during the taxable year is less than $5,000, or in the case of a trade or business of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual the net income of which trade or business during such year from sources within the United States is less than the proportion of $5,000 which such net income from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income, but no exemption shall be allowed to a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual unless a true and accurate return of the entire net income from the trade or business is filed with the collector of internal revenue. There shall be deducted from the war profits, determined as hereinafter provided, of each citizen or resident of the United States, the sum of $5,000.

SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title the amount of war profits shall be determined, except as otherwise in this title provided—

(a) In the case of a domestic corporation or partnership or of a citizen or resident of the United States by deducting from the net income of the trade or business received during the taxable year the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period; and

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual by deducting from the net income of the trade or business received from sources within the United States during the taxable year the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business from sources within the United States during the prewar period.

If the average capital (or in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual that proportion thereof which the net income of the trade or business from sources within the United States bears to the entire net income) employed in the trade or business during the taxable year is greater or less than the average capital or proportion thereof so employed during the prewar period, the war profits shall be determined by deducting from the total net income for the taxable year an amount which bears the same proportion to the average annual net income for the prewar period which the average capital or proportion thereof employed during the taxable year bears to the average capital or proportion thereof employed during the prewar period: Provided, That no increase in capital made through stock dividends shall be included in ascertaining the amount of capital employed in the trade or business.

If a taxpayer fails to present satisfactory evidence as to the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period, the war profits shall be determined as provided in section 204.

SEC. 204. That if a corporation, partnership, or individual had no net income from the trade or business during the prewar period, or if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the amount of the war profits shall be the same proportion of the net income of the trade or business received during the taxable year as the proportion which the war profits for the same calendar year of the corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business and whose war profits are determined as provided in section 203, bears to the total net income of the trade or business received by such corporations, partnerships, and individuals. In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual the net income received from sources within the United States during the taxable year shall be used as the basis of computation.

The proportion between the war profits and the net income in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the proportion determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January 2, 1913, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purposes of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income.

If the net income of the trade or business for the taxable year, in the case of a corporation or a partnership which was not in existence or of an individual who was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, is less than 6 per cent per annum on the average capital actually employed in such trade or business (or, in case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, is less than 6 per cent per annum on the average capital actually employed in such trade or business within the United States), there shall be deemed to be no war profits.

SEC. 205. (a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period the net return of any domestic corporation or partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States from a trade or business was low as compared with the net return during such period of the corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the ratio between the net and gross income from such trade or business was substantially less than the like ratio in case of the corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, then the war profits shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 204.

(b) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period the net return of any foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual from a trade or business carried on within the United States was low as compared with the net return during such period of the corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the ratio between the net and gross income from such trade or business was substantially less than the like ratio in case of the corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, then the war profits shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 204.

(c) The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the war profits determined as provided in section 203, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this section may at the time of making the return file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds a tax at like rate computed upon the basis of war profits determined as provided in this section. In such event collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall upon final decision of the application be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title net income of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned (a) for the calendar years 1911 and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909; (b) for the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section II of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by section II of such act of October 3, 1913, shall also be deducted; and (c) for the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, as amended, except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, shall also be deducted.

The net income of a partnership or individual shall be ascertained and returned for the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913 and for the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended, except that the credit allowed by subdivision (b) of section 5 of such act shall also be deducted. There shall be allowed (a) in the case of a domestic partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended; and (b) in the case of a foreign partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 6 of such act as amended.

SEC. 207. That corporations exempt from tax under the provisions of section 11 of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended, and partnerships and individuals carrying on or doing the same business, or coming within the same description, shall be exempt from the provisions of this title.

SEC. 208. That every partnership having a gross income of $5,000 or more for the taxable year, and every individual having such a gross income from a trade or business shall render a correct return of the income of the trade or business for the taxable year, setting forth specifically the gross income for such year, and the deductions allowed in this title. Such returns shall be rendered at the same time and in the same manner and form as is prescribed for income-tax returns under Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended.

SEC. 209. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed, and all provisions of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended, relating to returns and payment of the tax therein imposed, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 210. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any corporation, partnership, or individual, subject to the provisions of this title, to furnish him with such facts, data, and information as in his judgment are necessary to collect the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 211. That Title III (secs. 300 to 312, inclusive) of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, and Title II (secs. 200 to 207, inclusive) of the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, are hereby repealed.

Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed by Title II of such act of March 3, 1917, shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

No tax shall be imposed for the taxable year 1917 under Title III of such act of September 8, 1916.

TITLE III.—WAR TAX ON BEVERAGES.

SEC. 300. That on and after the enactment of this act there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits in bond at that time or that have been or that may be then or thereafter produced in or imported into the United States, except such distilled spirits as are subject to the tax provided in section 304, in addition to the tax now imposed by law, a tax of $1.10 (or, if withdrawn for beverage purposes, a tax of $2.10) on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon, to be paid by the distiller or importer when withdrawn, and collected under the provisions of existing law.

That in addition to the tax under existing law there shall be levied and collected upon all perfumes hereafter imported into the United States containing distilled spirits a tax of $1.10 per wine gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such wine gallon. Such tax shall be collected by the collector of customs and deposited as internal-revenue collections, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. 301. That in addition to the tax imposed on distilled spirits by existing law and under section 300, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on the materials used in the production of such spirits after the enactment of this act the following taxes: On all grains, cereals, and other solid products and materials, a tax of $60 per 100 pounds, and on all molasses, sirups, and other liquid fermentable products and materials, a tax of $5 per wine gallon. Every distiller using any such materials shall keep such records and file such returns and bonds, and the tax shall be paid at such times and in such manner, and subject to such credits, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe or require. Under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, the provisions of this section shall not apply to materials used in the production of distilled spirits withdrawn exclusively for other than beverage purposes or for the fortification of pure sweet wines as defined by the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916; but such spirits shall not be withdrawn for export except upon the application of an accredited representative of a nation at war with the Imperial German Government, or of any neutral nation, in which application it is declared that such spirits are withdrawn for other than beverage purposes.

SEC. 302. That no distilled spirits produced after the enactment of this act shall be imported into the United States from any foreign country, or from the West Indian Islands recently acquired from Denmark (unless produced from products the growth of such islands), or from Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands. Under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the provisions of this section shall not apply to distilled spirits imported for other than beverage purposes.

SEC. 303. That at registered distilleries producing alcohol, or other high-proof spirits, packages may be filled with such spirits reduced to not less than 100 proof from the receiving cisterns and tax paid without being entered into bonded warehouse. Such spirits may also be transferred from the receiving cisterns at such distilleries, by means of pipe lines, direct to storage tanks in the bonded warehouse and may be warehoused in such storage tanks. Such spirits may be also transferred in tanks or tank cars to general bonded warehouses for storage therein, either in storage tanks in such warehouses or in the tanks in which they were transferred. Such spirits may also be transferred after tax payment from receiving cisterns or warehouse storage tanks to tanks or tank cars and may be transported in such tanks or tank cars to the premises of rectifiers of spirits. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby empowered to prescribe all necessary regulations relating to the drawing off, transferring, gauging, storing, and transporting of such spirits; the records to be kept and returns to be made; the size and kind of packages and tanks to be used; the marking, branding, numbering, and stamping of such packages and tanks; the kinds of stamps, if any, to be used; and the time and manner of paying the tax; the kind of bond and the penal sum of same. The tax prescribed by law must be paid before such spirits are removed from the distillery premises, or from general bonded warehouse in the case of spirits transferred thereto, except as otherwise provided by law.

Under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, distilled spirits may hereafter be drawn from receiving cisterns and deposited in distillery warehouses without having affixed to the packages containing the same distillery warehouse stamps, and such packages, when so deposited in warehouse, may be withdrawn therefrom on the original gauge where the same have remained in such warehouse for a period not exceeding 30 days from the date of deposit.

SEC. 304. That upon all distilled spirits produced in or imported into the United States upon which the tax now imposed by law has been paid, and which, on the day this act is enacted, are held by a retailer in a quantity in excess of 50 gallons in the aggregate, or by any other person, corporation, partnership, or association in any quantity, and which are intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax of $1.10 (or, if intended for sale for beverage purposes, a tax of $2.10) on each proof gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof gallon: Provided, That the tax on such distilled spirits in the custody of a court of bankruptcy in insolvency proceedings on June 1, 1917, shall be paid by the person to whom the court delivers such distilled spirits at the time of such delivery, to the extent that the amount thus delivered exceeds the 50 gallons hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 305. That in addition to the tax now imposed or imposed by this act on distilled spirits there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax of 15 cents on each proof gallon and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof gallon on all distilled spirits or wine hereafter rectified, purified, or refined in such manner, and on all mixtures hereafter produced in such manner, that the person so rectifying, purifying, refining, or mixing the same is a rectifier within the meaning of section 3244, Revised Statutes, as amended, and on all such articles in the possession of the rectifier on the day this act is enacted: Provided, That this tax shall not apply to gin produced by the redistillation of a pure spirit over juniper berries and other aromatics.

When the process of rectification is completed and the tax prescribed by this section has been paid, it shall be unlawful for the rectifier or other dealer to reduce in proof or increase in volume such spirits or wine by the addition of water or other substance; nothing herein contained shall, however, prevent a rectifier from using again in the process of rectification spirits already rectified and upon which the tax has theretofore been paid.

The tax imposed by this section shall not attach to cordials or liqueurs on which a tax is imposed and paid under the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, nor to the mixing and blending of wines, where such blending is for the sole purpose of perfecting such wines according to commercial standards, nor to blends made exclusively of two or more pure straight whiskies aged in wood for a period not less than four years and without the addition of coloring or flavoring matter or any other substance than pure water and if not reduced below 90 proof: Provided, That such blended whiskies shall be exempt from tax under this section only when compounded under the immediate supervision of a revenue officer, in such tanks and under such conditions and supervision as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

All distilled spirits taxable under this section shall be subject to uniform regulations concerning the use thereof in the manufacture, blending, compounding, mixing, marking, branding, and sale of whisky and rectified spirits, and no discrimination whatsoever shall be made by reason of a difference in the character of the material from which same may have been produced.

The business of a rectifier of spirits shall be carried on, and the tax on rectified spirits shall be paid, under such rules, regulations, and bonds as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not less than $250 and not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years. He shall, in addition, be liable to double the tax evaded, the same to be recovered, together with the tax, on any bond given by him as rectifier.

SEC. 306. That hereafter collectors of internal revenue shall not furnish wholesale liquor dealer's stamps in lieu of and in exchange for stamps for rectified spirits unless the package covered by stamp for rectified spirits is to be broken into smaller packages.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to discontinue the use of the following stamps whenever in his judgment the interests of the Government will be subserved thereby:

Distillery warehouse, special bonded warehouse, special bonded re-warehouse, general bonded warehouse, general bonded retransfer, transfer brandy, export tobacco, export cigars, export oleomargarine, and export fermented liquor stamps.

SEC. 307. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to require at distilleries, breweries, rectifying houses, and wherever else in his judgment such action may be deemed advisable, the installation of meters, tanks, pipes, or any other apparatus for the purpose of protecting the revenue, and such meters, tanks, and pipes and all necessary labor incident thereto shall be at the expense of the person, corporation, partnership, or association on whose premises the installation is required. Any such person, corporation, partnership, or association refusing or neglecting to install such apparatus when so required by the commissioner shall not be permitted to conduct business on such premises.

SEC. 308. That on and after the enactment of this act there shall be levied and collected on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquor, containing one-half per cent or more of alcohol, brewed or manufactured and sold, or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, in addition to the tax now imposed by law, a tax of $1.50 for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons, and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law.

SEC. 309. That from and after the enactment of this act taxable fermented liquors may be conveyed without payment of tax from the brewery premises where produced to a contiguous industrial distillery of either class established under the act of October 3, 1913, to be used as distilling material, and the residue from such distillation, containing not to exceed one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, which is to be used in making beverages, may be manipulated by cooling, flavoring, carbonating, settling, and filtering on the distillery premises or elsewhere.

The removal of the taxable fermented liquor from the brewery to the distillery and the operation of the distillery and removal of the residue therefrom shall be under the supervision of such officer or officers as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall deem proper, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make such regulations from time to time as may be necessary to give force and effect to this section and to safeguard the revenue.

SEC. 310. (a) That (1) upon all still wines, including vermouth, liqueurs, cordials, artificial or imitation wines, or compounds sold as still wine, which contain more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, and which are hereafter removed from customhouse for sale or consumption, and (2) upon all of the above which are fortified with, or which contain any product fortified with, grape brandy or wine spirits, and which are hereafter produced in the United States and removed from the place of manufacture, or from bonded premises, for sale or consumption, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the tax now imposed by law upon such articles, a tax of $1.10 on each proof gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof gallon, to be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law.

(b) Upon (1) all of the articles enumerated in subdivision (a) which are hereafter produced in the United States and which are not fortified with, or do not contain any product fortified with, grape brandy or wine spirits, and which are removed from the place of manufacture or from bonded premises for sale or consumption, and (2) all of the articles enumerated in subdivision (a) containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, and which are removed from customhouse, place of manufacture, or bonded premises, for sale or consumption, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the tax now imposed by law upon such articles, a tax equivalent to the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law, to be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law.

(c) Upon champagne, sparkling wines, and artificially carbonated wines, hereafter produced in or imported into the United States and removed from customhouse, place of manufacture, or bonded premises, for sale or consumption, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the tax now imposed by law upon such articles, a tax equal to double the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law, to be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law.

(d) Whoever has possession of any empty cask or package which has been used for wine or any article taxable under this section or under subdivision (a) or (c) of section 402 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, and on which the stamp or any mark denoting payment of tax has not been effectually destroyed or obliterated, or reuses any such cask or package, having thereon any such stamp or mark previously so used, shall for each such offense be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both; and all such casks or packages, and their contents in the case of reuse, shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 311. That upon all articles specified in section 310 upon which the tax now imposed by law has been paid and which are on the day this act is enacted held in excess of 25 gallons in the aggregate of such articles and intended for sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax equal to the tax imposed by such section.

SEC. 312. That upon all grape brandy or wine spirits withdrawn by a producer of wines from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse under subdivision (c) of section 402 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in addition to the tax therein imposed a tax of $1 per proof gallon, to be assessed, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 313. That upon all sweet wines held for sale by the producer thereof upon the day this act is enacted there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid an additional tax equivalent to $1 per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of such wine, and an additional tax of $1 per proof gallon shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all grape brandy or wine spirits withdrawn by a producer of sweet wines for the purpose of fortifying such wines and not so used prior to the enactment of this act.

SEC. 315. That each such manufacturer, producer, bottler, or importer shall make monthly returns under oath to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business, containing such information necessary for the assessment of the tax, and at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe.

TITLE IV.—WAR TAX ON CIGARS, TOBACCO, AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

SEC. 400. That upon cigars and cigarettes, which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the taxes now imposed by existing law, the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof: (a) On cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, 25 cents per thousand; (b) on cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, if manufactured or imported to retail at 4 cents or more each and not more than 7 cents each, $1 per thousand; (c) if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 7 cents each and not more than 15 cents each, $3 per thousand; (d) if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents each and not more than 20 cents each, $5 per thousand; (e) if manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each, $7 per thousand: Provided, That the word "retail" as used in this section shall mean the ordinary retail price of a single cigar, and that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, by regulation, require the manufacturer or importer to affix to each box or container a conspicuous label indicating by letter the clause of this section under which the cigars therein contained have been tax-paid, which must correspond with the tax-paid stamp on said box or container; (f) on cigarettes made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, made in or imported into the United States, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, 76 cents per thousand; weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $1.20 per thousand.

Every manufacturer of cigarettes (including small cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand) shall put up all the cigarettes and such small cigars that he manufactures or has manufactured for him, and sells or removes for consumption or use, in packages or parcels containing 5, 8, 10, 12, 15, 16, 20, 24, 40, 50, 80, or 100 cigarettes each, and shall securely affix to each of said packages or parcels a suitable stamp denoting the tax thereon and shall properly cancel the same prior to such sale or removal for consumption or use under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all cigarettes imported from a foreign country shall be packed, stamped, and the stamps canceled in a like manner, in addition to the import stamp indicating inspection of the customhouse before they are withdrawn therefrom.

SEC. 401. That upon all tobacco and snuff hereafter manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be levied and collected, in addition to the tax now imposed by law upon such articles, a tax of 4 cents per pound, to be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law.

In addition to the packages provided for under existing law, manufactured tobacco and snuff may be put up and prepared by the manufacturer for sale or consumption in packages of the following description: Packages containing one-eighth, three-eighths, five-eighths, seven-eighths, 1½, 1¾, 1½, 1¾, and 5 ounces.

SEC. 402. That so much of section 400 as imposes a tax upon cigars, and the whole of section 401, shall take effect 10 days after the enactment of this act. That section 404 and so much of section 400 as imposes a tax upon cigarettes and as relates to packages or parcels in which cigarettes may be put up shall take effect 10 days after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 403. That there shall also be levied and collected, upon all manufactured tobacco and snuff in excess of 100 pounds at any one place of business and upon cigars in excess of 500 at any one place of business and upon cigarettes in excess of 1,000 at any one place of business, which were manufactured or imported and removed from factory or customhouse prior to the enactment of this act, bearing tax-paid stamps affixed to such articles for the payment of the taxes thereon, and which are, on the day this act is enacted, held and intended for sale by any person, corporation, partnership, or association, and upon all manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, or cigarettes, removed from factory or customhouse after the enactment of this act but prior to the time when the tax is imposed by section 400 or section 401 upon such articles takes effect, an additional tax equal to one-half the tax imposed by such sections upon such articles.

SEC. 404. That there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon cigarette paper made up into packages, books, sets, or tubes, made up in or imported into the United States and intended for use by the smoker in making cigarettes the following taxes: On each package, book, or set, containing more than 25 but not more than 50 papers, one-half of 1 cent; containing more than 50 but not more than 100 papers, 1 cent; containing more than 100 papers, 1 cent for each 100 papers or fractional part thereof; and upon tubes, 2 cents for each 100 tubes or fractional part thereof.

TITLE X.—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 1000. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in the United States, upon articles coming into the United States from the West Indian Islands acquired from Denmark, a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon like articles of domestic manufacture; such articles shipped from said islands to the United States shall be exempt from the payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of said islands: Provided, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in said islands, upon articles imported from the United States, a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in said islands upon like articles there manufactured; and such articles going into said islands from the United States shall be exempt from payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 1001. That all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to and made a part of this act, and every person, corporation, partnership, or association liable to any tax imposed by this act, or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records and render, under oath, such statements and returns, and shall comply with such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 1002. That where additional taxes are imposed by this act upon articles or commodities, upon which the tax imposed by existing law has been paid, the person, corporation, partnership, or association required by this act to pay the tax shall, within 30 days after its enactment, make return under oath in such form and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. Payment of the tax shown to be due may be extended to a date not exceeding four months from the enactment of this act, upon the filing of a bond for payment in such form and amount and with such sureties as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Sec. 1003. That in all cases where the method of collecting the tax imposed by this act is not specifically provided, the tax shall be collected in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. All administrative and penalty provisions of Title VIII of this act, in so far as applicable, shall apply to the collection of any tax which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue determines or prescribes shall be paid by stamp.

Sec. 1004. That whoever fails to make any return required by this act or the regulations made under authority thereof within the time prescribed or who makes any false or fraudulent return, and whoever evades or attempts to evade any tax imposed by this act or fails to collect or truly to account for and pay over any such tax, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and in addition thereto a penalty of double the tax evaded, or not collected, or accounted for and paid over, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected, in any case in which the punishment is not otherwise specifically provided.

Sec. 1005. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

Sec. 1006. That where the rate of tax imposed by this act, payable by stamps, is an increase over previously existing rates, stamps on hand in the collectors' offices and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue may continue to be used until the supply on hand is exhausted, but shall be sold and accounted for at the rates provided by this act, and assessment shall be made against manufacturers and other taxpayers having such stamps on hand on the day this act takes effect for the difference between the amount paid for such stamps and the tax due at the rates provided by this act.

Sec. 1007. That (a) if any person, corporation, partnership, or association has prior to May 9, 1917, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale, after the tax takes effect, of any article upon which a tax is imposed under Title III or IV, or under this section, and (b) if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of such tax to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the vendee shall, in lieu of the vendor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price.

The taxes payable by the vendee under this section shall be paid to the vendor at the time the sale is consummated, and collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 503.

The term "dealer" as used in this section includes a vendee who purchases any article with intent to use it in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale.

Sec. 1008. That in the payment of any tax under this act not payable by stamp a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to one cent.

Sec. 1009. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, require all internal-revenue taxpayers who are required by law to render returns to pay without prior levy, assessment, or notice, and at the same time as the return is required to be made, or in monthly installments thereafter, any such internal-revenue tax or portion thereof, any provision of law fixing any other time as the time when such tax is due to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That the whole of such tax shall be paid before the expiration of the time fixed by law for such payment. All penalties provided by existing law for failure to render return and pay tax when due are hereby made applicable to any failure to pay the tax at the time required by such regulations.

Sec. 1010. That collectors of internal revenue are authorized to receive at par certificates of indebtedness issued under section 6 of the act entitled "An act to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes," approved April 24, 1917, and uncertified checks in payment of income and war profits taxes, during such time and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; but if a check so received is not paid by the bank on which it is drawn the person by whom such check has been tendered shall remain liable for the payment of the tax and for all legal penalties and additions the same as if such check had not been tendered.

TITLE XII.—INCOME-TAX AMENDMENTS.

Sec. 1200. That subdivision (a) of section 2 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(a) That, subject only to such exemptions and deductions as are hereinafter allowed, the net income of a taxable person shall include gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, businesses, trade, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in real or personal property, also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever: Provided, That the term 'dividends' as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividends shall be considered income, to the amount of the earnings or profits so distributed: Provided further, That any distribution made to the shareholders of a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company in the year 1917 or subsequent tax years shall be deemed to have been made from the net income of the year in which such distribution is made, or if such income is insufficient, from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, and shall constitute a part of the annual income of the shareholder for the respective years in which earned by the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, and shall be taxed to the shareholder at the rate prescribed by law for such years."

Sec. 1201. (1) That paragraphs 2 and 3 of subdivision (a) of section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Second. All interest paid within the year on his indebtedness except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title;

"Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes) or of its Territories, or possessions, or any foreign country, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits;"

(2) Subdivision (c) of section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby repealed.

Sec. 1202. (1) That paragraphs second and third of subdivision (a) of section 6 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Second. The proportion of all interest paid within the year by such person on his indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) which the gross amount of his income for the year derived from sources within the United States bears to the gross amount of his income for the year derived from all sources within and without the United States, but this deduction shall be allowed only if such person includes in the return required by section 8 all the information necessary for its calculation;

"Third. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories or possessions, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits;"

(2) Subdivision (b) of section 6 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) There shall also be allowed the same credit as specified in subdivision (b) of section 5, and likewise a credit for the amount of income, the normal tax on which has been paid or withheld for payment at the source of the income under the provisions of this title."

(3) Section 6 of such act of September 8, 1916, is also further amended by adding a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(c) A nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits provided for in this section only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector of internal revenue a true and accurate return of his total income received from all sources, corporate or otherwise, in the United States, in the manner prescribed by this title; and in case of his failure to file such return the collector shall collect the tax on such income, and all property belonging to such nonresident alien individual shall be liable to distraint for the tax."

Sec. 1203. (1) That section 7 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. That for the purpose of the normal tax only, there shall be allowed as an exemption in the nature of a deduction from the amount of the net income of each citizen or resident of the United States, ascertained as provided herein, the sum of $3,000, plus $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a head of a family or a married man with a wife living with him, or plus the sum of $1,000 additional if the person making the return be a married woman with a husband living with her; but in no event shall this additional exemption of $1,000 be deducted by both a husband and a wife: Provided, That only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of both husband and wife when living together: Provided further, That if the person making the return is the head of a family there shall be an additional exemption of $200 for each child dependent upon such person, if under 18 years of age, or if incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective, but this provision shall operate only in the case of one parent in the same family: Provided further, That guardians or trustees shall be allowed to make this personal exemption as to income derived from the property of which such guardian or trustee has charge in favor of each ward or cestui que trust: Provided further, That in no event shall a ward or cestui que trust be allowed a greater personal exemption than $3,000, or, if married, $4,000, as provided in this section, from the amount of net income received from all sources. There shall also be allowed an exemption from the amount of the net income of estates of deceased citizens or residents of the United States during the period of administration or settlement, and of trust or other estates of citizens or residents of the United States the income of which is not distributed annually or regularly under the provisions of subdivision (b) of section 2, the sum of $3,000, including such deductions as are allowed under section 5."

(2) Subdivision (b) of section 7 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby repealed.

Sec. 1204. (1) That subdivisions (c) and (e) of section 8 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Guardians, trustees, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and all persons, corporations, or associations, acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a return of the income of the person, trust, or estate for whom or which they act, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals. Such fiduciary shall make oath that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such person, trust, or estate to enable him to make such return and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals: Provided, That a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries filed in the district where such fiduciary resides, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this paragraph: Provided further, That no return of income not exceeding $3,000 shall be required except as in this title otherwise provided.

"(e) Persons carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity, and the share of the profits of the partnership to which any taxable partner would be entitled if the same were divided, whether divided or otherwise, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid under the provisions of this title: Provided, That from the net distributive interests on which the individual members shall be liable for tax, normal and additional, there shall be excluded their proportionate shares received from interest on the obligations of a State or any political or taxing subdivision thereof, and upon the obligations of the United States and its possessions, and that for the purpose of computing the normal tax there shall be allowed a credit, as provided by section 5, subdivision (b), for their proportionate share of the profits derived from dividends. Such partnership, when requested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or any district collector, shall render a correct return of the earnings, profits, and income of the partnership, except income exempt under section 4 of this act, setting forth the item of the gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title, and the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to the net earnings, profits, and income, if distributed. A partnership shall have the same privilege of fixing and making returns upon the basis of its own fiscal year as is accorded to corporations under this title. The share of the profits of a partnership in which any taxable partner would be entitled for a fiscal year ending in 1916, or subsequent tax years for which the rates of tax have been or shall be changed by law, shall be returned for taxation and the tax paid under the respective rates applicable to each calendar year in the proportion that the period of each calendar year bears to the full fiscal year."

(2) Subdivision (d) of section 8 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 1205. (1) That subdivisions (b), (f), and (g) of section 9 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) All persons, corporations, partnerships, associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income of any nonresident alien individual, other than income derived from dividends on capital stock, or from the net earnings of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as provided in this title, are hereby authorized and required to deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income such sum as will be sufficient to pay the normal tax imposed thereon by this title, and shall pay the amount withheld to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same; and they are each hereby made personally liable for such tax, and they are each hereby indemnified against every person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company, or demand whatsoever for all payments which they shall make in pursuance and by virtue of this title.

"(f) All persons, corporations, partnerships, or associations, undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under this title, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and whoever knowingly undertakes to collect such payments as aforesaid without having obtained a license therefor, or without complying with such regulations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and for each offense be fined in a sum not exceeding $5,000, or imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"(g) The tax herein imposed upon gains, profits, and incomes not falling under the foregoing and not returned and paid by virtue of the foregoing or as otherwise provided by law shall be assessed by personal return under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The intent and purpose of this title is that all gains, profits, and income of a taxable class, as defined by this title, shall be charged and assessed with the corresponding tax, normal and additional, prescribed by this title, and said tax shall be paid by the owner of such income, or the proper representative having the receipt, custody, control, or disposal of the same. For the purpose of this title ownership or liability shall be determined as of the year for which a return is required to be rendered.

"The provisions of this section relating to the deduction and payment of the tax at the source of income shall only apply to the normal tax hereinbefore imposed upon nonresident alien individuals."

(2) Subdivisions (c), (d), and (e) of section 9 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 1206. (1) That the first paragraph of section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized in the United States, no matter how created or organized, but not including partnerships, a tax of 2 per cent upon such income; and a like tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually upon the total net income received in the preceding calendar year from all sources within the United States by every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, organized, authorized, or existing under the laws of any foreign country, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including the income derived from dividends on capital stock or from net earnings of resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, whose net income is taxable under this title: Provided, That the term 'dividends' as used in this title shall be held to mean any distribution made or ordered to be made by a corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, out of its earnings or profits accrued since March 1, 1913, and payable to its shareholders, whether in cash or in stock of the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, which stock dividend shall be considered income, to the amount of the earnings or profits so distributed: Provided further, That any distribution made to the shareholders of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, in the year 1917, or subsequent tax years, shall be deemed to have been made from the net income of the year in which such distribution is made or, if such income is insufficient, from the most recently accumulated undivided profits or surplus, and shall constitute a part of the annual income of the shareholder for the respective years in which earned by the corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company, and shall be taxed to the shareholder at the rate prescribed by law for such years."

(2) Section 10 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision as follows:

"(b) In addition to the income tax imposed by subdivision (a) of this section there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid annually an additional tax of 10 per cent upon the amount remaining undistributed six months after the end of each calendar or fiscal year, of the total net income of every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, received during the year, as determined for the purposes of the tax imposed by such subdivision (a), but including the amount allowed as a credit under subdivision (d) of section 12.

"The foregoing tax rate shall apply to the undistributed net income received by every taxable corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company in the calendar year 1917 and in each year thereafter, except that if it has fixed its own fiscal year under the provisions of existing law, the foregoing rate shall apply to the proportion of the taxable undistributed net income returned for the fiscal year ending prior to December 31, 1917, which the period between January 1, 1917, and the end of such fiscal year bears to the whole of such fiscal year."

SEC. 1207. (1) That paragraphs 3 and 4 of subdivision (a) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the sum of (a) the entire amount of the paid-up capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, or, if no capital stock, the entire amount of capital employed in the business at the close of the year, and (b) one-half of its interest-bearing indebtedness then outstanding: Provided, That for the purpose of this title preferred capital stock shall not be considered interest-bearing indebtedness, and interest or dividends paid upon this stock shall not be deductible from gross income: Provided further, That in cases wherein shares of capital stock are issued without par or nominal value, the amount of paid-up capital stock, within the meaning of this section, as represented by such shares, will be the amount of cash, or its equivalent, paid or transferred to the corporation as a consideration for such shares: Provided further, That in the case of indebtedness wholly secured by property collateral, tangible or intangible, the subject of sale or hypothecation in the ordinary business of such corporation, joint-stock company or association as a dealer only in the property constituting such collateral, or in loaning the funds thereby procured, the total interest paid by such corporation, company, or association within the year on any such indebtedness may be deducted as a part of its expenses of doing business, but interest on such indebtedness shall only be deductible on an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the actual value of such property collateral: Provided further, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness, which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed, or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty, shall be allowed; and in the case of a bank, banking association, loan or trust company, interest paid within the year on deposits or on moneys received for investment and secured by interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued by such bank, banking association, loan or trust company:

"Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories, or possessions, or any foreign country, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, not including those assessed against local benefits."

(2) Paragraphs third and fourth of subdivision (b) of section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. The amount of interest paid within the year on its indebtedness (except on indebtedness incurred for the purchase of obligations or securities the interest upon which is exempt from taxation as income under this title) to an amount of such indebtedness not in excess of the proportion of the sum of (a) the entire amount of the paid-up capital stock outstanding at the close of the year, or, if no capital stock, the entire amount of the capital employed in the business at the close of the year, and (b) one-half of its interest-bearing indebtedness then outstanding, which the gross amount of its income for the year from business transacted and capital invested within the United States bears to the gross amount of its income derived from all sources within and without the United States: Provided, That in the case of bonds or other indebtedness which have been issued with a guaranty that the interest payable thereon shall be free from taxation, no deduction for the payment of the tax herein imposed or any other tax paid pursuant to such guaranty shall be allowed; and in case of a bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof, interest paid within the year on deposits by or on moneys received for investment from either citizens or residents of the United States and secured by interest-bearing certificates of indebtedness issued by such bank, banking association, loan or trust company, or branch thereof:

"Fourth. Taxes paid within the year imposed by the authority of the United States (except income and war-profits taxes), or of its Territories, or possessions, or by the authority of any State, county, school district, or municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State, paid within the United States, not including those assessed against local benefits."

(3) Section 12 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby further amended by adding a new subdivision, as follows:

"CREDITS."

"(d) For the purpose of the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10, the income embraced in a return of a corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company shall be credited with the amount received as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of any other corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, which is taxable upon its net income as provided in this title, less that proportion of such amount which the amount received by the distributing corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company from similar sources bears to the entire net income of such distributing corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company."

SEC. 1208. (1) That subdivision (c) of section 13 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) All the provisions of this title relating to the tax authorized and required to be deducted and withheld and paid to the officer of the United States Government authorized to receive the same from the income of nonresident alien individuals from sources within the United States shall be made applicable to the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 10 upon incomes derived from interest upon bonds and mortgages or deeds of trust or similar obligations of domestic or other resident corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies by nonresident alien firms, copartnerships, companies, corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, and insurance companies, not engaged in business or trade within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein."

(2) Subdivision (f) of section 13 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 1209. That section 18 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

SEC. 18. That any person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company liable to make a return or to supply information required under this title who refuses or neglects to make such return or to supply such information at the time or times herein specified in each year shall be liable, except as otherwise specially provided in this title, to a penalty of not less than $20 nor more than $1,000. Any individual or any officer of any corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company required by law to make, render, sign, or verify any return or to supply any information who makes any false or fraudulent return or statement with intent to defeat or evade the assessment required by this title to be made shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $2,000 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, with the costs of prosecution: Provided, That where any tax heretofore due and payable has been duly paid by the taxpayer it shall not be re-collected from any withholding agent required to retain it at its source, nor shall any penalty be imposed or collected in such cases from the taxpayer or such withholding agent whose duty it was to retain it for failure to return or pay the same unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment."

SEC. 1210. That section 26 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by the act entitled "An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, is hereby amended to read as follows:

SEC. 26. Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company subject to the tax herein imposed, when required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall render a correct return, duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, whether made in cash or its equivalent or in stock, including the names and addresses of stockholders and the number of shares owned by each, and the tax years and the applicable amounts in which such dividends were earned, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

SEC. 1211. That Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended by adding to Part III five new sections, as follows:

SEC. 27. That every person, corporation, partnership, or association doing business as a broker on any exchange or board of trade, or other similar place of business, shall, when required by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, render a correct return, duly verified under oath, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, showing the names of customers for whom such person, corporation, partnership, or association has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid.

SEC. 28. That all persons, corporations, partnerships, associations, and insurance companies, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, trustees acting in any trust capacity, executors, administrators, receivers, conservators, and employers, making payment to another person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensation, remuneration, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments described in sections 26 and 27), of $800 or more in any taxable year, or in the case of such payments made by the United States, the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, are hereby authorized and required to render a true and accurate return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations and in such form and manner as may be prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment: Provided, That such returns shall be required, regardless of amounts, in the case of payments of interest upon bonds and mortgages or deeds of trust or other similar obligations of corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, and insurance companies, and in the case of collections of items (not payable in the United States) of interest upon the bonds of foreign countries and interest from the bonds and dividends from the stock of foreign corporations by persons, corporations, partnerships, or associations, undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of such interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange.

"When necessary to make effective the provisions of this section the name and address of the recipient of income shall be furnished upon demand of the person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company paying the income.

"The provisions of this section shall apply to the calendar year 1917 and each calendar year thereafter.

SEC. 29. That in assessing income tax the net income embraced in the return shall also be credited with the amount of any war-profits tax imposed by act of Congress and assessed for the same calendar or fiscal year upon the taxpayer.

SEC. 30. That nothing in section 2 of the act approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," or in this title, shall be construed as taxing the income of foreign governments received from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other domestic securities.

SEC. 31. That all contracts entered into after the enactment of this amendment by which any person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company agrees to pay any portion of the tax imposed by this title upon any other person, corporation, association, or insurance company, or to reimburse such person, corporation, association, or insurance company for any portion of such tax, shall be void, and any person, corporation, partnership, association, or insurance company entering into such a contract shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 1212. That any amount heretofore withheld by any withholding agent as required by Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, on account of the tax imposed upon the income of any individual, a citizen or resident of the United States, for the calendar year 1917, shall be released and paid over to such individual, and the entire tax upon the income of such individual for such year shall be assessed and collected in the manner prescribed by such act as amended by this act.

SEC. 1213. Amend paragraph (b) of section 14 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, to read as follows:

(b) When the assessment shall be made, as provided in this title, the returns, together with any corrections thereof which may have been made by the commissioner, shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and shall constitute public records and be open to inspection as such: Provided, That the proper officers of any State imposing a general income tax may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to said returns or to an abstract thereof, showing the name and income of each such corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

SEC. 1214. Amend section 3167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 16 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, by adding thereto a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Provided, That there shall be open to public inspection at the office of the collectors of internal revenue a list or lists setting forth the net amount of taxable incomes paid thereon by every individual in their respective districts, and that copies of such lists shall likewise be open to public inspection at the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, D. C."

SEC. 1215. That the Tariff Commission be, and it hereby is, directed to investigate into additional sources of revenue for the information of Congress in levying such additional taxes as may be required for the prosecution of the war, and that such commission shall report to Congress on the first Tuesday in January, 1918, or prior to that date. The commission shall inquire into the methods of taxation adopted by the Governments of France and England.

SEC. 1302. That unless otherwise herein specifically provided, this act shall take effect on the day following its enactment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the former vote and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Again transferring my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on previous votes, I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 65, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Borah	Hardwick	Jones, Wash.	Norris
Brady	Hollis	Kenyon	Reed
Gore	Husting	La Follette	Vardaman
Gronna	Johnson, Cal.	McNary

NAYS—65.

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sterling
Brandagee	Kellogg	Pittman	Stone
Calder	Kendrick	Polindexter	Sutherland
Chamberlain	King	Pomerene	Swanson
Colt	Kirby	Ransdell	Thompson
Curtis	Knox	Robinson	Trammell
Dillingham	Lewis	Saulsbury	Underwood
Fall	Lodge	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Fernald	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Fletcher	McKellar	Sherman	Watson
France	Martin	Shields	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Simmons	Williams
Gerry	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Hale	New	Smith, Md.
Harding	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
James	Overman	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—16.

Ashurst	Gallinger	McLean	Thomas
Broussard	Goff	Owen	Tillman
Culberson	Hitchcock	Phelan	Townsend
Cummins	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's substitute was rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I submit an amendment to come in on page 98 as an amendment to the amendment heretofore adopted to section 1105. I understand the chairman of the committee agrees to accept it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, at the end of section 1105, insert as a new paragraph:

That where postmasters at offices of the third class are granted leave without pay for military purposes, the Postmaster General may allow, in addition to the maximum amount which may now be allowed such offices for clerk hire, in accordance with the act of Congress, an amount not to exceed 50 per cent of the salary of the postmaster.

Mr. SIMMONS. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to have it understood that I have made a reservation in regard to the inheritance tax. I wish to state the form so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair inquire whether the amendment was rejected as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. OWEN. It was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator can offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I wish, then, to present it so as to preserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate. I did not frame the language before exactly as I wanted it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the Senator can offer the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I reserve the right to offer the amendment on the inheritance tax in the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to inquire whether the RECORD shows that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] reserved the right to offer an amendment in the Senate and ask for a separate vote thereon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the RECORD does not show it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not see the junior Senator from Massachusetts in his seat when I looked around, and that led me to ask the question, but I understood him to so advise the Chair several days ago at the time the McKellar amendment was adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] reserved it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply desired that the Senator's right should not be foreclosed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has reserved a separate vote on that question. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no further amendment be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole has made sundry amendments to the bill. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except as to those cases where questions have been reserved. Without objection the amendments will be concurred in. The Chair hears no objection. The bill is in the Senate and is still open to amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I present the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 78—

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Secretary to read the language of the House provision as stricken out down to the fourth line, inclusive, on page 78, and then begin with what I have written. It is the House provision which was stricken out with that addition.

The SECRETARY. On page 76, Title IX, War estate tax, reinsert the portion in the House text that has been stricken out and insert in addition the following:

SEC. 900. That in addition to the tax imposed by section 200, etc., the following:

One per cent additional on each additional $1,000,000 or major part thereof until such tax shall amount to 40 per cent, and on any amount in excess of $30,000,000 there shall be imposed a tax of 40 per cent.

From such taxes on inheritances the amount of inheritance tax imposed by the then existing laws of the State up to and not exceeding one-half of the amount collected shall be paid over to the proper officers of the State upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to read the amendment so that the Senate will understand it. I do not believe it will understand it as it has been read.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think the Senator can read his amendment and make an explanation of it.

Mr. OWEN. I am not going to make any explanation. I wish to read my amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It has been read.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has been read by the Secretary.

Mr. OWEN. It has been stated by the Secretary but not read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, which is the only proper course under the rule.

Mr. OWEN. Then, I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment beginning at line 19.

The Secretary proceeded to read Mr. OWEN's amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. OWEN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request for unanimous consent which has been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was to dispense with the further reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. Objection was made, and the Secretary will continue the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment, which is as follows:

TITLE IX.—INHERITANCE TAX.

SEC. 900. That in addition to the tax imposed by section 201 of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, as amended—

(a) A tax equal to the following percentages of its value is hereby imposed upon the transfer of each net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, the transfer of which is taxable under such section (the value of such net estate to be determined as provided in Title II of such act of September 8, 1916):

One-half of 1 per cent of the amount of such net estate not in excess of $50,000.

One per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

One and one-half per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

Two per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

Two and one-half per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

Three per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

Three and one-half per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

Four per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

Four and one-half per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

Five per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

Seven per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $11,000,000;

Ten per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $11,000,000 and does not exceed $15,000,000; and

Fifteen per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $15,000,000; and 1 per cent additional on each additional $1,000,000 or major part thereof until such tax shall amount to 40 per cent; and on any amount in excess of $30,000,000 there shall be imposed a tax of 40 per cent.

From such taxes on inheritances the amount of inheritance tax imposed by the then existing laws of the State up to and not exceeding one-half of the amount collected shall be paid over to the proper officers of the State upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 203 of the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end of subdivision (a) a further paragraph No. (3), so that section 203 will read as follows:

"SEC. 203. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

"(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

"(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, and from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, and such other charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered;

"(2) An exemption of $50,000; and

"(3) All bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts to the United States, or to any State, or to any political division thereof, for exclusively public purposes, and all bequests, legacies, devises, or gifts for uses of a religious, literary, charitable, or educational character, or for the encouragement of art, or to societies for the prevention of cruelty to children or for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

"(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States that proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated. But no deductions shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 203 the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. That is the same amendment that I offered before, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUSTING. If in order, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to section 201, at line 14, page 14, a new paragraph (c) to read:

(c) For the purposes of this title, corporations, partnerships, and individuals receiving rentals and royalties shall be deemed to be engaged in business, and the net income derived from such sources shall be subject to the tax herein imposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HUSTING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HUSTING. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, on September 5 I reserved the right to present to the Senate an amendment which I then offered, and I think the RECORD will so disclose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of that part of section 200 beginning with line 1, on page 12, and ending with the word "business," in line 8, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

The term "prewar period" shall be taken to be any two of the three years 1911, 1912, and 1913, said two years to be selected by the taxpayer.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be again stated. I did not understand it.

Mr. NEW. I propose in the amendment to take two of the three prewar years.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, under the title "Excess war profits," on page 13, line 12, in the bracket exceeding 100 per cent and not exceeding 150 per cent, I move to strike out "150 per cent" and to insert "133 1/3 per cent."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I reserved the right to have a separate vote on what is known as the McKellar amendment, and I now ask for a vote upon that amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I think the amendment has been stated several times.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I asked that the amendment be stated, but I will not insist upon that if I can get information as to the manner in which it is proposed. Is it proposed to strike out the House provision on this subject and to insert the McKellar amendment, or in what form is the amendment proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the McKellar amendment is now a substitute for the House provision; it has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole. If we now reject the McKellar amendment the House provision will remain in the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee must have been offered in the form of a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a division of the question so that we may have a separate vote on the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course a motion to strike out and insert can not be divided.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WEEKS. The status, as I understand, is this: The House sent a proposition to the Senate which was tantamount to a zone system; the Senate committee substituted for that a proposition increasing the rate; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, substituted the McKellar amendment for that. If the McKellar amendment is now voted out of the bill, will the House provision then be adopted or will it be necessary to make a motion to strike out the House provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to ascertain the condition in which the matter now is.

Mr. SMOOT. If the McKellar amendment is not concurred in, then a motion to strike out the House provision will be in order.

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will endeavor to answer the question already asked, if the Senator from Tennessee will permit. The Chair finds that the House provision was stricken out and that the McKellar amendment, so called, was inserted as a different provision and not in connection with the motion to strike out. Therefore, if the Senate refuses to concur in the McKellar amendment, the House provision, which was previously stricken out, will still be left out.

Mr. JAMES. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, it was not offered as a substitute for the House provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands it was not.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, is the question on agreeing to the amendment that I offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCKELLAR. If that is the way the question comes up, those in favor of the amendment will vote "yea" and those opposed to it will vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the form of the vote. The question now is on concurring in the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee and agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing his position on this question, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. HITCHCOCK's name was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] on this vote. If the Senator from Texas were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I regret that when his name was called I neglected to state that he had been called out of the Chamber on official business. Under the circumstances I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am unable to secure a transfer of that pair on this vote, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on previous votes, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Bankhead	La Follette	Pomerene	Sutherland
Beckham	Lewis	Reed	Swanson
Broussard	McKellar	Robinson	Thompson
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth	Trammell
Hardwick	Martin	Sheppard	Underwood
James	Myers	Shields	Vardaman
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Kenyon	Overman	Smith, Md.
Kirby	Pittman	Smith, S. C.

NAYS—40.

Borah	Curtis	Gerry	Jones, N. Mex.
Brady	Dillingham	Hale	Jones, Wash.
Brandeggee	Fall	Hollis	Kellogg
Calder	Fernald	Husting	Kendrick
Colt	France	Johnson, Cal.	King

Lodge	Page	Sherman	Wadsworth
Nelson	Penrose	Smith, Mich.	Watson
New	Poindexter	Smoot	Weeks
Newlands	Ransdell	Sterling	Williams
Owen	Saulsbury	Stone	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—22.

Ashurst	Gallinger	Knox	Thomas
Chamberlain	Goff	McCumber	Tillman
Culberson	Gore	McLean	Townsend
Cummins	Harding	Phelan	Walsh
Fletcher	Hitchcock	Simmons
Frelinghuysen	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, in the Committee of the Whole I reserved a separate vote on the parcel-post question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we have not yet disposed of this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is out of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was—I was so informed, I think, by the Chair—that the committee amendment was not offered in connection with the part that was stricken out of the House bill relating to increase in second-class rates, but it was offered as a substitute for section 1101 reported by the committee. Now, having been rejected as a substitute for that, the vote comes upon section 1101 reported by the committee, making an increase of one-fourth a cent a pound or fraction of a pound; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not fully understand the inquiry of the Senator from Washington and will ascertain what the exact condition was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My point is this, Mr. President, if I may be allowed to state it: That the Senate is entitled to a vote upon the proposition of any increase of these rates at all. We have not had it yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must have before him the bill as proposed in order to understand the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee substitute was never agreed to. This was a substitute for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say to the Senate that in making the statement in response to a prior inquiry he was misinformed regarding the motion which had been made, which was a motion to strike out and insert the words proposed by the committee. The McKellar amendment was substituted for the amendment proposed by the committee and was part of the motion to strike out and insert; so that upon the failure of that motion, which the Chair construes has occurred as a result of the recent vote, the House provisions of the bill now remain.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before that motion is put may I inquire what has become of the proposed committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was never adopted. It could not be adopted. A vote was not had on it because, in the Committee of the Whole, a substitute was made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But that vote recurred in the Senate when the substitute was rejected; so it seems to me that the proposed committee amendment remains if the substitute for it is rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would it now be in order, before the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is put, to offer a substitute for the House provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would undoubtedly be in order. It would be a question of the precedence of the motions. The Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is in order now. It is merely a motion to strike out.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move to strike out and insert the matter which I send to the desk, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks motions must be put in the order in which they are made, and rules that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] moved to strike out the House provision. That had already been done by a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; that has not been done.

Mr. JAMES. That was a committee proposal.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, as a matter of parliamentary law and practice of this body, does not a motion to perfect a section by proposing a substitute therefor take precedence over a simple motion to strike out the section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the motion is to strike out and insert, the Chair thinks so.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then, Mr. President, as a privileged motion, I move to strike out and insert the matter which I send to the desk.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The vote on the division that was demanded by the Senator from Utah having been taken, can other motions to substitute come up when they were not reserved in the Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that any motion to amend this bill is in order now if it has not been determined already.

Mr. HARDWICK. As an amendment having priority under the rules, I move to strike out the section and to insert in lieu thereof the matter which I send to the desk.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it seems to me that my motion is a motion perfecting the amendment, and therefore it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In order to have no mistake about it, the Chair will put the motion of the Senator from Georgia, and then a motion to strike out will certainly be in order under the rules. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words in the House bill as restored it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 1101. That the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter, including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year, when sent by the publisher thereof from the office of publication, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale, shall be 1 cent a pound or fraction thereof for the portion of the publication devoted to reading matter other than advertising; and for that portion devoted to advertising the rates a pound or fraction of a pound for delivery within the several zones applicable to fourth-class matter shall be as follows: From December 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, for the first and second zones, 1 cent; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 1½ cents; for the fifth zone, 2½ cents; for the sixth zone, 2½ cents; for the seventh zone, 3½ cents; for the eighth zone, 3½ cents. From July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919, for the first and second zones, 1 cent; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 2½ cents; for the fifth zone, 3½ cents; for the sixth zone, 4½ cents; for the seventh zone, 5½ cents; for the eighth zone, 6½ cents. From July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, for the first and second zones, 1 cent; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 3½ cents; for the fifth zone, 4½ cents; for the sixth zone, 6½ cents; for the seventh zone, 7½ cents; for the eighth zone, 9½ cents. From July 1, 1920, and thereafter, for the first and second zones, 1 cent; for the third zone, 2 cents; for the fourth zone, 4 cents; for the fifth zone, 6 cents; for the sixth zone, 8 cents; for the seventh zone, 10 cents; and for the eighth zone, 12 cents: Provided, That with the first mailing of each issue of such publication the publisher shall file with the postmaster a copy of such issue, together with a sworn statement containing such information as the Postmaster General may prescribe for determining the postage chargeable thereon: Provided further, That the rate on copies deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers and the free-in-county circulation and rates on copies mailed within the county of publication shall continue as now provided by law: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publishers to separate or make up in such manner as he may direct all matter of the second class when offered for mailing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, on this amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOX (when Mr. CHAMBERLAIN'S name was called). The senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has requested me to announce his absence from the Chamber on account of official business.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], from which I am released on this vote and on all other amendments and on the passage of the bill. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FER-

NALD]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], but I am released from that pair upon this and all subsequent votes upon this bill. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. On that account I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 48, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bankhead	Kenyon	Norris	Sheppard
Broussard	Kirby	Pomerene	Smith, Ga.
Gronna	La Follette	Ransdell	Swanson
Hardwick	McKellar	Reed	Trammell
Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Shafroth	Vardaman

NAYS—48.

Beckham	Harding	Lodge	Simmons
Borah	Hollis	McCumber	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Husting	McNary	Smoot
Brandeggee	James	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	New	Stone
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Underwood
Dillingham	Kellogg	Pittman	Wadsworth
Fall	Kendrick	Poin Dexter	Watson
France	King	Robinson	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Williams
Gerry	Lewis	Shields	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—28.

Ashurst	Goff	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Gore	Overman	Thomas
Culbertson	Hale	Owen	Thompson
Cummins	Hitchcock	Phelan	Tillman
Fernald	Hughes	Sherman	Townsend
Fletcher	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Gallinger	Martin	Smith, Md.	Warren

So, Mr. HARDWICK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer an amendment as a separate section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair advises the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that he will recognize him for his motion to strike out immediately after the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is to add a new section.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Pursuant to the action of the committee I move to strike out section 1201, known as the zone system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. KIRBY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move to amend that motion by inserting the amendment that I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I make a point of order. Is that the same amendment we have just voted upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not inform the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is considerable difference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that a motion to strike out can not be amended by substituting a motion to insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, but rules so with hesitation. The Chair will rule that the motion of the Senator from North Carolina has precedence.

Mr. McKELLAR. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would a motion to strike out and insert be in order? If so, I move to strike out the section and insert—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has taken that position heretofore and will again under the circumstances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I move to strike out the section in the House bill, and to insert the following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that the motion is in order. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 201, as printed in the House text, and insert:

SEC. 1201. That on and after January 1, 1918, all newspapers, magazines, and other publications regularly admitted to the mails as matter of the second class when mailed by the publisher shall hereafter be subject to the following rates of postage, the zone system now applying to parcel-post matter to be adapted also to second-class matter:

"Local, first, second, and third zones (under 300 miles), 1 cent per pound.

"Fourth zone (300 to 600 miles), 2 cents per pound.

"Fifth zone (600 to 1,000 miles), 3 cents per pound.

"Sixth zone (over 1,000 miles), 4 cents per pound.

"Provided, That free-in-county circulation provided by law shall continue as at present: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publishers to separate or 'make up' to zones, or in such manner as may be directed, all matter of the second class when offered for mailing: And provided further, That this section shall not apply to farm or religious newspapers and periodicals nor to newspapers and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class matter and maintained by and in the interest of religious, scientific, educational, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to correct the ruling which he has made. The Chair does not think that the motion to strike out and insert has precedence; and, having recognized the Senator from North Carolina for a motion to strike out, he thinks that motion is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator from North Carolina move to strike out section 1201?

Mr. SIMMONS. The section of the House text.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order that that has already been voted upon and already carried, and was not reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. In the copy of the bill which I have here it is stricken out and lines drawn through the House text. So evidently it was offered as a committee amendment. It has nothing to do, so I am informed by the Secretary of the Senate, with the McKellar amendment. That amendment, marked section 1101, was offered entirely separate from section 1201 of the House text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Washington that the Secretary so informed the Presiding Officer. The Secretary found, however, on a later examination of the Journal, that he was mistaken, and so informed the Chair, and the Chair thereupon corrected his ruling. So the Senator from Washington is laboring under the same difficulty the Chair was in making his first ruling.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I make a parliamentary inquiry, then, as to in what form the McKellar amendment was presented? It had no connection with section 1201.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will, in correcting his ruling, put the question on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina, on which the yeas and nays are demanded, to strike out the House provision.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is absent from the Chamber. He informs me that he would vote as I have voted. I will therefore permit my vote to stand.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—59.

Bankhead	Brady	Calder	Dillingham
Beckham	Brandeggee	Colt	Fall
Borah	Broussard	Curtis	France

Frelinghuysen	Knox	Poindexter	Smoot
Gerry	Lewis	Ransdell	Sterling
Hollis	Lodge	Robinson	Stone
Husting	McCumber	Saulsbury	Sutherland
James	McKellar	Shafroth	Swanson
Johnson, Cal.	Martin	Sheppard	Trammell
Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Shields	Vardaman
Jones, Wash.	New	Simmons	Wadsworth
Kellogg	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Watson
Kendrick	Page	Smith, Md.	Weeks
Kenyon	Penrose	Smith, Mich.	Williams
King	Pittman	Smith, S. C.

NAYS—0.

Gronna	La Follette	Myers	Pomerene
Hardwick	McNary	Norris	Warren
Kirby

NOT VOTING—28.

Ashurst	Goff	McLean	Thomas
Chamberlain	Gore	Newlands	Thompson
Culberson	Hale	Owen	Tillman
Cummins	Harding	Phelan	Townsend
Fernald	Hitchcock	Reed	Underwood
Fletcher	Hughes	Sherman	Walsh
Gallinger	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Pursuant to the action of the Senate striking out section 1201 it becomes necessary, I think, to strike out certain additional sections. I move to strike out section 1202, page 96, of the old print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is also necessary to strike out section 1203, page 96 of the old print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has already been stricken out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has section 1204 been stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. SIMMONS. Section 1205?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Section 1103?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is still in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to strike out section 1103 as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move, on page 90 of the old print, to strike out section 1104 as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On the same page, I move to strike out section 1105.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been stricken out already, the Chair is informed. Section 1105 was stricken out and another inserted in its place.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Secretary to read what was inserted in its place.

The Secretary read as follows:

Sec. 1105. That the salaries of all postmasters throughout the United States shall continue to be computed on the basis of existing law and calculated on the basis of postage rates existing on the 1st day of July, 1917, and shall not be increased by reason of additional receipts due to increased postage rates provided for in this act.

Mr. SIMMONS. That ought to be stricken out also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves to strike out section 1105 as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of section 1106?

Mr. SIMMONS. That has been stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Section 1106 in the House text was stricken out and another added. The Chair desires to inform the Senate in reply to the question of the Senator from Idaho that section 1106 was a reported amendment disagreed to and a new section 1106 was added to the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That need not be stricken out.

Mr. HARDWICK. I reserved an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Subdivision 2, parcel-post packages, page 71, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following:

2. Parcel-post packages: Upon every parcel or package weighing more than 4 ounces transported from one point in the United States to another by parcel post, a tax of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation, to be paid by the consignee.

No such parcel or package shall be transported until a stamp or stamps representing the tax due shall have been affixed thereto.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move to strike out that section, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to my pair as before and withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the former vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair as I did a moment ago, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as on a previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as on the previous votes and vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and therefore transfer my general pair with that Senator to the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Beckham	Hollis	Lewis	Sheppard
Borah	Husting	McKellar	Shields
Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Norris	Smith Mich.
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Sterling
Fletcher	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Poindexter	Vardaman
Gore	King	Reed
Gronna	Kirby	Robinson
Hardwick	La Follette	Shafroth

NAYS—38.

Bankhead	James	Page	Stone
Brady	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sutherland
Brandeggee	Knox	Pomerene	Swanson
Broussard	Lodge	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Calder	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Colt	McNary	Simmons	Watson
Dillingham	Martin	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
France	Myers	Smith, Md.	Williams
Gerry	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Harding	New	Smoot

NOT VOTING—25.

Ashurst	Hale	Owen	Townsend
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Phelan	Underwood
Culberson	Hughes	Sherman	Walsh
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Fernald	Kellogg	Thomas
Gallinger	McLean	Thompson
	Newlands	Tillman

So Mr. HARDWICK's motion was rejected, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In section 1, on the first page of the bill, line 4, after the word "That," the first word in the line, and also in section 2, on page 2, line 4, after the word "That," the first word in the line, I move in each instance to insert the words "during the existing war." I shall not ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment for the purpose of letting it go to conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not accept the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. JAMES. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment which I offered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana has already been voted upon both as in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate. Is the Chair correct?

Mr. MYERS. No; I beg pardon of the Chair, but that is not correct, so far as my understanding goes. I offered the amendment on its own merits as in Committee of the Whole. It was rejected. Then in the Senate I offered the amendment as an amendment to an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. It was there rejected. Now, I want a vote on the amendment as an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARDWICK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I gave notice I would offer in the Senate and ask for a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, on page 4, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph as follows:

That in addition to the tax imposed by subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 1 of the act of September 8, 1916, "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," and by other provisions of this act there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon that portion of the net income of every individual in excess of $25,000 a tax of 10 per cent upon such income received in the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter: Provided, That commencing November 1, 1917, and continuing until the termination of the war with the Imperial German Government and the return to the United States of the Army employed in Europe in the prosecution of said war every enlisted or drafted man and every commissioned officer whose service during said war is in a foreign country, in addition to the pay allowance of existing law, shall receive an additional pay allowance at the rate of $50 per month so long as he shall be in such service in any foreign country: Provided, however, That this shall not apply to service in the Philippines, Guam, or any possessions of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. I wish the Secretary to read the amendment to the amendment and then read that part of the original amendment as it will read if the amendment I have offered to it is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. After the words "said war," in line 2, on page 2 of the amendment, it is proposed to insert "The amount of money so secured by said tax shall constitute a special fund to be used, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall promulgate, in the support of the dependent relatives of," and to strike out the remainder of the amendment after the word "country," in line 4, page 2, so as to make the amendment read:

That in addition to the tax imposed by subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 1 of the act of September 8, 1916, "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," and by other provisions of this act there shall be levied, assessed, and collected upon that portion of the net income of every individual in excess of $25,000 a tax of 10 per cent upon such income received in the calendar year 1917 and every calendar year thereafter: Provided, That commencing November 1, 1917, and continuing until the termination of the war with the Imperial German Government and the return to the United States of the Army employed in Europe in the prosecution of said war, the amount of money so secured by said tax shall constitute a special fund to be used, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall promulgate, in the support of the dependent relatives of every enlisted or drafted man and every commissioned officer whose service during said war is in a foreign country.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I accept the amendment, as I think I have a right to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is accepted by the Senator from Georgia and made a part of his own amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia as modified.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. HARDWICK asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that all amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been agreed to except those which have been rejected on a separate vote. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If no further amendment be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read the third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. SIMMONS asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I announce my pair as heretofore with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but, understanding that that Senator would vote "yea" if he were present, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I am authorized by the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, to say that he would vote as I would vote if he were present. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I understand that if he were present he would vote "yea." Therefore I cast my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when Mr. KELLOGG's name was called). The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] was compelled to leave the Chamber on official business. He requested me to announce that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I announce the same transfer of my pair as heretofore, and vote "yea."

Mr. PITTMAN (when the name of Mr. NEWLANDS was called). The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] was compelled to leave the Chamber. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. If that Senator were present he would vote for the bill. I therefore am at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). I desire the RECORD to show that my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. MYERS (when Mr. WALSH's name was called). If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], who is absent; but he informed me that he desired to vote for the passage of this bill. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to announce that the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], who are necessarily absent, if present would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], who are all necessarily absent, would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea." I also desire to announce that had the junior Senator from Connecticut been present he would have voted for the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to strike out the House provision placing a tax upon second-class matter.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on important official business and to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] on account of illness. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce that if the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 69, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—69.

Bankhead	Husting	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Beckham	James	New	Smith, Mich.
Brady	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brandegge	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smoot
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sterling
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Stone
Coit	Kendrick	Poinexter	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Swanson
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Fall	Kirby	Reed	Vardaman
Fletcher	Knox	Robinson	Wadsworth
France	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Shafroth	Watson
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Gore	McKellar	Sherman	Williams
Harding	McNary	Shields
Hardwick	Martin	Simmons
Hollis	Myers	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—4.

Borah	Gronna	La Follette	Norris
-------	--------	-------------	--------

NOT VOTING—23.

Ashurst	Goff	Newlands	Tillman
Chamberlain	Hale	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Hitchcock	Phelan	Underwood
Cummins	Hughes	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Fernald	Kellogg	Thomas	Wolcott
Gallinger	McLean	Thompson

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint five conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STONE, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill, with the amendments, as finally acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be reprinted, with the amendments numbered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, when the amendment was offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], with reference to the inheritance tax, I voted for it. Had I understood it as I believe it was intended to be construed, I would have voted against it. I desire to make that explanation.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., Monday, September 10, 1917) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, September 10, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, search our hearts and cleanse them from all selfish and ignoble desires that with clear vision, clean hearts, and pure desires we may do the work Thou hast given us to do with efficiency, and thus satisfy the higher and nobler aspirations of our own souls. And Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to the flag of the United States. Two or three months ago I made a speech on the floor in regard to it and then extended it with some additional information. Since that time I have found some more matter and have made a few corrections in the other, and with the permission of the House I would like to put the entire thing in the RECORD, and I ask permission to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

WAR POWERS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address of former Justice Charles E. Hughes before the American Bar Association on Wednesday last on the subject of war powers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by Hon. Charles E. Hughes, of New York. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would the gentleman add the speech by Ex-Senator Sutherland, delivered at the same time?

Mr. STEELE. I shall be glad to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the amended request by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5723) amending the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the life insurance bill for soldiers.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum, and evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 244, answered "present" 2, not voting 186, as follows:

YEAS—244.

Adamson	Fairfield	Key, Ohio	Rouse
Alexander	Ferris	Kincheloe	Rowland
Ashbrook	Fess	King	Rubey
Aswell	Fields	Kinkaid	Russell
Austin	Fisher	Kitchin	Saath
Ayres	Fitzgerald	Knutson	Sanders, Ind.
Bacon	Fordney	Kraus	Sanford
Bankhead	Foss	Lazaro	Scott, Iowa
Barkley	Foster	Lee, Ga.	Scott, Mich.
Bathrick	Francis	Linthicum	Shallenberger
Black	Fuller, Ill.	Little	Sherley
Bland	Gallagher	London	Shouse
Blanton	Gallivan	Loneragan	Sims
Boohar	Gard	Longworth	Sinnott
Borland	Garland	Lundeen	Sisson
Brand	Garner	McAndrews	Slayden
Browne	Garrett, Tenn.	McArthur	Sloan
Brumbaugh	Garrett, Tex.	McClintic	Small
Buchanan	Gillett	McCulloch	Smith, Idaho
Burnett	Goodall	McFadden	Smith, C. B.
Burroughs	Gordon	McKenzie	Snook
Butler	Gould	McKeown	Stafford
Byrnes, Tenn.	Graham, Ill.	McKinley	Stegall
Campbell, Kans.	Gray, Ala.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stedman
Cannon	Green, Iowa	McLemore	Steele
Cantrill	Gregg	Madden	Steenerson
Caraway	Hadley	Magee	Stephens, Miss.
Carlin	Hamili	Mansfield	Stephens, Nebr.
Carter, Mass.	Hamilton, Mich.	Mapes	Sterling, Ill.
Chandler, N. Y.	Hamlin	Martin, La.	Stevenson
Clark, Fla.	Harrison, Miss.	Mays	Stines
Clark, Pa.	Hastings	Miller, Minn.	Sweet
Classon	Haugen	Miller, Wash.	Switzer
Claypool	Hawley	Mondell	Tague
Collier	Helm	Morgan	Taylor, Ark.
Connally, Tex.	Helvering	Nicholls, S. C.	Temple
Cooper, Ohio	Hensley	Oldfield	Thompson
Cooper, W. Va.	Hersey	Oliver, N. Y.	Tillman
Cox	Hicks	Olney	Timberlake
Crisp	Hilliard	Osborne	Towner
Crosser	Holland	Overstreet	Treadway
Dale, Vt.	Howard	Paige	Van Dyke
Dallinger	Huddleston	Park	Venable
Davidson	Hull, Iowa	Parker, N. J.	Vinson
Decker	Humphreys	Phelan	Voigt
Dent	Husted	Platt	Volstead
Dewalt	Igoe	Pou	Waldow
Dickinson	Ireland	Pratt	Walsh
Dillon	Jacoway	Purnell	Walton
Dixon	James	Quin	Watkins
Dominick	Johnson, Ky.	Rainey	Watson, Va.
Doolittle	Johnson, S. Dak.	Raker	Wheeler
Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Ramsey	Williams
Drane	Jones, Tex.	Ramseyer	Wilson, Ill.
Dupré	Jones, Va.	Rankin	Wilson, La.
Dyer	Kearns	Rayburn	Wilson, Tex.
Ellsworth	Keating	Reed	Wingo
Elston	Kehoe	Robinson	Wise
Esch	Kelly, Pa.	Rodenberg	Woods, Iowa
Evans	Kennedy, Iowa	Romjue	Young, N. Dak.
Fairchild, B. L.	Kettner	Rose	Young, Tex.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

La Follette

Snell

NOT VOTING—186.

Almon	Browning	Church	Darrow
Anderson	Bruckner	Coady	Davis
Anthony	Byrnes, S. C.	Connolly, Kans.	Dempsey
Bacharach	Caldwell	Cooper, Wis.	Denison
Baer	Campbell, Pa.	Copley	Denton
Barnhart	Candler, Miss.	Costello	Dies
Bell	Capstick	Crago	Dill
Blackmon	Carew	Cramton	Dooling
Bowers	Carter, Okla.	Currie, Mich.	Doremus
Britten	Cary	Curry, Cal.	Doughton
Brodbeck	Chandler, Okla.	Dale, N. Y.	Drakker

Dunn	Heintz	Morin	Sherwood
Eagan	Hill	Mott	Siegel
Eagle	Hollingsworth	Mudd	Siepm
Edmonds	Hood	Neely	Smith, Mich.
Elliott	Houston	Nelson	Smith, T. F.
Emerson	Hulbert	Nichols, Mich.	Snyder
Estopinal	Hull, Tenn.	Nolan	Sterling, Pa.
Fairchild, G. W.	Hutchinson	Norton	Strong
Farr	Juhl	Oliver, Ala.	Sullivan
Flood	Kahn	O'Shaunessy	Sumners
Flynn	Kelley, Mich.	Overmyer	Swift
Focht	Kennedy, R. I.	Padgett	Talbott
Frear	Kiess	Parker, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.
Freeman	Kreider	Peters	Templeton
French	LaGuardia	Polk	Thomas
Fuller, Mass.	Langley	Porter	Tilson
Gandy	Larsen	Powers	Tinkham
Glass	Lea, Cal.	Price	Vare
Glynn	Lehlbach	Ragsdale	Vestal
Godwin, N. C.	Lenroot	Randall	Walker
Good	Leshner	Reavis	Ward
Goodwin, Ark.	Lever	Riordan	Wason
Graham, Pa.	Littlepage	Robbins	Watson, Pa.
Gray, N. J.	Lobeck	Roberts	Weaver
Greene, Mass.	Lunn	Rogers	Webb
Greene, Vt.	McCormick	Rowe	Welling
Griest	McLaughlin, Pa.	Rucker	Welty
Griffin	Maher	Sanders, La.	Whaley
Hamilton, N. Y.	Mann	Sanders, N. Y.	White, Me.
Hardy	Martin, Ill.	Saunders, Va.	White, Ohio
Harrison, Va.	Mason	Schall	Winslow
Haskell	Meeker	Scott, Pa.	Wood, Ind.
Hayden	Montague	Scully	Woodward
Hayes	Moon	Sears	Zihlman
Heaton	Moore, Pa.	Sells
Heflin	Moore, Ind.	Shackelford

So the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. SNELL.

Until further notice:

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. EAGAN with Mr. SIEGEL.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. FLOOD with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. ROBERTS.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. ROBBINS.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. REAVIS.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. GRIFFIN with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. VESTAL.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma with Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma.

Mr. LEVER with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. DOUGHTON with Mr. CURRIE of Michigan.

Mr. ALMON with Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. BRUCKNER with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DALE of New York with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. BACHARACH.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. BOWERS.

Mr. HAYDEN with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. MOORES of Indiana.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. MASON.

Mr. HULBERT with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LARSEN with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. LESHNER with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. MONTAGUE with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. MOON with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. PADGETT with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. POLK with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. RUCKER with Mr. FOCHT.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana with Mr. FARR.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. SCHALL with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. GLYNN.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD with Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. DENISON.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania with Mr. DEMPSEY.

Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. DAVIS.
 Mr. SUMNERS with Mr. CURRY of California.
 Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. CRAMTON.
 Mr. WEAVER with Mr. CRAIG.
 Mr. WEBB with Mr. COSTELLO.
 Mr. WELLING with Mr. COPLEY.
 Mr. WELTY with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.
 Mr. WHALEY with Mr. CARY.
 Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. BRITTEN.
 Mr. RAGSDALE with Mr. FRENCH.
 Mr. DIES with Mr. SWIFT.
 Mr. DENTON with Mr. TILSON.
 Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas with Mr. TINKHAM.
 Mr. COADY with Mr. VARE.
 Mr. CAREW with Mr. WARD.
 Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania with Mr. WASON.
 Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRODBECK with Mr. WHITE of Maine.

Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. WINSLOW.

Mr. BELL with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. BARNHART with Mr. ZIHLMAN.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. BAER with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. SHERWOOD with Mr. MANN.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. DILL with Mr. LA FOLLETTE, commencing August 7, 1917, and continuing until further notice.

Mr. LEA of California with Mr. EMERSON, commencing August 2, for balance of session.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY]. If he were present, he would vote "aye," and I therefore withdraw my vote of "present" and vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ALMON was granted leave of absence for five days, on account of official business.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. That there is established in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, the director of which shall receive a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum.

That there be in such bureau a division of marine and seamen's insurance and a division of military and naval insurance in charge of a commissioner of marine and seamen's insurance and a commissioner of military and naval insurance, respectively, each of whom shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice that I shall move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to discuss this bill in general debate, but my committee was in session Friday and Saturday, as indeed it is now, I am sorry to say, so I am asking the indulgence of the committee now to make a few comments on the bill in general, and I do that with more freedom, because, it seems to me, this is a bill in which every Member of the House is interested and to which every Member of the House ought now, under the five-minute rule when amendments are considered, to give careful attention, because it is a bill which establishes a most important and vital system by which the soldiers of this war are to be cared for. It is an honest and earnest effort to come to a basis which shall prevent in the future the constant fluctuations and variations and increases and changes of pensions which we have experienced in the last 50 years. We did not know then much that we do now, and this bill shows that our experience has been of value. I think the House is more called upon to exercise its judgment, because this comes to us in an unusual way. There can be no pride of authorship, as there usually is, when a bill comes from a committee, because I understand the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not claim the authorship of this bill. In fact, a very few members of that committee were present at the hearings, and I understand that the bill was not thrashed out in committee with that fullness and care which such a bill requires. I do not say that with the slightest reflection, of course, or criticism on that committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know where the gentleman secured his information. There has never been a bill in this Congress considered with more care and deliberation. It is true, under the gentlemen's agreement about vacation, a great many members had gone home and it took several weeks to get a quorum, but we went on with the hearings and sent the hearings to the members with their consent, and were in communication with them every day. Finally we got a quorum and we sat down for several days and went through it with the utmost care and considered the bill, and we are satisfied with it absolutely.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I did not mean the slightest reflection upon the committee and I do not feel any. I think they did the best they could; but, as I understand, during all these hearings there were only five or six members present, and when a bare quorum did come back there were only a couple of days given to its consideration, and if every member of that committee in two days can master this bill they are wonderful men. From what some Members have told me, I do not believe the gentleman will pretend that the members of his great and powerful committee do thoroughly understand this bill or that this bill has had that careful consideration by the members of that committee which is ordinarily had when such an important bill is reported to the House. Now, I do not mean any reflection, and I am sorry the gentleman should seem to think I was making one upon that committee. I understand it was in vacation time and they could not get the members here. I do not blame them for it, but I am saying to the House that this bill has come before us without any particular pride of opinion of the full committee to defend it against amendments, and therefore the House is open minded to consider it carefully.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was a suggestion by the gentleman who spoke on behalf of the committee that this should be called "compensation" rather than "pension." Now, I do not care myself whether it is called pension or compensation. I recognize that in the past pensions have been distributed through one section of the country mostly, and it is not unnatural that through the other section of the country such bills should have been unpopular. I recognize that and I deplore it. I say this, although I am perfectly willing it should be called a compensation bill, but I do not want—

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman will eliminate from his consideration all idea of sectionalism. I want to say to him that we from the South have never objected to pensioning deserving Federal soldiers at all. We think they deserve honor, because they are the only people on earth who could have overcome us. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so. I did not mean to introduce sectionalism at all, and I think it is fortunate that this bill is absolutely free from all sectionalism. We are all interested, but I could see no other reason except a feeling against pensions to occasion the preference for the word "compensation." But, gentlemen, we do not want to deceive ourselves and we do not want to deceive the country in thinking it is not what in the past we called a pension bill, because, call it pension or compensation, it provides exactly what previous pensions bills did provide.

And really the word "pension" is the proper word, I suppose, because "compensation" indicates that you are giving an equivalent for the service. Nobody pretends that what we are giving here, either to the man who is injured or to his family, is a compensation for the suffering or wounds or the death of the soldier. We can not compensate them. Their sacrifices are beyond all pecuniary compensation and a grateful country can only provide that they shall not suffer actual privation. It is simply a pension problem. But regardless of the word, let us not fool ourselves into the idea, let us not try to fool the country into the idea, that this is not what is called a pension bill, for a great part of the bill is strictly and purely a pension bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. It is strictly and purely a pension bill and the insurance feature of it is entirely separate from and is in addition to the pension features. I have had many people speak to me about it, and there is a general idea diffused among them that this is an insurance bill and not a pension bill, and we do not want to deceive ourselves or the country about that, because we all know, if we have studied it, that the first, the great part, of the bill is what we have always called a pension bill. It gives compensation for wounds, for death, for families, and, in addition to that, is this insurance feature.

Now, I regret that the bill was prepared outside and not by the committee. I think the Interstate Commerce Committee would have given it, fully competent as they are, proper attention and would certainly have brought a bill forth in which the House would have had more confidence than in any bill which we know was prepared outside, because the committee is like a lawyer. When you have prepared a paper yourself you know all the details of the paper. When somebody outside has prepared it and you inspect it afterwards you have not as thorough an acquaintance with it as if you knew yourself just why each provision was put in.

Now, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is not responsible for it, but that is immaterial. It is for a good purpose; it is in many of its features most admirable; it is, I believe, a wise and elaborately worked-out system to escape some of the mistakes of our past pension bills, and all the House wants to do is to make it as perfect as possible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman say who is the real author?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I can not.

Now, I want to say a word about the insurance feature of the bill. I have read the bill carefully several times. I have read all the hearings. I do not pretend that I understand the bill thoroughly. I mean to be present if I can during its progress through the House. But as to this insurance feature, which at first struck me as very attractive, I confess, as I have studied it further, that I am disposed, but with an open mind and subject to conviction, to think that is an incubus upon the bill; that the bill would be better without it. In the first place, as to its cost. The experts tell us that that insurance feature, if the whole Army should insure itself for $5,000 a man, would cost us the second year $900,000,000; that if they insured for $10,000, as the bill was originally, it would cost the second year $1,800,000,000, which is for this insurance feature of it alone, and in addition to all the regular compensation in pension features.

Now, we all desire—

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I am sorry I can not. I would if I had the time. I would be glad to do so, but I hate to impose on the House.

We want to give all we can afford to the soldiers, and, after all, what we give to the soldiers and their families must be limited not by their desires but by the financial possibilities of the country. And when you come to the possibility of $1,800,000,000 of insurance in addition to the pension-system feature of the bill, it staggers me.

Gentlemen say that all the men will not insure. To my mind that is a criticism of the bill, because if this insurance feature is good we want every man to insure. I am told by those interested in the bill that there will be a propaganda throughout the Army to make the men insure. Of course, every man of forethought ought to insure. Every officer, I should think, would insure, and every thoughtful, farseeing man will insure. Perhaps they will all insure. For the fact is this, that what in the market would cost $57 a thousand as premium for insurance the Government is giving to its soldiers for $8 a thousand. That is to say, a man can get what is worth $57 by the payment of $8. Now, every man who is looking for a good investment and for an opportunity to take a gamble knows that when he can get what is worth $57 for $8 he will take it. The officers will take it, particularly the thousands of middle-aged officers; the men of forethought will take it, and, as I say, everybody ought to take it. But the trouble is that if everybody does take it, then we are going to have this frightful expense of $1,800,000,000 even the second year, and more than that afterwards. If everybody does not take it, who will be the men who do not take it? The men of some means will, of course, pay their $7 a month. The officers will pay that amount. The men in the ranks who are familiar with such things will take it. But the country boy, the careless young man whom we ought to protect, if anybody, but who thinks he is not going to get hurt, who has the optimism—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. He is the man who will not take it. He is thoughtless and sanguine, and he will be apt to say that "a bird in the hand is worth seven birds in the bush." And yet, is he not the man that we ought to protect. Really, if we want to insure everybody—

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman what he bases his figures on what he says that it will cost $1,800,000,000 the second year? How did you arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. GILLETT. The experts in the report, in the hearings, state that. I did not figure it out. I just took the experts' opinion.

Now, as I say, the young boy who is careless, reckless, and hopeful will not insure. If everybody ought to insure, why does not the Government say, "We will insure you all"? All we would have to do would be to take $7 a month out of the boys' pay and pay them $26 a month instead of $33, and then with that $7 insure every man in the Army. But what would that do? That would simply be an increase of the pension which the previous sections of the bill provide. It would give to every man in the Army this $10,000 insurance in addition to the compensation provisions which we have already made extra.

Now, I believe in making our compensation measure as generous and liberal as the resources of the country can stand, and then I would not increase that by a new system of optional pensions for the benefit of those only who are provident. So it seems to me if your theory is right, if you want everybody to insure, why not compel everybody to insure? But that means that you are simply going to increase enormously the provisions that we have already made as liberal as we thought the finances of the Government would stand in the previous section, and are going to add this enormous expense.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman care to yield there?

Mr. GILLETT. I will yield; certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman realize that thousands of these young men will have nobody dependent on them and that it would hardly be worth their while to insure, and the Government need not force insurance upon a man who has nobody to protect? There is no occasion for blanket insurance to everybody who goes into the Army.

Mr. GILLETT. You say there are thousands of them. They may not have dependents, but they have friends and relatives. The thoughtful man will insure for them.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose he has no relatives who have any claim on him?

Mr. GILLETT. There are very few who will be in those armies who will be in that position.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not the money then go to some distant relative?

Mr. GILLETT. How few there would be in the Army who would have nobody but distant relatives!

Mr. BORLAND. He need not say for whom he wanted to insure.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course he need not say for whom he wants to insure, but he could say so.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman will remember that some years ago he and I were members of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. The question was submitted to us to compel the boys here to take out insurance. We concluded that to do that would increase their salaries to that extent, and our committee left it as a voluntary matter in that regard.

Mr. GILLETT. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. Our committee made it a compulsory matter.

Mr. HARDY. It did not go through with a bill.

Mr. GILLETT. My recollection is that the committee made it compulsory.

Mr. HARDY. I thought we left it voluntary.

Mr. GILLETT. No; I am quite sure we made it compulsory. Now, of course, insurance here is to the man insured a gamble. To every single man it is a gamble whether he is going to get killed or not, or whether he is going to be injured or not, and the thoughtless, hopeful young man will think that it is not worth while to insure. He would rather have the money. Yet it is perfectly clear that for every one of them it would be wise to take this insurance, because they are getting for $8 what would cost them $58 if they were paying for it what it is really worth, and so as it seems to me that the very men who are not going to insure are those who most need our care. The rash and thoughtless will not insure; the prudent and shrewd will. I think we ought to look out for all alike, and it seems to me the Government itself ought to provide, as we have done in the first sections of the bill, as well as its finances will allow for the men and their families who are injured, and when we have reached that limit, when we have done all for them that we think the Government's finances will allow, then we ought to stop.

We also do not want to deceive ourselves with the idea that this is necessarily the end of all pensions. I congratulate the committee in having taken this up, because I think it is well now, at the very beginning of the war, to try to lay down a reasonable and substantial basis that will guide us through it. But, after all, we must remember that when this war is over one or two or three millions of voters will be coming back here, and that in the future, as we have seen it in the past, their votes will not be forgotten by Congress. I do not think we can be sure that this ends all pension legislation. But I am very glad that this bill, which shows great study and careful elaboration and scientific calculations by somebody, and which is obviously conceived with a patriotic purpose to be liberal to our soldiers and their families and at the same time to avoid many of the mistakes of the past. I am very glad it is before us and I hope it will receive the careful attention of the House and by amendment be made as perfect as possible. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am more in favor of this bill than of any other bill that has been introduced since we declared war. [Applause.] It is the best and fairest and most just of all the great bills this Congress has passed. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] gave a new version of an old proverb. The old proverb was, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." He raises it to "A bird in the hand is worth seven in the bush." [Laughter.] I can give him a better rendering than that. Down in my district there used to live a very brilliant lawyer named Nat. C. Dryden, and he declared once that "A bird in the hand is the noblest work of God." [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I simply wish to inform the gentleman that I did not do it out of ignorance, but because in this particular case it was seven to one that the soldier was getting, and therefore I said—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Nobody would ever impute ignorance to the gentleman from Massachusetts. That would be ridiculous. [Laughter.]

So far as I have been able to ascertain, there are four principal objections urged to this bill: First, that it increases the soldier's compensation; second, that the Government is liable to find itself in a hole; third, that in some way it interferes with the present pension system; and, fourth, that the bill was not prepared by the committee.

Now, take these things in reverse order. What difference does it make who prepared the bill? I think the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—and I have stated it time and again—is one of the ablest committees in this House and does more work than any other committee, except the Committee on Appropriations. But the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce do not know everything.

Nobody knows everything, and if they got outside help from intelligent men or experts they were saving themselves so much trouble and perhaps preparing a better bill than they would prepare themselves. The man who had the most to do with preparing the bill, as I understand it, was Judge Mack, a judge of high degree. He has a lifetime office at a fairly good salary, and instead of going up to Canada to spend the hot season he spent it in Washington working on this bill. [Applause.] I think that he and everybody that had anything to do with preparing this bill, whether on the committee or off of it, deserve well of the country. [Applause.]

Half the bills that we work at here are prepared by somebody outside of Congress. Congress does not have to swallow them as they come here. The greatest tariff bill that ever was prepared in the world was prepared in the Treasury Building by Secretary Robert J. Walker, and he is the only man in the entire history of this country who was not chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that had ingenuity enough to get his name fastened on a great tariff bill that will be referred to until the tariff question is settled by somebody, if somebody somewhere has sense enough to settle it so that it will never come up any more. [Laughter and applause.]

They say that it will infringe the present pension business. I do not see, to save my soul, how it will do that. The laws are already on the statute book that define pensions. I think I know as much about pensions as any man in this House, except some one who has served for years on a pension committee. When I first came here in 1893 I was given the worst committee assignments that any man ever had in this House—on old Pensions and Claims. It was 110, 111, and 112 years after the last British soldier left New York, and yet I helped to get up and pass 11 bills for Revolutionary widows, and some of them never died until four or five years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri be allowed to complete his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will be as brief as possible. That gave me in my first service here an insight into the pension business. In addition to that, my district is largely made up of, or was then, of old Confederate soldiers and old Union soldiers. I went to work at the pension business. I will confess that I thought about half of them were frauds when I came here. I never had had occasion to pay any attention to that except to read the newspapers.

I commenced examining these cases sent to me, and I will tell you the conclusion that I came to, that most of the private pension bills are somewhat in the nature of equity bills; that they relieve people who can not be relieved under the general law. As I say, I changed my idea on the subject by reason of facts and circumstances that could not be blinked, and I went to work to get pensions for those entitled to them, and I secured many. This thing has happened in the last 8 or 10 years. Every time an old Union soldier writes to me to get a pension, or to get one increased, his old Confederate soldier neighbor writes to me at the same time to help the old Union soldier to get his bill passed. [Applause.] They are living in perfect amity.

Some gentleman said that somebody would introduce a bill to even up the pensions of the soldiers and widows of other wars by raising them. Of course nobody is going to introduce a bill into this Congress to even up things, pensions or anything else, by reducing them. [Laughter and applause.] But suppose they do, what harm will it do? Nearly all the old Union soldiers are dead, or will be before this war is over, the way it is running. It would not absolutely ruin the American Republic if they did get a little more. I do not believe it will interfere with the pension system a particle.

The third one of the objections is that this bill will put the Government in a hole. I do not know whether it will or not. But I am not very much exercised as to whether it will or not; we are going to be in a hole anyway. [Laughter and applause.]

I will tell you what I am in favor of. I am in favor of doing everything I know how to do to make the soldiers when they go to Europe comfortable. [Applause.] Not only comfortable physically but comfortable mentally.

Mr. SIMS. And their families.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. So that they will not be distracted any more than is absolutely necessary by worrying about whether families at home are in comfort or not. [Applause.] I thank the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] for making the suggestion.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question that I am much worried about; that is, it bothers me, although it may not others. There are certain specific pensions in the existing pensions laws?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. The argument has been made that these pension laws are inducements to have men enlist. In this Army to-day of 1,200,000 men a great many have volunteered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. About half.

Mr. SWITZER. Enough volunteered in two counties of my district so that there was no need for the draft. The law said to them when they volunteered that if their eyes were put out or if they lost both legs they would get $100 a month. Now, what right have we to violate that sacred promise by cutting it down to $40 a month?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We are not violating it, and it never will be violated.

Mr. SWITZER. This bill does it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As far as raising the compensation is concerned, nine-tenths of all the men in the Army now are getting less than they were getting before they went into the United States Army. There is no question in the world about it. Some of them gave up really lucrative positions. Some gave up positions that were paying very well, and very few ever gave up any position that was as small as $33 a month. Now, I repeat what I said last Thursday about the bond bill. If these young men are willing to risk their lives on the battle field, those of us who stay at home ought to be willing to take care of them in the best way that can be devised. [Applause.]

Now, about the insurance. I believe in insurance. I carry every kind of life insurance that human ingenuity ever devised—time insurance, endowment insurance, straight insurance, assessment insurance, accident insurance. I carry $10,000 accident insurance and $24,000 life insurance. The first insurance policy that I ever took out was when I was a very young man attending the Cincinnati Law School. I took it out for the benefit of my father in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and for $2,000 insurance it cost me $24 a year—when it started. [Laughter.] I held on to that thing, and after a while it commenced going up, and it kept on going up until it cost more than straight old-line insurance did. Well, after it went up, I let go. My father had died, and therefore did not need the insurance. Nevertheless, I have some assessment insurance left. They are all converting it now into some kind of old-line insurance. I believe in insurance. I never was able to save any money, and I was determined that my wife and children should not go to the poorhouse. I am in favor of fixing this bill so that the wives and children of the soldiers who die over there shall not go to the poorhouse either. [Applause.] And one of the most pleasant recollections of my life is that I have kept a good many old soldiers and their widows out of the poorhouse and made their declining days happier and more comfortable. [Applause.] Suppose it does increase their pay? It is not going to hurt anybody.

There is another thing about insurance. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I believe as firmly as that I must die some day that in less than 10 years from now everybody is going to be insured under the law. In some countries they have that kind of insurance now, and it is on a philosophical basis, to keep widows and orphans from suffering, and to keep men who are crippled in the various dangerous occupations of life from coming to want; and I believe that if there has ever been a bill introduced in this House that all right-thinking Americans, without respect to political or religious affiliations will indorse, it is this insurance bill that is pending here now. [Applause.]

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Referring to the compensation feature, there is a matter which has not been explained, upon which I should like to have the Speaker's opinion. What is the object of transferring the pension feature, the adjudication of all these claims, from the Bureau of Pensions of the Interior Department to the Treasury Department? We have had all general pension-law claims adjudicated in the Bureau of Pensions for more than 100 years. I am willing to vote just as much and to do just as much for these soldiers as any man in this House, and if these rates are inadequate under the general law, why can not the present law be amended and raise the rates; but why transfer that whole thing to the Treasury Department?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think that is material. I am rather inclined to think that if I had been drawing this bill personally, I would have left that where it was, with the Interior Department; but that is neither here nor there. It is as broad as it is long. It may create a new bureau with a few new employees, I have no sort of doubt, but it would require about that many extra employees if we left it in the Interior Department.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Does not the Speaker think it would require a great deal more help with inexperienced employees than it would with the present force, who are trained and who are familiar with the present pension laws, to adjudicate these claims? Does he not think it will cost this Government a great deal more money to adjudicate these claims in the new bureau than it would in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think so. These employees in the Pension Office have undoubtedly got all they can do now.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. What is the object of transferring this to the Treasury Department?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know what the object was.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Nobody else knows.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I am not going to try to tell what I do not know. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think when we are calling on the young manhood of the country to defend the country we ought to do in advance everything within our power to assure them that those they leave at home will be protected in the event that they are maimed as the result of their service at the front, and this bill, so far as its compensation features go, in many respects is along the right lines.

There are one or two things in the bill that I think ought to be modified, one in which we limit the period to 120 days within which a man can take the benefit of the insurance which we propose to offer. During the 120 days all men who enlist are considered as insured. After 120 days it is proposed that no man can make an application for insurance. If it is thought to be a good thing to insure the men at all, every man enlisting in the American Army ought to be permitted to apply for insurance at any time during his service. It is all very well to limit the period to 120 days within which the Government will pay his family a fixed sum if he happens to be killed, but that ought not to preclude the possibility of the man obtaining insurance after 120 days if he is willing to pay the premium. And there ought not to be any limit to the time during his service when he can apply. It may be said, and doubtless will be said in reply to this statement, that after 120 days men may contract disease, or they may be injured in the service and put themselves without the pale of the right to insurance. But I do not believe there ought to be any law governing the insurance of men engaged in the defense of the country that will say that after 120 days they can not insure. It may be said that the administration of the insurance feature of the bill will be more difficult if we do not compel the men to insure within a given period, but we have these men in camps. We have doctors in every camp, and these doctors can examine the men upon the field of battle as well as they can anywhere else.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman is touching on the point I had in mind. That is the difficulty attending the service, if a soldier applies for insurance, to have him examined to determine whether or not he is physically fit, or whether he has suffered physical disability which would disqualify him from receiving insurance.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not any trouble whatever about the examination.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They ought not to have to be examined at all after they have been accepted as fit for service as soldiers. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Every organization in the field and in camp has a corps of doctors whose business it is to examine the men and to treat them for any disease they may contract.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand from the bill that any physical examination is required. Every enlisted man will be entitled to receive insurance regardless of his physical condition, as I understand it.

Mr. MADDEN. The bill does not set forth the fact that a physical examination is needed, but I have no doubt the regulations will provide for it.

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill specifically says that every man who is accepted as being physically qualified for the Army is physically qualified for insurance.

Mr. MADDEN. Then there ought not to be any limitation on the time for him to take advantage of the insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I would ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. BORLAND. I take it that the gentleman is in favor of this insurance plan.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I am reasonably in favor of it; yes.

Mr. BORLAND. He is not opposing the insurance feature?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I am simply opposing the provisions of the bill, and I hope they will be amended.

Mr. BORLAND. I was inclined to agree with the gentleman's position. I think I first raised the question, but has this idea occurred to the gentleman? If we want to make this insurance workable and a success there will have to be some pressure brought upon men to come in and start the thing going. If a man is permitted from day to day to neglect sending in his application, he may neglect it until the time has passed when he could take it out, when he is crippled or dead.

Mr. MADDEN. I am in favor of bringing any pressure in the form of missionary work that is necessary to acquaint every man who goes into the Army with the fact that it is proposed to offer insurance to him, but not to compel him to do it in any given time.

Mr. BORLAND. I think we are all inclined to put these things off, and I think the young soldier might neglect it or put it off from day to day until the hour came when it was impracticable to secure insurance.

Mr. MADDEN. I am in favor of missionary work.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will state to the gentleman the point he makes is very well worthy of consideration, and in framing this bill it was the intention of those who framed it to see if we possibly could close up every avenue for fraud. We felt as if 120 days was sufficient time to get knowledge of this bill to every soldier in the Army at that time. We felt also that unless we set a limit that it would be just like the case is now. These men who have gone into the Army, volunteers or drafted, since this emergency began will get this insurance if they die before this insurance is passed. After we have passed this bill we give four months, because after that time we felt we could no longer carry these men without any premium whatever; but if you do not have some kind of a limitation you will have all kinds of deathbed applications for insurance, and all this, that, and the other. The gentleman's argument, I think, is going to the proposition that the Government should charge no premium upon this, and every man should be given a paid-up policy of a certain amount.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree exactly with the statement made by the gentleman from Texas, that the Government ought not under any circumstances to pay an insurance policy for death after a given period, and if a man does not insure within that period he will not be entitled to the payment of the policy; but I think, even after that period, that any man ought to have the right to insure up to the time he is discharged from the Army, but that the Government ought not to be responsible after a given period if he fails to do it.

Mr. RAYBURN. These same claims, however, the gentleman must realize, will come in to the Government by those people who have not taken out insurance, and they will plead to be placed upon the same ground with the fellow who was taken in by the Government without having paid any premium or applied for insurance before this law is passed.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I do not think they could get anything from the Government unless they had made application for insurance within the limitation fixed in the bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. What would the gentleman think of this plan, to consider every man insured when he goes into the Army and deduct his premium from his pay unless or until he specifically declines to be insured? What would the gentleman think of the safety of that plan?

Mr. MADDEN. I doubt if that policy ought to be pursued, because I am rather opposed to the Government taking it from the man's pay anyhow. Now, I have another feature—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield on that matter?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What would the gentleman think of taking out the limitation within which the application should be made for insurance and permit the insurance to be applied for by the soldier himself or by his next of kin on his behalf?

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I do not know. I would not want to pass on that question. I have another feature I would like to present, however, in a moment on this insurance feature of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. In a moment I will. It is proposed by this bill to name those to whom the insured may will the amount of insurance due under the policy. I think the limit in the bill is to the grandfather, the grandmother, the father and the mother and the wife and brother; but when it comes to the uncle and cousin, the man who carries insurance for 25 or 40 years, if he has no nearer relatives than an uncle or cousin it is proposed by this bill to confiscate every dollar that he has paid and not allow him to make this disposition of his property.

And I think there ought to be some remedy for that. If a man has paid premiums for 30 or 40 years, even though he may have paid them to the Government, he ought to have a right to make disposition of whatever has accumulated under these payments.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I realized the force of the gentleman's argument the other day when he asked his questions when I had the floor, and I said at that time that I believed that there ought to be something done about that. I agree quite fully with the gentleman that if a man pays on his policy for several years he ought to own something in that policy, and it is my intention, if I may read it in the gentleman's time, to offer, when I get to that point, this amendment:

Section 402, page 29, line 20, add "or from time to time, by regulations." Add, at the end, "If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Table of Mortality, and 3½ per cent interest, in full of all obligations under the policy."

Mr. MADDEN. I think that would measurably cover the objection I make to the provision of the bill, and I am glad that the gentleman will report such an amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. In lines 12 and 13 are the words "at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service."

What does the gentleman think of putting on an amendment to the effect that—

Provided, however, Any insurance could be applied after 120 days provided the applicant pass a satisfactory physical examination.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think there ought to be any examination unless the man is physically disabled. If he is physically disabled, then he is already provided for in the compensation feature of the bill. If a man should happen to be wounded, if he should happen to lose an arm, or leg, or both arms or both legs the bill in another provision takes care of him and his family. And unless he is qualified to take out insurance he ought not to be permitted to do it. If there was no other compensation in the bill I would say he ought to be permitted to do it. But there is liberal compensation made for every man who is injured and for the family of every man who is injured, and I believe that liberal compensation would justify the Government in saying that no application could be favorably passed upon for insurance under such circumstances.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. SIMS. I want to suggest to the gentleman that the bill provides for insurance only—

Mr. MADDEN. I know.

Mr. SIMS. And at the end of each year, if a man does not die, he does not lose anything and there is nothing coming to him. At the end of the war the insured person is to have the right to ask for a change of premium. If he does not—

Mr. MADDEN. He has the right to go to an outside company and get insured. In the meantime he might contract disease while at the front and an outside insurance company would not take the risk. But the Government of the United States, that had the service of the soldier from the time he was physically well until he became physically unfit, ought under all circumstances, then, to protect him throughout the remainder of his life.

Mr. SIMS. The bill does so. It does not change the premium. It goes on just as if he were in the war, no matter how many disabilities and diseases may have been contracted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SIMS. If he pays it, he can not lose it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. There is another feature of the bill to which I would like to call the attention of the House, and that is the feature of the bill which commandeers, so to speak, the salary of the man who has no relatives at home. This bill provides that if a man goes to war and he has not any relatives to whom he can allot a certain portion of his pay, the Secretary of War shall be permitted to make regulations to take that part of his pay and hold it in the Treasury of the United States until he returns. But he may not return. He may die. And what is to become of the amount of money that is held in the Treasury of the United States, forcibly retained under regulations made by the Secretary of War? There is not any provision in this bill to cover that.

Mr. SIMS. The law makes provision as to the rights of those who would inherit property.

Mr. MADDEN. The presumption is, to begin with, in the bill that he has no one who can inherit property. Therefore he is compelled under the rules made by the Secretary of War to allow one-half of his pay to be taken and placed in the Treasury of the United States. And I would like to see the picture of the man who would be able to get that money out of the Treasury of the United States after the soldier died. And I am not in favor of this being enacted into law until some provision is made, if you are going to commandeer a man's compensation while he is fighting at the front, to turn that amount over to somebody at the end of the war or at the man's death.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does my colleague think that this great Government would hold money that belongs legally to the heirs of a man who died fighting for his country?

Mr. MADDEN. I will answer my colleague my making this statement: That this bill specifically provides now that the man who owns insurance on which he pays a premium, unless he has relatives as near to him as a father and mother, a brother or sister, or wife, or grandfather or grandmother, could not even will his own property that he has paid for.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is a different proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. It is the same thing exactly. The Government has taken the money.

Mr. SIMS. With reference to the last statement, the soldier only pays $8, while the Government pays $50 a thousand.

Mr. MADDEN. The Government does not pay anything unless the man is killed.

Mr. SIMS. He does not lose anything.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; he does; and he pays $8 a thousand, and he continues to pay that all his life. He ought to have some means by which he can convey the property which he accumulates as the result of those payments to somebody, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has already provided for that; but the bill as it stands to-day does not provide for it. If the Government is willing to confiscate the property that is paid for by the individual who is insured, I do not see any reason why it should not think it was justified in confiscating the property that is held for the soldier who has no near relatives.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman says that the bill provides that the man whose money is commandeered has no relatives to whom it can be paid. That merely means he has no dependent relatives. He may have other relatives.

Mr. MADDEN. It makes no difference what it means. I am talking about what it says.

Mr. PLATT. I admit it may not be clear.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. What I want to do is to get into the minds of the men who are going to shape this bill finally the formation of the bill as it ought to be when it becomes a law. I am not criticizing the policy. I am only trying to point out the places where I think the bill should be amended. I am for the bill, but I think the best friend of the bill is the one that criticizes the form of the bill with a view to making it better when it is finally passed; and that is what I am here to do. Now, I am heartily in accord with the policy that compels men to allot half their pay to their families, and I am in still heartier accord with the thought that the Government is contributing as much as the men allot, so that those who remain at home will be comfortable while their husbands and fathers and brothers are fighting the battles at the front. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman object to answering a question or two?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no objection to doing that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, pending that request, I want to say that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri I want to conclude the hour that is at the disposal of our side.

Mr. BORLAND. How many speakers will the gentleman have?

Mr. ESCH. Two speeches of 10 minutes each.

Mr. BORLAND. The reason I ask is that I was recognized to speak after my colleague from Missouri, and I wanted to know when I would come in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, before I begin I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is impossible within the limits of the time that the committee has graciously granted to me to cover the various features of this bill. It is a great piece of legislation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman feel better if we got unanimous consent that he should receive more time? He ought to have more time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not care to ask for more time.

I will not criticize the pension legislation of the past. There is no occasion for doing that. It has inequalities and injustices, but the intent of Congress at all times has been to deal justly, as far as it might be done, by the old soldier—to deal generously by the old soldier—and since I have been a Member of this House I have taken an intense interest in their welfare and have supported all legislation for their benefit. I have a large soldier constituency—veterans of the Civil War, and a few remain of the Mexican War and of course some of the Spanish-American War—and I feel that our attitude toward these veterans is the same—one of good will and friendship.

But we are now engaging in another war, the greatest in history. We should profit by the experience of the past and frame legislation along better lines, broader lines, lines that will meet the conditions of life to-day, that will make the men whom we will call into the service and who may go into the trenches in Europe feel that the Government which they serve regards their service at its true value and will care for them and their dependents. Hence I do not see any occasion for the criticism of this bill by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY]. If he is sensible of the fact that in the event this bill is enacted into law there will be discrimination between those who may serve in this war and the veterans of other wars, the way is open to him and his committee and to the Committee on Invalid Pensions to remedy those inequalities. But if those inequalities were apparent, which is not the case if the bill is considered as a whole, it is no excuse or apology for throwing handicaps in the way of the enactment of this legislation. Our boys are going into the training and concentration camps; thousands are already in Europe. Delay is unjustifiable.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. For a question.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. If, as the gentleman says, the way is open for us, why will not that pertain to your bill? Why did you bring this bill into your committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Into my committee?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Why was this bill referred to your committee in the first place?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is not from my committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. If that pension legislation properly belonged to the Pension Committee, why was it not referred there, but to your committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Our committee?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. ALEXANDER. So far as that is concerned, if the different provision of this bill were divided up they might have been referred to different committees. But I can not see any force in the criticism that the bill was referred to the wrong committee.

It is not a pension bill. I presume the Speaker referred the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce because it amends the law creating the Bureau of War Risks, as all other bills relating to that bureau have been referred to that committee. But enough of that. I will proceed to the consideration of the bill. Now, a careful study of the question of compensation, indemnity, and insurance for the officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the United States was made at the instance of Secretary McAdoo. They are distinguished men, distinguished in civil life and judicial life, representatives of labor, representatives of insurance companies in this country. No legislation was ever prepared by a body of more distinguished and more representative men than these.

Although the bill bears my name I am not the author of the bill. Although it comes from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that committee is not the author of this bill, and I do not hesitate to say that no piece of legislation ever presented to this Congress was ever considered with more care and intelligence than this present piece of legislation. There was no feeling of ill will or hostility or unfriendliness to the soldiers of previous wars, but the bill is framed to meet the present conditions, to meet the just and wholesome demands of those we are calling into the service to-day. We should profit by the experience of the past and frame legislation along more scientific lines.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. For a question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Have any of the authors of this bill or any of the members of that committee ever had any experience with pension legislation or with naval or military affairs?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I imagine every one of them has had quite as much as the members of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman give the name of some one who has had that experience? That is what I wanted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not like to take the time just now.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I refer to the experts whom the gentleman mentions. I want to know the name of one of them who has had experience.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The War Department and the Navy Department were represented.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. By whom?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William G. McAdoo, to the President he says:

In this work the Treasury Department was represented by Assistant Secretary Rowe, Mr. William C. DeLanoy, Director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and Mr. Hendon Chubb, chairman of the advisory board of that bureau.

The Secretary says:

I have had the cordial cooperation of the committee on labor of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, Mr. Samuel Gompers, chairman. Mr. Gompers appointed a special subcommittee on compensation for enlisted men and their dependents, of which the Hon. Julian W. Mack, United States circuit judge, was made chairman.

The bill which I am submitting for your consideration was drafted by Judge Mack. Capt. S. H. Wolfe, detailed by the Secretary of War both to the committee on labor and to this department for cooperation in the work, has been very helpful. Representatives from other departments, as well as an advisory draft committee of the committee on labor, have assisted. The Department of Commerce was represented by Assistant Secretary Edwin F. Sweet, the Navy Department by Maj. Henry Leonard, and the Department of Labor by Miss Julia C. Lathrop.

The advisory committee included Mr. F. Tecumseh Sherman, Mr. J. W. Sullivan, Mr. Frank Whiting, Mr. F. Spencer Baldwin, and Mr. D. L. Coase, and was aided by Mr. Everitt Macy, Mr. A. Parker Nevin, and Dr. Lee K. Frankel, members of the executive committee of the committee on labor, and others. The legislative drafting bureau, through Mr. Beeman, also rendered valuable aid.

They are the men who framed this bill. Then, after it had been framed a tentative draft of the bill was submitted to a committee of insurance experts by Secretary McAdoo. I will give you their names:

MEETING OF INSURANCE COMMITTEE HELD IN OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY JULY 25, 1917.

Present:

Charles Jerome Edwards, Brooklyn, N. Y., former president of the National Association of Life Underwriters.

George E. Ide, president of the Home Life Insurance Co.

Edward D. Dunfield, president of the Prudential Life Insurance Co.

Louis F. Butler, president of the Travelers Insurance Co.

Arthur Hunter, president of the Actuarial Society of America.

John T. Stone, president of the Maryland Casualty Co.

George B. Woodward, vice president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

Franklin B. Mead, secretary of the Lincoln Life Insurance Co.

T. W. Blackburn, secretary of the American Life Convention.

I. J. Boak, president of the National Fraternal Congress of America.

Alfred G. Porch, president of the American Society of Actuaries.

John L. Shuff, of the Union Central of Cincinnati.

Judge Julian W. Mack and Samuel Gompers, of the committee on labor of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense.

Edwin F. Sweet, Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

Capt. S. W. Wolfe, representing the War Department.

Maj. Henry Leonard, representing the Navy Department.

Miss Julia Lathrop, representing the Department of Labor.

Dr. L. S. Rowe, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

G. R. Cooksey, assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury.

W. C. DeLanoy, Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Hendon Chubb, chairman of the Advisory Board of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

R. M. Little, chairman Federal Civil Employees Compensation Board.

Charles F. Nesbit, superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia.

B. D. Flynn, assistant secretary of the Travelers' Insurance Co., Hartford, Conn.

Secretary McAdoo. You have been considering this tentative measure which has been presented, and if you have reached any conclusions about it, or if you want to submit any report concerning it, I shall be glad to have you do so now.

Mr. Ide, president of the Home Life Insurance Co., calling attention to the personnel of the committee, said:

Mr. IDE. I think that possibly it would be well to call the attention of those present to the make-up of this committee. It is, of course, as you know, entirely without any affiliation or class, and it is territorially distributed to a remarkable degree. The various interests of life insurance are very widely represented. We have here representatives of the ordinary life insurance companies, of the industrial companies, fraternal organizations, the casualty and compensation companies, representatives of both American actuarial societies, and a representative of the agency organization of the country. I mention this fact because I think it is quite remarkable that in view of that variety of interest and variety of ideas which we might expect, the deliberations of this committee have been extraordinarily unanimous. We have been able to proceed with what I consider a great deal of dispatch. There has been no difference of opinion except on very minor points.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ALEXANDER. A question.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not believe the gentleman has answered the questions of the gentleman from Alabama. He mentioned a great many eminent attorneys, a great many able jurists, but in that list of names he has not mentioned one single man who has had any experience in pension law, not one; and when this bill was drafted, I repeat—

Mr. ALEXANDER. I object to the gentleman making an extended statement in my time. I place a different estimate on those men from the estimate that he places on them. Many of these men are familiar with our pension legislation, as familiar as is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY], the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. But this is not a pension bill per se; it is more.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am in favor of the bill, and I am also a member of the Pension Committee, and I understand this bill is in the nature of a pension bill—something in that nature. It does seem to me somewhat peculiar that no one from the Interior Department who understood the pension laws was selected. Can you tell me why that was?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have no knowledge of why that was not done.

Mr. LINTHICUM. All the men seem to have been selected elsewhere. They were selected from the Department of Commerce and from other places, but none from the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This is not a pension bill. It is to provide for the military and naval forces of the country a reasonable measure of indemnity against the risk incurred by reason of the service of officers and men in this present war. It is to be administered entirely apart from our existing pension laws. It does not conflict with them in any respect. The two may go along together. If there are any inequalities, they can be worked out in the future in the interest of the veterans of prior wars.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Was it because the Pension Bureau was not in favor of this bill that no one from that bureau was selected, and it was provided that this law should be administered in another department?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not understand that the Pension Bureau does not favor this bill. I have no idea whatever that the question whether that bureau favors this bill ever entered into the minds of the men who drafted this bill.

The question may be asked why this bill was placed in my hands to introduce into the House, rather than in the hands of the chairman of one of the Pension Committees. I presume it is for the reason that it is an amendment to the war-risk insurance law. I introduced the bill creating the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, which became a law September 2, 1914.

That was regarded as a war measure. The purpose was to authorize the Government to issue war-risk insurance on vessels, their cargoes, and freight money. I introduced the bills amending that law in various particulars. Later, and since we became participants in the present war, in May last I introduced a bill again amending the war-risk insurance law to provide that the owners of vessels under the American flag should insure their officers and crews, and in the event they did not do so the Government should insure them and charge the premium to the owners of the vessels. That bill became a law and has proven a great boon to the crews in our merchant fleet engaged in the over-seas trade. This bill came along, further amending the war-risk insurance law to provide for family allowances, compensation, or pensions—I care not what you call them—and insurance to the officers and men in the present war. The original bill logically should have gone to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I was chairman, but it went to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have no kick about that. That committee acted very intelligently and promptly on the first bill, as it did on the succeeding bills; and when this bill came in I assume the Speaker sent it to that committee because that committee had had jurisdiction over the other bills relating to the War-Risk Insurance Bureau in the Treasury Department.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Is there any assurance that the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, whose departments are mostly concerned in this bill, approve it? We have nothing in the hearings to show that they do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am not authorized to speak for them, but I do not hesitate to express the opinion that they do; and if it is necessary to satisfy the gentleman's mind, I think I can get a statement from them to that effect.

Mr. PLATT. I will not vote for the bill unless I know they do approve it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well. I will take it up with them and see what their attitude is.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman says this is an amendment to the war-risk insurance law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Does not the bill on page 26, section 314, also state that it is an amendment to the pension laws?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I do not know of any such thing as that in the bill.

Mr. SWITZER. I will invite all the Members to read—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Do not take my time for that purpose. I do not see where it would be of any interest if it were true.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman have the Commissioner of Pensions write us a letter before we come to vote on this bill? Will the gentleman procure from the Commissioner of Pensions a letter approving this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know whether he would approve of it or not, but I can ask him for a letter.

Mr. SWITZER. I will modify my request.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I will say that I would like to have read to the House a letter that the present Commissioner of Pensions wrote to Mr. SWEET in answer to Mr. SWEET's letter.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will ask the gentleman not to take up my time to do that.

As I said, before being interrupted, a tentative draft of the bill was submitted to the committee to which I referred, and whose names I have given you.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit, I think in fairness to the gentleman from Missouri he ought to permit those who labor under the delusion that this is a pension bill to make their speeches, but not to take up their time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Some of these gentlemen seem more concerned about the committee to whom the bill should have been referred than they are about its merits. But I will proceed, if I may, to discuss the bill.

The purpose of the bill is to furnish those who constitute the Army and Navy of the United States in the present war protection or indemnity for injury or loss which they or their dependents may sustain by reason of such service. This duty is laid on the Government of the United States as representing all the people and its proper discharge involves the following considerations:

Adequate support of dependents during service and safeguarding the interests of the enlisted men while in the service.

Adequate provision for support of those in the service during disability arising therefrom.

Adequate provision for dependents in case of death.

Added protection by a scheme of life insurance by the Government in favor of officers and enlisted men, and Army and Navy Nurse Corps (female), in which the Government assumes the increase in the rate of premium which is occasioned by the Government calling them into the service of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have difficulty in ascertaining the viewpoint of the framers or supporters of the bill so far as the insurance feature is concerned as to whether it is supplemental to the compensation feature or whether it is entirely a correlative matter. In this bill the Government makes a favorable allowance to all dependents of the enlisted man or officer in case he is disabled or partially disabled, for their future support. On what theory does the Government go further and allow the officer or enlisted man to take out insurance when they have made adequate provision for all officers and soldiers injured or partially disabled in the service?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not say that the provisions made in this bill are adequate. I would not say that from the standpoint of compensation. We take men out of civil life and put them in the Army; we take them away from gainful pursuits. Thousands and thousands of men have been taken out of employment in which their earnings were large, far more than they will receive under this bill or any bill we might frame.

To say that it is a compensation in the full sense to them would be an exaggeration. In order that the men who are called into the Army and the Navy of the United States may further protect themselves and add to the compensation provided in Article III, a scheme of insurance is provided. The Government insures them at a minimum rate, so that they in the future, if disabled, may have increased protection; in the event of their death their dependents may have further protection than that given under Article III.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the request and ask that my colleague may be allowed to complete his remarks. He is the author of the bill. I do that at the suggestion of myself and Judge ADAMSON, the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] asks that his colleague have unanimous consent to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Assuming that the compensation is not adequate, I would ask this question: Whether it would not be far better, if the compensation provided in the bill is not adequate, to take the amount of money the Government is going to spend in the insurance feature, estimated at one and one-half billions, if we are in the war two years, with only 25 per cent of the enlisted men and officers availing themselves of the insurance, to make the compensation full and adequate rather than to allow the officers who are able to take advantage of these tremendously preferential features of insurance, which will cost the Government a billion and a half dollars the second year of the war?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Just what the equities in that regard may be I will not undertake to say; except so far as the officers and privates are concerned the bill extends the same privilege as regards insurance to all alike.

It further provides that they (the officers) can only claim the benefits of Article III in the event that they do not receive retirement pay and allowances. Hence, if an officer is wounded and suffers disability in the service and is retired, he must either relinquish his retired pay and allowances or else deny himself the benefits under Article III. In the event of their death there is no reason, to my mind, why their beneficiaries under the bill should have the benefits provided by Articles III and IV.

So far as the privates are concerned, I think we ought to have regard for their interests, and I believe that generous provision for the most part is being made for them. But we are undertaking to do more than to add to the compensation provided for in Article III. The insurance which, under Article IV, they may elect to take, and if they should take $5,000 insurance at an expense to them of $8 a year per $1,000, to be withheld from their pay, it would, if they take out $5,000 insurance, add from $25 to $30 a month to their income if permanently disabled, or in the event of their death to their beneficiaries, for a period of 20 years.

It does strike me that that is a just and intelligent way to treat the matter.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. IGOE. In his remarks the gentleman has called attention to the fact that most of these men would earn before they went into the Army $75 or more a month—

Mr. ALEXANDER. I said many of them.

Mr. IGOE. Many of them; and I think that is not an exaggeration. Many are making several hundred dollars a month. Now, why should there be a percentage established by this bill of the compensation that is paid when they are not going into it for the salary? Why should there be a discrimination between a man who makes $500 a month in civil life and goes in as a private soldier and gets $33 a month and a man who may be making $75 a month in civil life and gets $300 a month in the Army?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They all receive substantially the same pay, except commissioned officers.

Mr. IGOE. I know. Here is a man who has a wife and has been supporting her under certain conditions. She can not be sustained on $33 a month. He is killed and his wife gets compensation on the basis of $33 a month, not less than $30—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Forty dollars is the minimum for the totally disabled or killed, and added to that is so much for the wife and children, and the total compensation may be something over $100 a month.

Mr. IGOE. I was trying to get at how the committee should feel that this was a just way to figure the compensation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I say, I would not undertake to figure or say that every provision in the bill is just. The compensations are based on the rate of pay received.

Now, I want to return to the administrative features of the bill and answer briefly the objection that this bureau is made a division of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau of the Treasury Department, when it should be a division of the Pension Bureau. Now, as I said, the bill amends an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914. In the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance is created a division of marine and seamen's insurance. That division exists now in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and it requires the owners of vessels to insure their masters and crews, otherwise the Government insures them and charges the premium to the vessel's owners. The policy was to protect the officers and men on our maritime ships going into the war zone and give them more protection than the wages paid them. It works well and it meets the needs and facilitates our foreign commerce and encourages men to go into this hazardous employment who otherwise might shrink from it if provision is not made for themselves and their families. There is also provided in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance under this bill a division of military and naval insurance, in addition to the division of marine and seamen's insurance, each in charge of a commissioner, and each of whom shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. It does not impress me as a very extravagant provision.

We have created one new bureau or division, and we now propose to create another, with a commissioner at a salary of $5,000 per annum. The director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is charged with the duty of administering, executing, and enforcing the provisions of the act, and for that purpose is given full power and authority to make rules and regulations not inconsistent with its provisions necessary or appropriate to carry out its provisions. The bureau and its divisions are given such deputies, assistants, actuaries, clerks, and other employees as may be from time to time provided by Congress. With the exception of the directors and necessary experts, all the employees shall be appointed under the civil-service law. Somebody has said that it would be a great political machine in the Treasury Department. I can not see any evidence of that in the act. The administration of this law will necessarily involve an increase of force, but all those employees, except special experts, come under the civil service. Suppose the duty of administering this law were devolved upon the Pension Bureau. Would it not be necessary to create another division, charged with the duty of administering this law quite apart from the existing bureaus or divisions charged with the duty of administering our present pension laws? Would not that involve an increase in the number of experts and clerks? Is it reasonable to suppose that the cost would be less than if these divisions are created in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau? It does not seem reasonable to me to believe that that is true. Now, under existing law the Pension Bureau is overwhelmed with work. Thousands of claims for pensions for widows entitled to increases under the act of September, 1916, have not yet been acted upon. The force in the Pension Bureau has been decreased in years past on account of the decrease in work, and it may ultimately be decreased to the point that when this war is over the duty of the administration of this law may be transferred to the Pension Bureau or the experts from that bureau and employees may be transferred to this War-Risk Insurance Bureau if it becomes a permanent bureau of the Government for the administration of this law.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Is not there something in the contention of the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey that Article II in reference to allotments and family allowances of this bill ought to be administered by the Departments of War and Navy, Article III by the Pension Bureau, and Article IV by a new bureau?

Mr. ALEXANDER. And make a mess of it.

Mr. PLATT. I think myself that Article III, as it relates to pensions—

Mr. ALEXANDER. All these provisions relate to the same men.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order—

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman be recognized for that purpose when a gentleman has the floor speaking?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order of no quorum can be made at any time.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. ADAMSON and Mr. ESCH) reported that there were—ayes 2, noes 104.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum of the committee is present, and the gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, this bureau shall, so far as practicable, arrange with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for the services of the surgeons in the respective services.

The Secretary of the Treasury is given authority to establish an advisory board consisting of three members skilled in the practice of insurance against death or disability to assist the division of military and naval insurance in fixing premium rates and the adjustment of claims for losses under the contracts of insurance provided for in Article IV and in adjusting claims for compensation under Article III.

The compensation of the members of the advisory board is fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but shall not exceed $20 a day for each while actually employed.

Ample power is given the director, commissioners, and deputy commissioners to issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents, and other evidence, and to obtain information and reports from other departments of the Government of the United States and of the several States.

It is made the duty of the director to submit to the Secretary of the Treasury annually estimates of the appropriations necessary for the work of the bureau.

The sum of $100,000 is appropriated to pay all expenses incident to the work authorized under the act.

Section 18 of the bill carries an appropriation of $141,000,000, to be known as the military and naval family allowance appropriation, to pay family allowances provided by Article II.

Section 19 of the bill carries an appropriation of $12,150,000, to be known as the military and naval compensation appropriation, to pay compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies provided by Article III.

The estimates have been submitted by five distinguished actuaries of the probable expenditures under this bill in the first and second years of the war. This bill appropriates $176,150,000. The report of the actuaries on which these estimates are based is as follows:

ACTUARIAL REPORT.

The committee has been requested to assume that on or about September 1, 1917, 1,000,000 men will compose the Army and 175,000 men, including marines, the Navy. It has also been assumed that there will be 1,000,000 men of the Army at the front by September 1, 1918, and about 100,000 men of the Navy in the war zone at that time.

Family allowance fund. Article XI: The amount payable during the first year, beginning about September 1, 1917, on account of "Family allowances," as provided for in the bill, is estimated at $141,000,000.

In arriving at this amount it has been assumed that the average allowance for men with dependents would be $300 per year per man, and that approximately 40 per cent of the men would be found to have dependents under the bill. The provisions of the bill apply only when a member or members of a family are actually dependent in whole or in part, and this has been interpreted to mean that the dependency must be substantial.

In reaching this conclusion the following factors, among others, have been taken into consideration:

1. Many young men whose parents are not dependent upon them may, nevertheless, contribute partly to their parents' support.
2. Young men drafted or about to be sent abroad may marry before leaving.
3. One or more relatives may become dependent and the status changed during the year.

The above amount is necessarily the result of a broad estimate, given according to our best judgment, but subject to serious fluctuation on account of possible variation in the rules of the draft, the application of the rules for exemption, and the strictness of the bureau in dealing with doubtful claims.

If the war should continue for still another year, or until September 1, 1919, and the number of men in the Army and Navy be gradually increased to 2,000,000, the estimated total family allowances payable in the year on the above basis would be $190,000,000, the average number of men in the service during that year being nearly 1,600,000.

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH OR DISABILITY, ARTICLE III.

(a) Compensation for death: It is estimated that the amount payable during the first year on account of deaths occurring in the course of service will be approximately $3,700,000. It is assumed that on the average there will be 250,000 men of the Army in active service in Europe during the first year and 100,000 men of the Navy in the war zone.

A death rate of 4 per 1,000 has been applied to the 825,000 men of the Army and Navy held at home stations.

To the 350,000 men referred to above as exposed to the war hazard a death rate of 75 per 1,000 was applied. In arriving at this rate the experience of several life insurance companies was considered, and also such information as was available regarding the casualties in the various armies of Europe.

The average amount payable per man was estimated to be $500 a year, only half of one year's payment, on the average, becoming due during the year ending September 1, 1918.

The operation of workmen's compensation acts indicates that a higher rate of dependency is experienced in the case of men who are killed than appears during active life. It was therefore assumed that 50 per cent of those killed would have dependents.

If the war should last still another year, or until September 1, 1919, and if during that year the total number of men were gradually increased to 2,000,000, it is estimated that the amount payable during that year on account of deaths would be approximately $22,000,000.

(b) Compensation for total disability: The estimate as to the amount payable during the first year on account of total disability is $5,250,000 and for the second year $35,000,000.

There are two classes of totally disabled men—those who have no dependents, and are entitled to about $500 a year, and those who have dependents (parents seem to be excluded by the law), and entitled to about $800 per year.

These estimates are based on the assumption that 50 of each 1,000 men exposed to the hazard of war will be totally disabled under the provisions of the bill, the assumption being predicated on such information as was obtainable from the British, Canadian, and German war records, although these are fragmentary.

As in the case of "Family allowance," it was assumed that 40 per cent of the men would have dependents.

(c) Compensation for partial disability: The estimate as to the amounts payable for the first year after September 1, 1917, for claims on account of partial disability is $3,200,000 and for the second year $21,000,000.

The following assumptions have been made in determining the above amounts:

1. That the schedule allowances will be approximately the average allowance for the four States, California, Kentucky, New Jersey, and Wisconsin, under their workmen's compensation laws.
2. That no commuted values of future payments will be allowed (if allowed they would add to the amount payable in the early years, but would decrease the outlay thereafter).
3. That the number of men who will be partially disabled will be 75 per 1,000, the estimate as to this rate being derived from the same sources as was that used in connection with total disability.
4. That the average allowances for the various types of partial disability would be 40 per cent of those for total disability.
5. It was again assumed that 40 per cent of the men would have dependents under the bill.

This estimate would, of course, be very wide of the mark if a scale of compensation differing materially from the one assumed should be adopted.

INSURANCE, ARTICLE IV.

Under Article IV of the bill provision is made for voluntary insurance of from $1,000 to $10,000, to be paid at death or total disability. As under the bill every man is automatically insured for $5,000 from April 13, 1917, or from the date of his enlistment, if afterwards, until 120 days after the passage of the bill, it has been assumed that this amount represents the average amount which the framers of the bill expected would be applied for by Army and Navy men.

On the basis of the assumptions previously made as to the rates of death and of total disability and of the number of men in the service at home and abroad, the net amount payable by the Government for the year ending September 1, 1918, would be $46,000,000 if 25 per cent of the men were covered for $5,000 each, and $92,000,000 if 50 per cent were so covered, due allowance having been made for the receipt by the Government of the full annual premium from all the men who might take the insurance.

It has been assumed that those who stay at home and those who are ordered abroad would apply for the insurance in equal proportions, although it is probable that a higher percentage of the latter would apply and would also take larger amounts than the former.

In the second year the amounts payable are estimated to be $225,000,000 if 25 per cent apply, or $450,000,000 if 50 per cent apply.

Under the bill the beneficiaries of those who died in the service or were totally disabled prior to its passage, or within 120 days thereafter, would be entitled to $5,000, provided the men were in service on or after April 13, 1917. No estimate of the amount payable on this account has been made.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the war is over the family allowances will presumably cease, but the payments for death and disability benefits will increase for at least a year thereafter. If the war lasts beyond September 1, 1919, the amounts payable will increase enormously as compared with those of the second year.

These estimates deal only with actual payments falling due in the first and second year. For several of the benefits the obligation will of course continue for a long period.

Many who are partially disabled will be able to continue in actual service in Europe until the war is over, and yet will have justifiable claims for disability benefits when they return to civil life.

Any changes made in the preliminary draft of the bill may have a material effect upon these estimates.

In conclusion, the committee wishes to draw attention to the difficulty of obtaining reliable information as to various types of casualties in the present war. In many instances, therefore, only broad general assumptions based on judgment and experience could be made.

ARTHUR HUNTER.
JAMES D. CRAIG.
HENRY MOIR.
JOSEPH H. WOODWARD.
JOHN K. GORE, Chairman.

I concur in the above.

S. H. WOLFE,
Captain, Quartermaster, U. S. R.

Family-allowance fund.

Estimated amount payable:

First year—
Average Army (men)-----	1,000,000
Average Navy (men)-----	175,000
	1,175,000
Average allowance, $300 to 40 per cent of men, or-----	$120
		$141,000,000
Second year—
Average number men in both Army and Navy-----	1,587,000
Average allowance, as above-----	$120
	$190,440,000
Considered as-----		190,000,000

Compensation for death.

Estimated amount payable:

First year—
Men in active service, Army-----	250,000
Men in active service, Navy-----	100,000
	350,000
Death rate 75 per thousand deaths-----		26,250
Men in reserve, Army-----	750,000
Men in reserve, Navy-----	75,000
	825,000
Death rate 4 per thousand deaths-----		3,300
Total deaths-----		29,550
Average allowance one-half year's payment of $500 to 50 per cent-----		$125
	$3,693,750
Considered as-----		3,700,000
Second year—
Deaths in first year-----	29,550
Average allowance $500 to 50 per cent-----	$250
	$7,387,500
Deaths in second year, exposed 1,587,000 by 75 per thousand-----	119,025
Average allowance as per above-----	$125
	14,878,125
	22,265,625
Considered as-----		22,000,000

Compensation for total disability.

Estimated amount payable:

First year—
Men in active service (Army and Navy)-----	350,000
Totally disabled at rate of 50 per thousand-----	17,500
Totally disabled with dependents, 40 per cent-----	7,000
Totally disabled without dependents, 60 per cent-----	10,500
Totally disabled with dependents, 7,000; average allowance one-half year of $800 per man, $400-----	$2,800,000
Totally disabled without dependents, 10,500; average allowance one-half year of $500 per man, $250-----	2,625,000
	5,425,000
Considered as-----		5,250,000
Second year—
On disablements of previous year, excluding deaths of beneficiaries; complete year (2×5,425,000)-----	10,850,000
Exposures of second year-----	1,587,000
Exposures of first year-----	350,000
Ratio of second year to first-----	4.53
Previous year's cost-----	$5,425,000
Product last two items-----	24,575,250
	35,425,000
Considered as-----		35,000,000

Compensation for partial disability.

Estimated amount payable:

First year—
Total disablements assumed at rate of 50 per thousand-----
Partial disablements assumed at rate of 75 per thousand-----
Therefore partial disablements=150 per cent of total-----
Average per cent of disability, 40-----
Average amount payable of partial disability, 60 per cent of amount payable for total-----
Amount payable for total disability first year-----	$5,425,000
And 60 per cent equals-----	3,255,000
Considered as-----		3,200,000
Second year—
Amount payable for total disability second year-----	35,425,250
And 60 per cent equals-----	21,255,150
Considered as-----		21,000,000

Insurance against death and disability.

Estimated amount payable:

First year, assuming 25 per cent insurance-----
Total number of men-----	1,175,000
25 per cent-----	293,750
Average premiums per man-----	$40
		$11,750,000
Payments by men-----
Deaths first year-----	29,550
Total disablements-----	17,500
Total-----	47,050
25 per cent-----	11,762
Average insurance-----	$5,000
		$58,810,000
Total insurance-----
Cost-----	$47,060,000
Considered as-----		$46,000,000
Second year—
Total number of men (average)-----	1,587,000
25 per cent-----	396,750
Total premium at rate of $40-----	$15,870,000
Deaths second year-----	119,025
Total disablements second year-----	79,350
Total-----	198,375
25 per cent-----	49,594
Average insurance-----	$5,000
		$247,970,000
Total insurance-----
Cost-----	$232,100,000
Considered as-----		225,000,000

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I know there are about $100,000 appropriated for the purpose of administration. Could not a large part of that be saved to the Government if this were put in the Pension Department?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, was the gentleman here just before the point of no quorum was made? I discussed that question and do not want to take the time of the committee to go over it again.

Mr. DOWELL. The question I was going to ask was, Can there be any objection from the point of administration why the Pension Department could not be equipped to administer this department?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Pension Bureau now is charged with the administration of the pension laws which are framed for the veterans of previous wars. It is overwhelmed with work, and it would require the creation of another division and an increase in the force would undoubtedly be necessary.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Treasury Department, in his opinion, is not as much overwhelmed at the present time as the Pension Bureau?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. The work of that bureau has been conducted with signal ability and dispatch and economy, and up to this time has never cost the Government a farthing. The premiums collected have been far in excess of any losses.

Mr. DOWELL. But necessarily the new department will be equipped with inexperienced men throughout, and is it not advisable always to equip a department with experienced men, and could not that be done cheaper by the Pension Bureau than to establish a new department with all inexperienced men?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have argued that question and do not care to repeat it now. You take the Director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, Mr. De Lanoy, and the advisory board, I do not know of any more competent men in the Pension Office than they are. They are experts. And as far as the clerical force is concerned, what difficulty will there be in providing it to meet these new conditions in the War-Risk Bureau rather than in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. RAYBURN. I just wanted to state in answer to the gentleman's interrogatory, that it is supposed that this is going to be presided over by the most efficient men in the country, and these actuaries, and people like that, and these commissioners, are men supposed to be skilled in this work in the subject of pensions, compensation, and insurance. Of course, the clerical force amounts to nothing, because that is all routine business. We think when it comes to service, that for $6,000 we can command the services of very able men, because very able men are serving the Government at $6,000 and less.

Mr. DOWELL. I think that is true, but what I was inquiring about was that there are a number of efficient men now in the Pension Department who for years have been doing this character of work. The arrangement of these plans will be done by experts. They will be paid for as experts, but when the machinery is put into operation the question that I raise is, Could it not be done more efficiently and with less expense in a department that has already been equipped for that purpose?

Mr. RAYBURN. When this machinery is set in motion the department will be set in motion; all those rules and regulations will be set out, and it can go on efficiently then.

But under this proposition, under this compensation, under this insurance, new questions will ever be arising under this law, I think, and it should have men especially trained along those lines to take care of this proposition. And I do not say that the Pension Bureau is efficiently officered, but the question of compensation, the question of insurance, is a different question from pensions only.

Mr. DOWELL. Then may I inquire if it would not be better to add just what the Government has suggested, to the Pension Department, and would it not then be better equipped than you can equip a new department, and could you not add these experts at much less expense?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think if you were to put this department in the Pension Bureau you would cause confusion between the two systems.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope no one else will come in and ask the question, Why can not this law be administered by the Pension Bureau? If they do, I must decline to repeat the argument. It is getting threadbare.

Section 20 of the bill carries an appropriation of $23,000,000, to be known as the military and naval insurance appropriation.

Premiums collected for insurance provided for by Article IV are deposited in the Treasury to the credit of this fund. Such sum and premium payments are permanently appropriated to discharge liabilities of the United States incurred upon contracts of insurance issued under the provisions of Article IV.

Section 21 sets aside as a separate fund in the Treasury to be known as the military and naval deposit fund all sums held out of pay of enlisted men as provided by section 203. Such fund and all additions and interest accumulations are permanently appropriated to carry out the provisions of section 203.

Section 22 contains the definition of the terms used in Articles II, III, and IV. Article II relates to the family allowances. Article III relates to the compensations for death and permanent or partial disability. Article IV relates to the scheme of insurance.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will it disturb the gentleman to ask him a question there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. RUSSELL. You begin now with the article on allotments, do you not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; or family allowances.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to see if I understand the provisions of the bill. I have been asked this question by a constituent, and I want to know if I can answer him certainly and correctly. There are two aged people, a man and wife, unable to support themselves. They have three boys. Two of them are married and can only support their own families. One of the sons is single, and he tries to help his mother and father all he can. Now, then, as I read this bill, if that boy gives to his mother and father $10 a month the Government will pay them $10 a month?

Mr. ALEXANDER. He is to allot them a minimum amount of $15 and the Government will make them an additional allowance of $10 each.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is provided in one place in this bill, if I am correct, that where a mother and father are dependent on the soldier the Government will pay them $20—$10 to each. Am I correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; that falls under class B. If there be two parents, it is $20.

Mr. FESS. Have you not made an error there? You are speaking of compulsory payments.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I am speaking of those in class B.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not understand that it is compulsory on the part of the soldier to pay his father and mother anything.

Mr. RAYBURN. If he has been contributing to their support, it is.

Mr. RUSSELL. This boy is now paying them $10 a month. That is all he thinks he can afford. How much will the Government pay those two old people?

Mr. RAYBURN. If he has one parent, $10; if he has two, $20. That makes $35.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then the boy will pay $15 and the Government $20?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; but as to parents, that is elective. Allowances to them are made only while dependent on the son and while he makes an equal allotment with minimum allotment of $15, where he makes no allotment to class A.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is what I say. The gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. RAYBURN] says that he is bound to give them $15.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I did not so state, except with the qualification mentioned.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman in charge of the bill said so. Mr. ALEXANDER. Has my colleague any further inquiry to make?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; that is all.

Mr. ALEXANDER. He may elect to have part of his pay set apart for the benefit of his father and mother. If so, the Government will pay one parent $10, or the two $20, while dependent, but he is required to allot a minimum of $15 if he has not made an allotment to class A.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that regardless of whether he pays $10 or $15?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; only in the circumstances mentioned.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think there is confusion there.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If the soldier has been helping his mother and she is dependent, I think the bill requires him to pay a certain amount to her. He has no option on that, has he?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The compulsory allotment of one-half pay is made in favor of members of his family; that is, his wife and children.

Mr. FESS. But he has no wife and children.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In that event, if he has been contributing to the support of his parents before the war, then an adjustment is made for the payment of a certain part. An average sum will be estimated, and the Government, in addition, will supplement it as I have stated.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. If I understand page 15 correctly, there can be no allowance by the Government under class B unless the enlisted man has made a monthly allotment of his pay. Is that correct?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is for those dependent on the man, and then only while he makes an equal monthly allotment, with a maximum of half pay.

Mr. LITTLE. But there will be no allowance by the Government unless the man is making an allotment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No.

Mr. LITTLE. Are the women mentioned on page 14 in this capacity required to make a monthly allotment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The allotments relate to enlisted men. Article II is confined to enlisted men.

Mr. LITTLE. Does that include women?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I assume it does not. Section 200 reads: That the provisions of this article shall apply to all enlisted men in the military and naval forces of the United States.

Mr. FESS. The term used here is "man."

Mr. LITTLE. Under section 201, to whom does the woman make allotment? In favor of her husband?

Mr. ALEXANDER. She might, or to her children.

Mr. LITTLE. The allotment of pay, subject to the conditions, and so forth, shall be compulsory to the "wife." Is it compulsory on the woman to support her husband?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It may be, but I do not so construe this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. But it either is or is not. I would like to understand the gentleman positively.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Why should it not be if this act applied to her?

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand correctly that under page 11 a woman is compelled to make an allotment to her husband?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would not be prepared to answer that offhand, because I want to be accurate. I would say not unless there is some other provision in the bill which includes her.

Mr. LITTLE. I would like to have the information later, off the floor, when the gentleman has time. Unless she is compelled to make an allotment under section 201, then under page 15 there would not be any allotment to her children, would there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman mean that there could not be any allotment to her children unless it was also made to her husband?

Mr. LITTLE. The Government will make no allotment to a woman's children, according to the section on page 14, unless on page 15 she has herself made allotment to somebody. You seem to agree with me on that. Then, turning to page 11, that explains in section 201 what she will have to allot, or else there is no explanation in the bill. Now, that, as I understand it, would mean that it would have to be allotted to her husband. It seems to me a little odd, and that is the question I put to you. Is it compulsory that a woman in the service allot to her husband?

Mr. FESS. On page 9, line 6, in the definitions, it is provided that the word "man" also means woman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman from Kansas will look on page 9, line 6—

Mr. LITTLE. I have read that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It says that—

The terms "man" and "enlisted man" mean a person, whether male or female, and whether enlisted, enrolled, or drafted into active service in the military or naval forces of the United States, and include non-commissioned and petty officers—

But the gentleman has overlooked the language at the beginning of the section—lines 1 and 2, page 8—

In Articles II, III, and IV of this act, unless the context otherwise requires *

Note the language, "unless the context otherwise requires."

Now read the language in lines 1 and 2, page 8, in connection with the definition of "man" and "enlisted man," beginning in line 6, page 9.

Mr. LITTLE. We seem to have agreed on everything now except this question concerning page 11, and that is as to whom this woman must allot before her dependents can get in for the Government allotment, or does she allot to her husband?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not understand that the allotment should be enforced against her in favor of her husband, unless she is included in the words "enlisted men" in section 200, page 11, and the subsequent provisions of Article II. Will the context justify her inclusion?

Mr. LITTLE. That would be satisfactory to me; but under the bill as it now reads it seems that the woman must allot to her husband, or else there is no provision for her compulsory allotment, and if there is not, her children can not get anything under class B.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Possibly that is so, if your contention is correct.

Mr. LITTLE. I would suggest to the committee that they prepare an amendment on that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We will first determine whether or not it is necessary. If it is, I am sure it will be done, if it is the intention to make the wife subject to the compulsory-allotment provision.

Mr. HUSTED. As I understand the provisions of section 201, on page 11, if an enlisted man has a wife or a child, or a former wife divorced, he is compelled to make an allotment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. A minimum allotment of $15.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, that is entirely irrespective of a man's independent means or of the independent means of the wife or of the child or of the former wife divorced.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; if application is made for it.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, assuming the case of a man who has an independent income of $10,000, whose child is amply provided for, and whose wife has large independent means, as I understand it, he is not only compelled to allot that $15, or whatever amount the law requires, but the Government is also compelled to make an allowance to that wife or to that child, or to that former wife divorced, even though they have ample means to take care of themselves.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. And there is no exception to that unless the wife sees fit, voluntarily, to waive the allotment in her favor, and she is not compelled to make that waiver.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is true.

Mr. HUSTED. Now, was that the intention of the committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think so.

Mr. HUSTED. Was it the intention of the committee, if a man has large independent means, and his family have large independent means, that the Government shall make a contribution toward their support?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It was intended that there should be no discrimination between the soldiers, that this allotment should apply equally to all. To undertake to discriminate and apply it to those who have dependents would greatly complicate the administration of the law and lead to great injustice in some cases; and if these men are called into the service, under the selective draft, if married men are not exempt, then this provision will apply to them without reference to their independent income.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. There is no discrimination as between the man with means and the man without means, or the woman with means and the woman without means.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is correct—under this provision.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I presume the committee thought that something could be left to the manhood and womanhood of American men and American women.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes. There is a provision here which would appeal to the classes of people to whom you refer—a wife with independent means, with her children amply provided for—that she, in their behalf as their guardian, may waive it. I assume that American women will be patriotic, and they will not demand of the Government any largess. If they are amply provided for, they will not ask for this allowance. They will not make any application for it, and hence the waiver will be made.

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman from Missouri says it would complicate the system if it were limited to dependents.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Because you would have to have proof in every case, and it would result in delay.

Mr. HUSTED. In class B you provide that the allotment shall only be made or the allowance made only in case the members of class B are actually dependent upon the enlisted men. Now, if that discrimination can be made in the case of members of class B, why can it not be made in the case of class A?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is a difference in the relationship and the legal obligation as between the husband and wife and children, and the soldier and his parents or grandparents. The law recognizes that difference.

Mr. HUSTED. I also note that the waiver only applies to the wife. It is not made to apply to the former wife, divorced.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. That is a discrimination.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have an amendment to cover that, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. DEWALT. It strikes me that in the discussion of this question of waiver both the gentleman who is now speaking and the gentleman questioning him have failed to read the latter clause of section 201, which provides not only that the waiver may be made by the wife but provides further that on the enlisted man's application or otherwise for good cause shown exemption from the allotment may be granted upon such condition as may be prescribed by regulation. Now, if the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. Taking the case that the gentleman has instanced, a man with an independent income of $10,000 a year, whose wife is well provided for, she might of her own motion waive the allotment. Second, he himself, though his wife was well provided for and not desiring to make an allotment could ask for the exemption of the allotment, and under proper regulations leave would be granted.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman think in the case of the wife who refuses to make this waiver—and we may assume that there are some women who might not do their duty—does the gentleman think it is right that the Government should contribute to her support when she has large independent means?

Mr. DEWALT. I do not; but I think that can be taken care of under proper regulation.

Mr. HUSTED. Even then, if the man does not make the application, the wife does not make the waiver, you have got to pay her the amount, notwithstanding she has large independent means.

Mr. DEWALT. I grant that; but if a man has independent means and she has independent means, it is scarcely likely that he would take something from his pay in order to get something from the Government.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I have studied the bill carefully and there is one thing confused in my mind as to this allotment. Suppose the soldier has no dependents at all, that he has parents and they are in good shape and that there is no one for him to make an allotment to as a dependent. Does this bill require the Government to withhold at least $15 a month for his own benefit?

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is another provision in section 203 to which I call the gentleman's attention, that in case one-half of the enlisted man's monthly pay is not allotted under regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, that proportion of his allotment shall be deposited to his credit to be held during the period of service, or as may be prescribed, and that such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, with semi-annual rests and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to his next of kin.

I have an amendment to that section to make it clear, that the next of kin are those entitled to his personal estate in the State where he resides.

Mr. FESS. So it is the judgment of the gentleman that in the case of every soldier the Government will withhold that part of his pay for his benefit?

Mr. ALEXANDER. For the benefit of the soldier. As stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], Gen. Pershing authorized him to say that a soldier has no need of more than seven or eight or nine dollars a month, and this provision is to provide against the improvidence of the soldier, and so we have provided that the Government may withhold a part of his pay for his own benefit.

Mr. FESS. We passed a law making his salary $33 a month, and now we are passing a law to withhold a part of it. There is no conflict there between the two.

Mr. ALEXANDER. None whatever.

Mr. FESS. We can do that?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Absolutely.

Mr. FESS. I raised the question because it would seem to me equitable that the boys at the front where one is sending home a certain portion and another does not need it, if the Government would withhold the same amount from all under some such provision as that it would be very equitable, and I wanted the opinion of the gentleman if that was the fact.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is the proper policy in the interest of the soldier, and in the event of his death that it may be for his beneficiaries.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will permit, I think the question asked by some gentleman a short time ago ought to be fully answered. If you start out to say that the man who is wealthy enough to maintain his family while he is away shall be without the Government allotment, then you are going to throw the whole system back to the proposition of dependent, and when you throw it back on the whole dependent you are going to have to investigate every case of every private that goes into the Army, and in the few cases where they will not waive the rights it will cost a great deal less for the Government than it would to try to investigate every case for dependents.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I gave those reasons, but not as well as the gentleman from Texas.

Now, I shall detain the committee but a few moments longer. There has been a difference of opinion here as to whether or not the provisions made by Article III may properly be called a pension or compensation.

I think this new plan should be divorced completely from all idea of pensions. It ought not to be associated in any way with the old pension system. It ought to be built up as an entirely new system, based upon a wholly different conception of our duty to our soldiers and sailors and their dependents from that which has inspired our old pension laws, and therefore it is essential in my judgment that the administration of the law should be in a different department from that which has dealt with the old pension system.

The new law proposes not pensions but compensations, indemnities, and insurance, based upon a uniform and equitable plan, which in turn is based upon the best experience of the States of the Union in connection with their compensation and indemnity laws, as well as upon scientific actuarial estimates. It would be inadvisable in any case to put the administration of the insurance features of this law in any other department than the Treasury. It naturally falls into the jurisdiction of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. To confer upon another department or departments the administration of the compensation and indemnity features would only distribute the control, with resulting disadvantage to prompt, economical, and efficient administration. The plan of the bill, as well as the administration of the system, is perfectly homogeneous and ought not, I think, to be altered. The President, as he has stated in his letter, concurs fully in this view.

The bill was submitted to the President along with the following letter explaining its provisions, and the President gave it his entire approval, as you will note from the letter of the President to the Secretary:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, July 31, 1917.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In accordance with your direction, I have made a careful study of the question of compensation, indemnity, and insurance for the officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces of the United States.

In this work the Treasury Department was represented by Assistant Secretary Rowe, Mr. William C. De Lanoy, director of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and Mr. Hendon Chubb, chairman of the advisory board of that bureau.

I have had the cordial cooperation of the committee on labor of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, Mr. Samuel Gompers, chairman. Mr. Gompers appointed a special subcommittee on compensation for enlisted men and their dependents, of which the Hon. Julian W. Mack, United States circuit judge, was made chairman.

The bill which I am submitting for your consideration was drafted by Judge Mack. Capt. S. H. Wolfe, detailed by the Secretary of War both to the committee on labor and to this department for cooperation in the work, has been very helpful. Representatives from other departments as well as an advisory draft committee of the committee on labor, have assisted. The Department of Commerce was represented by Assistant Secretary Edwin F. Sweet, the Navy Department by Maj. Henry Leonard, and the Department of Labor by Miss Julia C. Lathrop.

The advisory committee included Mr. P. Tecumseh Sherman, Mr. J. W. Sullivan, Mr. Frank Whiting, Mr. F. Spencer Baldwin, and Mr. D. L. Coase, and was aided by Mr. Everit Macy, Mr. A. Parker Nevin, and Dr. Lee K. Frankel, members of the executive committee of the committee on labor, and others. The legislative drafting bureau, through Mr. Beeman, also rendered valuable aid.

After Judge Mack had completed a revision of the bill, I submitted the measure to the advisory committee of insurance representatives appointed as a result of the insurance conference held July 2. This committee considered it over a period of two days and reported its general approval of the several parts of the bill, except that providing for Government insurance. They made a number of suggestions of change in details, some of which have been accepted. They opposed, however, the grant of any Government insurance over and above the compensation, on the ground that the other provisions were liberal enough and might be made more liberal in ways suggested by them. They favored, over and above compensation, the payment by the Government of $1,000 in each case of death during service, or within five years after discharge from the service, to such beneficiary as the man may nominate or to his estate in lieu of insurance.

One of their fundamental objections to the proposed plan of insurance whereby any man in the service can purchase from $1,000 to $10,000 of insurance was that this gave an opportunity to the wealthier men to get something which the poorer men could not obtain. They admitted that they had failed to ascertain the premium rates to be charged under the plan contemplated. This objection is not tenable, because the president of the Actuarial Society of America stated in their presence, in response to my question, that the premium rate to be made by the Government during the war would be between $7 and $8 per $1,000 of insurance. This rate would make the cost of $10,000 insurance only $80 per year—and only $40 per year for half that amount—and would enable practically every private to take the maximum amount.

I realize that the cost involved in the promulgation of such a comprehensive plan is a most important factor to be considered. Actuarial estimates were submitted to me. These estimates are necessarily of a tentative character owing to the fact that it is impossible to secure accurate data upon which to base calculations. After careful consideration of these estimates and after consultation with Capt. S. H. Wolfe, of the War Department, one of the leading actuaries of the country, I have reached the conclusion that if the bill is promptly enacted into law the total expenditure for the first and second years will be as follows:

	First year.	Second year.
Family allowances.....	$141,000,000	$190,000,000
Death indemnities.....	3,700,000	22,000,000
Compensation for total disability.....	5,250,000	35,000,000
Compensation for partial disability.....	3,200,000	21,000,000
Insurance against death and disability.....	23,000,000	112,500,000
Total.....	176,150,000	380,500,000

I have not attempted to estimate the cost for the third year, because it is difficult to construct at this time even reasonable assumptions for that year.

The bill which I am submitting to you is intended to meet those essential and fundamental principles of justice which you have so much at heart. Its main purpose is to grant a reasonable Government indemnity against the losses and risks incurred in the discharge of a patriotic duty and in the performance of an extraordinarily hazardous service to which the Government has called and forced the citizen. It provides not only for the man but for his family.

It aims to accomplish these ends by granting a reasonable measure of indemnity against the risk of loss—

- (1) Of support of the breadwinner;
- (2) Of life and limb;
- (3) Of present insurability at ordinary rates.

The risk of dependency, in the case of an enlisted man's family, is indemnified against by allotment of part of the pay of the enlisted man, supplemented by a family allowance granted and paid by the Government.

For wife and children up to 18, or if incapable of pursuing a substantially gainful occupation because of mental or physical infirmities, then without age limit, allotments are compulsory unless waived or exempted under regulations. For other dependents they are voluntary. The compulsory allotment must equal the family allowance, with a minimum, however, of $15 and a maximum of one-half pay. The monthly family allowance ranges from $5 to $50—maximum, dependent upon the size of the family, and, as to other kindred than wife and children, further dependent upon their actual needs and upon the amount ordinarily contributed by the man for their support. A voluntary allotment to these kindred, similar to the compulsory allotment for wife and children, is required as a condition to the allowance, but if the compulsory allotment is being made, then as to the additional allotment, a minimum of $5 and a maximum of one-seventh pay is a condition to the Government grant. The family allowance continues only for the war emergency.

To illustrate: A private gets $33 a month for service abroad. If he has a wife and two children, he must allot to them at least $15 out of his pay. The Government supplements this by giving the family an allowance of $32.50. This family's minimum income, therefore, would be $47.50. The father can allot as much more as he pleases. If there is another child, the Government will allow $5 additional. If that man should have a mother or father actually dependent upon him, and to whom he has been accustomed to contribute, say, $15 a month, he can secure an allotment of $10 a month from the Government for the parent by allotting $5 more of his pay. Thus, the private with a wife, three children, and a mother actually dependent upon him, by giving $20 out of his $33 a month, would get from the Government for his family $47.50 a month, giving the family an income of $67.50, and still leave the man $13 per month for spending money. If there are more children, or if there is also a dependent father, the Government would give up to $50 in all, over and above the man's own allotment.

To instill thrift, to enable a man to build up a fund out of which he can pay the insurance premiums, and, above all, better to preserve equality and democracy among the members of our own forces and between them and the allies, provision is made enabling the War Department and the Navy Department, by regulation, to compel men who do not allot one-half of their pay to deposit so much of the half pay as is not allotted, these deposits to bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, compounded semiannually. Inasmuch, however, as, subject to regulations of the War or Navy Departments, a man may allot as much of his pay as he pleases, and can thus out of his pay take care of some obligations he may have over and above the support of his family, this measure of compulsion seems mild and justified under all circumstances. Naturally the insurance committee, opposing as it does the insurance features, objects to this provision on the alleged ground of its interference with a man's rights; but the true reason for the objection would appear to rest upon the fact that compulsory deposits would be helpful to the insurance scheme.

The risk of disability or death, as to officers, men, and nurses while in active service as part of the military or naval forces of the United States is indemnified against by compensation on the analogy of the workmen's compensation act rather than through a pension system. The sacrifice of and loss to the family is, however, taken into consideration by varying the amount of compensation, both after death and during disability, with the size of the family.

While in some respects the compensation system gives less than the present pension system, in other respects, especially in caring for the family after the man's death, it gives more and, on the whole, aims at greater equity.

If total disability results from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the course of the service, the compensation, based on the percentage of pay, but with a minimum of from $40 to $75 per month, according to the size of the family, may increase for the higher officers to a maximum of $200 per month. Compensation, however, is not payable while the officer receives retirement allowance.

Partial disabilities are compensated for on the basis of percentages of the compensation for total disability, dependent upon the average impairment of earning capacity resulting from such injuries in civil occupations. Provision is made for commutation under regulations, but of a part only of the compensation.

Medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, supplies, and appliances are given.

Rehabilitation and reeducation of the injured men are vital to the scheme. Compensation is a helpful measure of justice, but rehabilitation and reeducation, fitting him for a life of activity and usefulness, either in his former or some other vocation, is an obligation fundamental both to him and his fellow men.

The bill does not attempt to cover the matter of means and methods of effecting this. A study of European experience, both as to the victims of war and of industry, is essential therefor. Two principles are, however, established in the bill:

(1) The man's obligations to avail himself of such opportunities as the Government may provide or cause to be provided under penalty of loss of compensation during any period of unreasonable refusal.

(2) A man's right to disability compensation regardless of his individual economic recuperation. This is an essential spur to the full development of his potentialities.

To illustrate some of these provisions and to contrast them with the pension provisions by practical examples: Assume that a man were totally disabled by losing both legs and both arms in battle. Under the existing pension system he would receive $100 a month, regardless of the size of his family. Under the compensation provisions of this bill, if he were a private and unmarried he would receive $40 per month, and if, as is most probable, he needed a nurse or attendant, up to $20 additional. If he had a widowed mother dependent upon him for support he would get another $10. If he subsequently married, his monthly compensation would be at once increased by $15. If later on he had children, the compensation would again be increased $10 a month for each of the first two children; a possible maximum of $105 a month.

In addition to this monthly payment, under either system he would be fitted with artificial limbs and would have treatment. His compensation or pension would not be affected by any increased earnings. Furthermore, if he wanted to set up as a small storekeeper, under the compensation system he would be allowed to commute $20 a month of his compensation; this might give him $1,000 or more and still leave him protected to some extent.

If death results from the injury or disease incurred or contracted in the course of the service, compensation is paid to the widow, children, and dependent widowed mother. The amount, based upon percentage of pay, ranges from a minimum, according to the size of the family, of $15 to $60 per month, to a maximum for the higher officers of $200 per month. Burial expenses of not exceeding $100, as may be fixed by regulations, are allowed. This compensation ends for widows two years after remarriage, for children on reaching 18, unless they are physically or mentally incapable of following a substantially gainful occupation. To give the young man returning in maimed condition the opportunity to secure the care, love, and comfort that only wife and children can give, the family status at the time of each monthly payment, and not at the time of the injury or discharge, determines the amount of the grant.

Death or disability resulting from injury suffered or disease contracted in the course of the service is covered, irrespective of the date when disability or death occurs, but if it occurs after discharge or resignation it is compensated for only if a certificate has been obtained within one year after discharge or resignation that the person was suffering from injury or disease so incurred or contracted likely to result later in death or disability.

To illustrate again: If the man above referred to died as a result of his injuries, leaving the wife, two children, and widowed mother, under the pension system the family would receive ordinarily $16, at best $24 a month; even an officer's family would receive only $34 a month. Under the compensation system the family would continue to receive $60 a month. On the death of the mother this would be reduced to $50. If the wife remarried it would continue at this rate for two years, and would then be reduced to $25 until the first child reached 18; thereafter to $15; terminating when the second child reached 18.

Risk of noninsurability at ordinary rates is indemnified against by the issuance of Government insurance, covering total disability and death, to officers, men, and Army nurses while in active service as part of the military or naval forces, in an amount of $1,000 to $10,000.

The excess cost due to the increased mortality and disability risk should clearly be borne by the Government. The cost of administering the insurance bureau for the benefit of the fighting men is also a proper governmental charge. As the Government will not have the other expenses incident to insurance, the premium rates to be charged by it are based upon the mortality experience tables of peace times without "loading." "Loading" comprises overhead charges, commissions to agents, advertising, etc., and is a large item in the premium charges of private companies.

The cheapest form of insurance, costing during the war on an average $8 per $1,000 of insurance, and thus bringing even the maximum of $10,000 insurance within the reach of practically every private, is provided for. After the war the insurance may be converted into other forms with earlier maturity, the premiums to be based, however, on the same mortality tables and without "loading." All insurance is to be payable in installments, to be nonassignable and free from the claims of creditors either of the insured or of the beneficiary. It is to be limited to wife, children, and other specified kindred. It must be applied for within 120 days after the terms are promulgated or subsequent enlistment or entrance into the service. For those who are totally disabled or die before they have had an opportunity to insure within the prescribed period of 120 days, insurance in the sum of $5,000 is deemed to have been applied for and granted.

Through the insurance the opportunity is given to every man to gain greater protection for himself and for his family than the Government itself voluntarily gives in case of total disability or death resulting from injuries or disease contracted in the service.

But it ought also to check any future attempts at service pension legislation by enabling a man now to provide against impairment through old age, total disability, or death resulting from other causes and to give all this protection to those kindred who may be dependent upon him and who do not share in the Government compensation. Under the present laws monthly service pensions range from $12 to $30 for a man, and $8 for the widow and $2 for a child.

The bureau is further empowered to give information to the men and to act for them in respect to their outstanding insurance. In this way many existing policies that might lapse may be saved by prompt payment of premiums out of the man's deposit.

The laws and experiences of other countries have been studied and used in the preparation of this bill. It is clearly recognized that the Government can offer but minimum protection based on general averages throughout the country, and that in many States and large cities especially, supplemental grants will be required. State and municipal legislation may be expected to meet this need.

On the administrative side, the bill provides for a division of the War-Risk Bureau into two sections, one on marine and seamen's insurance, the other on military and naval insurance. Each division is to have a commissioner under the direction of the bureau.

This, in general, is an outline of the proposed measure. We are not relying upon the volunteer system in this war. We are drafting men and compelling them to make, if necessary, the supreme sacrifice for their country. A higher obligation, therefore, rests upon the Government to mitigate the horrors of war for the fighting men and their dependents in so far as it is possible to do so through compensations, indemnities, and insurance. Less than this, a just, generous, and humane government can not do. We must set an example to the world, not alone in the ideals for which we fight, but in the treatment we accord to those who fight and sacrifice for us.

The proposed provisions for the men and their dependents should not be offered as gratuities or pensions, and they should not be deferred until the end of the war. The wives and children, the dependent mothers and fathers of the men, should not be left, as in previous wars, to the uncertain charity of the communities in which they live. The minds of our soldiers and sailors should be put at rest, so far as their loved ones are concerned, by the knowledge that they will be amply provided for by their Government as a part of the compensation for the service they are rendering to their country. In like manner they should know in advance that if they are killed in battle definite and just provision has been made for their dependents, and that if they are disabled, totally or partially—if they come back armless, legless, sightless, or otherwise permanently injured—definite provision is made for them, and that they are not going to be left to the uncertain chances of future legislation or to the scandals of our old pension system. Every man should know that the moment he is enlisted in the military service of the Government these definite guarantees and assurances are given to him not as charity but as a part of his deserved compensation for the extraordinary hazardous occupation into which his Government has forced him.

It may be suggested that the cost of this system is too great. Personally I have no patience with such a suggestion; I confess that I have only compassion for it. If, under this measure, the annual cost of doing justice to our fighting men and their dependents should amount to five, six, or seven hundred million dollars per annum at the crest of the load, it is an insignificant sum as compared with what these men do for their country and for the world. At this time we are contemplating expenditures during the fiscal year 1918 of more than $10,000,000,000 for the prosecution of the war—for the creation of armies and death-dealing instruments to be used in destroying enough human life to restore peace and justice in the world. Shall we hesitate to expend $700,000,000 more per annum, if need be—only about 6 per cent of the amount we propose to expend for purposes of the war—for the protection of the widows and orphans, the dependent and the injured, who, after all, make the greatest sacrifices of any part of our people, for the safety, security, and honor of our country?

Furthermore, it must be borne in mind that the Government will not escape those expenditures if this plan of compensation and insurance should be rejected, because the pension system would then be resorted to, and the cost would likely exceed that of the proposed plan. At the same time the pension system would not provide the same benefits nor cover the subject in the same comprehensive, humane, and equitable way. No provision is made under our pension laws for family allowances while the men are at the front nor for rehabilitation, life insurance, etc.

I earnestly recommend the enactment into law of the proposed measure. I hope that it may have your early consideration. Should it meet with your approval, I shall take great pleasure in bringing it to the attention of the proper committees of the two Houses of the Congress.

Sincerely, yours,
THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

W. G. MCADOO.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 7, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have examined the inclosed papers very carefully and take pleasure in returning them with my entire approval.
Faithfully, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

HON. WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Well, I will answer that. I can not say what future Congresses will do, but are the rates fixed in this bill too high for these men who go into the present war? That is the material question. If they are, reduce them. If the rates in the existing pension laws are equitable and should be applied to the soldiers of this war, be frank enough to say so. But take, for instance, the widow's pension under existing law. Until 1908, I believe, the widows of the Civil War received $8 per month. In order to receive that pension it was necessary for them to show that their husbands' disability was of service origin. In addition, that they did not have an income in excess of $200 a year. That was the provision made by our present pension laws for widows of veterans of the Civil War until recent years. The act of June 27, 1890, provided that no widows who married veterans of the Civil War after that date should participate or be entitled to pensions in the event of the death of their husband. Now it is only in recent years that we have increased the widows' pensions to $12 a month. We have done it without any intelligent discrimination between war widows and those who contracted marriage with veterans long years after the Civil War. It may be that war widows should have the same pension or compensation, if you please, as is provided for in this bill for widows of the present war, for the reason that under this proposed law only those widows are entitled to pensions or compensation in the event of the death of their husbands as a result of disability incurred in the service, and by the terms of the committee amendment, if the marriage was contracted before the injury. I think the committee amendment should be rejected and the bill should be amended to provide some limit after the injury—say 10 years. When we get to that provision of the bill I shall give my reasons for it. Would any committee of this Congress consider the claim of a war widow in the same class with a girl of 16 years of age who married a veteran of the Civil War 80 years old in 1905? Would you say in the event of his death she would have the same pension as provided for in this law?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is the reason, if the gentleman will permit, we amended the law so it provides only for widows who were wives at the time of the injury.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, you have made that wrong, as I think I can prove.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I beg to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think when these boys come home—mind you, they are from 21 to 31 years—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How many years would the gentleman make it then?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That we should impose a barrier against their marriage, and I think it is bad public policy.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Then what number of years would the gentleman put it at? Would he put any limitation?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I would say 10 years or 15 years, or some such limitation as that; and, while a man might have an arm or a leg off, he is eugenically sound, and I would like to know some good reason why children of the future are not to be the progeny of these brave men who have gone into this war to fight for our rights. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to say I would agree in reference to a 10-year limitation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to ask this further question, but will state I am not opposing this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I know the gentleman is not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am for the bill, but I want to make it consistent if I can. I want to see if the gentleman agrees with me about this. If I understand this bill, the widow of a soldier can not get a pension unless he died from injuries received in the service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Now, take this case—I will take an extreme case to make it stronger. Here are two men in the Army; they may be brothers. One may be rich and the other may be poor.

They are both wounded on the same day and in the same way, they each have both legs shot off. Now, the rich man dies of his wounds. His widow, if she has four children, will get $60 a month for the balance of her life. Now, the other brother, who is poor, survives the said wounds, both legs shot off. He has a wife and four children. Soon after the war ends he dies, say, of smallpox or some other disease not the result of his service. His widow and four children do not get a cent, do they?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he suffered disability in the service—

Mr. RUSSELL. I asked that question, as I understood that he had to die from his injury. One soldier does die from the injury and the other does not. The widow of the first gets compensation, the other widow does not.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he is disabled in service, this bill provides compensation to him in proportion to the injury; if he dies of his injuries, his dependents are provided for. Why, of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. I asked that question because I understood from the bill that a man must die of injuries received in the service or the wife gets nothing.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he suffered disability in the service, he gets compensation, limited to not less than $40 a month.

Mr. RUSSELL. But the man himself dies, and when he dies what about his widow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That goes to the wife and children.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I am not mistaken about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman is.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think he has to die from injury or disease contracted in the service.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the way I read the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course he must. This is not a service-pension bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. This man I speak of had both legs cut off. He left a widow and four children. If he survives the war and goes home, and dies of smallpox or pneumonia, and he does not die of the injuries he received in the service his widow and children do not get anything.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You say if he dies as a result of an injury received in the service, he does not get anything or his family does not get anything after his death?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; as I understand it. He must die from injuries received in the service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he dies from injury in the service, do you say his family does not receive anything?

Mr. RUSSELL. I say that if he dies of injuries received in the service his family gets something. But suppose he dies of disease—smallpox, or some disease—not contracted in the service, his widow does not get a cent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is possible that is true. It is true, as I understand the bill, that she would not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think there is any possibility about its being true. If this is so, I want to offer an amendment. I am for the bill, but I want it to be consistent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I say, the only two instances to which attention is called where the apparent inequality would exist between the man who suffers total disability, loses both arms, or both legs, or both eyes, is that under the existing law he would be entitled to $100 a month, whereas under this bill the minimum compensation, based, of course, upon his pay, would be $40 a month. In other words, he would receive more under existing law than under this bill. But the existing law does not make any discrimination between the married and the unmarried man. He may be a bachelor and receive $100 a month. If he is a married man and has a wife and 10 or 12 children, he receives the same compensation. Is that fair and equitable?

Now, when you talk about inequalities, and that this bill should be referred to committees of Congress skilled in the consideration of pension legislation, I am sure that you will agree with me that no proper consideration was ever given to that question in the past, or else there would have been a difference made between the single man and the married man—a man with and a man without dependents.

And as regards widows, as I have tried to show, the minimum compensation to the widow is $30 under this bill, and there is the class of war widows, widows of previous wars, that might be treated in the same way. But it has already been admitted on the floor by one gentleman that it would be inequitable to make the same rule apply to all widows of veterans of the Civil War without reference to when they were married. And the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] I think agrees with me that the limitations of this bill should be that the marriage was contracted within 10 or 15 years after the close of the war—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I said 10 years.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is another amendment in my mind—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Although the committee has given me unlimited time, I do not want to impose on it. I feel that I should bring my remarks to a close.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Does not the gentleman think that the widows of the old Civil War veterans who are all now advanced in years should receive at least as good consideration as the young widows of the veterans of the present war?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Pension Committee does not make any discrimination in favor of them. It takes care of the young widows, the ones who may have married for speculative reasons—

Mr. ASHBROOK. The existing law pays widows who are under 70 years of age $12 and over 70 years of age $20.

Mr. ALEXANDER. These widows, if they are over 70 years old, whether they are war widows or not, get the same compensation, although they may have married the veteran in 1905. If they are 70 years old—

Mr. RUSSELL. War widows get $20.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a gratuity of the Government, and it is inspired by this consideration: Here is an old man in the community who is poor, who is dependent, and who has no income other than his pension. He may become a charge on the community. We increase his pension in order that he may have better provision made for him. The appeal is because he is a veteran of the Civil War; but it is, nevertheless, a bounty; it is a gratuity; it could not in any sense be based upon service, because if he has served 90 days he gets the same consideration as the man who has served three years.

Mr. ASHBROOK. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The Sherwood bill provides—

Mr. ALEXANDER. They all get $30 a month after a certain time.

Mr. ASHBROOK. You are mistaken. If a man serves three years and is 75 years of age he gets $30 a month.

Mr. RUSSELL. Two years.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I should have said two years.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I am sure I am not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can show the gentleman the table in a minute.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is not that adjustment of equities between those who served in the Civil War that you are complaining of that is made in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. Speaking about inequities, does the gentleman think he is injecting into the pension system greater inequities by this bill than exists there now?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not; that is, we are not interfering with the pension system at all.

Mr. RUCKER. That is, if this is a pension system, and I am so heartily in favor of pensions that it will not offend me at all to call it a pension system. I want to suggest this to the gentleman, if he will permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman believe it will be more scientific and result in better administration and be more equitable and fairer if this pension feature of the bill now pending were proposed as an amendment to the existing pension laws, so as to treat all people similarly situated in the same way?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, I have already discussed that question.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, then, I shall not ask the gentleman to go over it again. But the form of my question indicates my view.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say this to my colleague—and I have so stated in the course of my argument—that the present pension laws should be administered apart from the provisions of this law. This law is framed on an entirely different theory. If there are any injustices in the present law to veterans of former wars, as compared with the provisions framed in this bill for the soldiers who will serve in this war, the pension committees should take them up and remove them, and I am in entire sympathy with such a policy.

Mr. RUCKER. To-day, as the gentleman knows, almost any kind of legislation looking to the welfare of the soldier abroad or to his family at home is popular. But does not the gentleman believe that while pension legislation is at present popular justice ought to be done to men as valiant as are the valiant and heroic boys to-day who are following our flag, and that injustice should not be written into this law, or injustice prescribed against the others, because here there is discrimination, it seems to me, that is intolerable?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill does not shut the door against veterans of the Civil War, if any injustice is done them.

Mr. RUCKER. I grant it; but the gentleman knows that it would take another kind of heroics to provide for the widows and children of Spanish War veterans or of Civil War veterans and raise the rate for the children to $5 a month, as you are providing for children in this bill, and widows to $30 a month, as you are providing in this; and after we have finished, if we ever do finish a legislative program which piles up mountain-high appropriations, then I fancy the gentleman probably, as a matter of prudence and caution, would hesitate to vote for even a generous and liberal bill in favor of that other class that is now being discriminated against in this bill. And let me ask the gentleman another question—

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say, as to that first question, that I am in entire sympathy with the purpose expressed if the Congress has not dealt justly by veterans of former wars, but I do not think that matter should be worked out in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question, then: Does not the gentleman believe that the provisions of this bill, if enacted into law, would necessarily and unavoidably result in a duplication of Federal work? Would you not have to create a bureau here, perhaps a large body of men, to do exactly the same work that is now performed, and well performed, by the skilled men in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have answered that question and made the argument twice.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not hear him.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman claim that the Pension Bureau is now underworked and now has the time to give to this work?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not believe that the Pension Bureau is underworked.

Mr. BORLAND. Then additional men would be necessary if this work is imposed on the Pension Bureau.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no. It is not necessary now to create a new bureau. Does the gentleman know how many pension boards now exist, well qualified to pass upon questions necessary to be passed upon, brought up by this bill? There are some five or six thousand of those boards.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no reason why they can not be used.

Mr. RUCKER. They will have to be created again under this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not care to go into that argument further.

Mr. RUCKER. It is my misfortune that I did not hear all the gentleman's speech. I am always for the gentleman's legislation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I know that the gentleman is in sympathy with this legislation.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not hide behind the bush and talk about pensions. I am in favor of liberal pensions, but I will say to the gentleman that if a motion were made here to recommit this bill and have the matter carefully gone over so as to do justice to all soldiers I would vote for it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And thus delay the legislation?

Mr. RUCKER. It will not delay legislation. There is now legislation pending to take care of all soldiers of the Union. There are many bills now pending in the Pension Bureau in behalf of men who have lost their lives in this present war.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is legislation pending; our soldiers are getting ready to form on the battle line. Whatever we do should be done now.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question on insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. A letter was referred to here the other day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore], written by the Commissioner of Pensions, criticizing this bill. The commissioner's letter to Mr. Switzer criticizes only the insurance provision, and not the compensation provision.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Was not that when the bill was being prepared by a committee, and before it was referred here to Congress?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know of any other letter but that. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And before this bill was introduced, creating the new pension bureau?

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill was already written.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The bill makes the insurance nonassignable, and then it makes certain people beneficiaries.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. A child or grandchild, a parent, brother and sister, and then it states—

And also during total disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them, and to such other persons as may be provided from time to time by regulations.

Does not that last clause open up the number of beneficiaries so that it may be unlimited under the regulations of the bureau? What is the sequence of the phrase, "And to such other persons as may be provided from time to time by regulations"? That is on page 29, in section 402.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentlemen that at the proper time an amendment will be offered to section 402 to add in line 20 the words "or from time to time by regulations."

Then, at the end:

If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons, within the permitted class of beneficiaries, as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured, that there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Tables of Mortality, and 3½ per cent interest, in full of all obligations under the policy.

Mr. FESS. I think that would cure the thing that was in my mind.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Some such provision or amendment applicable to the indemnities or compensations for injuries or death will be proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I want to bring up the question—

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have delayed the committee as long as I ought, and the gentleman will pardon me if I decline to yield further, because I feel that I am trespassing on the time of the committee. They granted me an extension of time very graciously, and I do not want to abuse their courtesy.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has unanimous consent to complete his remarks.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Just for information. On page 21, section 303, it says:

That every person applying for or in receipt of compensation for disability under the provisions of this article shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the director. He may have a duly qualified physician, designated and paid by him, present to participate in such examination. For all examinations he shall, in the discretion of the director, be paid his reasonable traveling and other expenses and also loss of wages incurred in order to submit to such examination. If he refuses to submit himself for, or in any way obstructs, any examination, his right to claim compensation under this article shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases.

Now, the point I want to make is this—or, rather, the information I would like is this: Under the present method of examining claimants for certain disabilities the bureau has provided boards throughout the whole United States in practically every county in the United States, and the claimant presents himself to this board for examination. Under this plan, if I understand this bill correctly, the claimant must present himself at such place as is designated by the bureau. Now, according to this bill, is it the intention of the department to pay the man's expenses from Texas clear up to Washington, in order that some United States Army physician may examine him, and then pay his expenses back, or are we to have boards all over the country, the same as they exist at the present time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. My colleague suggests that these boards exist at this time. The rational way would be to refer the case to boards already in existence. I would not think any director with common sense would order a man from Texas to Washington for examination.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. But you have separated that, and these boards are not composed of Army physicians.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know any reason why the man should be brought from Texas to Washington to submit to an examination.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. But where are these boards to be located? I think the House is entitled to that information.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This bill provides that this bureau shall provide for them, and where they may be located, and where the examinations are to take place.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Well, where is it?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not care to discuss that matter. I think the gentleman is making a mountain out of a molehill.

Mr. RAYBURN. It seems to me that the question of the gentleman from Ohio is unworthy of his intelligence. They can designate a doctor in any town in the United States, where this man may go and be examined.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Army physicians?

Mr. RAYBURN. It says Army physicians or any physicians they may designate. It says that right in the next line.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think if the mental attitude of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Key] toward this bill should change many of these difficulties would disappear.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to say this to the gentleman: That in my opinion—and I will venture the statement that in the opinion of practically every Member of this House—it is a loosely drawn bill, and the Members of this House are entitled to this information.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think there are very many Members who share the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman that it is the consensus of opinion of all the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee to whom I have spoken, and of many on the outside, that this is the best and clearest bill that they have ever seen relating to any subject of this kind. Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Key], after having read the bill only in a superficial way and not having read the majority report or the supplemental report, has said from time to time that the language in this bill is involved. Yet he can not give one place in the bill where the language is involved or where it is not clear, and he is trying to construe into it language which is not there and he overlooks language which is there.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I will say that I have great admiration for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Key], the able chairman of the Pensions Committee. His attitude toward this bill is due to the hallucination that this is a pension bill, when it is an insurance bill from one end to the other, as I think I will be able to demonstrate if I ever get the chance to say a few words about the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I should like to relinquish the floor if I can have a chance to say a word or two more. I regret the attitude of the gentleman from Ohio—

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia answer a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. When I can get the floor I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. RUCKER. There are not very many of us here. This is a very important matter, and it does seem to me that when gentlemen are diligently seeking information the committee ought to be willing to give it without becoming the least petulant.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think they mean to be.

Mr. RUCKER. Because an attempt to make haste along certain lines will not make haste.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the mental attitude of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Key] is really unfortunate. He has not looked at this bill with a view to discovering its merits. Possibly it has some defects. I never saw a piece of legislation that did not have some defects, but I will say this, that no bill has ever been brought into Congress treating of this subject matter that has received more painstaking or intelligent consideration.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. COX. Whether or not any of the Governments now at war—England, France, and particularly the Dominion of Canada—has worked out a scheme of pensions along this line.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand that England, France, and Germany have laws along the lines of this legislation, and their laws not only apply to service in the war, but I understand they are broad enough to apply to compensation for injuries in various employments; they also include old age and other disabilities where the individual may become a charge on the Government.

Now, as regards the insurance features of this bill, there is a lurking fear that this may result in Government insurance generally.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say there has been a fear expressed that this may result in governmental insurance. I am tempted to read a clause from the letter of Col. Roosevelt to Judge Mack on that question.

The compensation for the family should be so arranged as to put a premium on the soldier having a considerable number of children; his is the stock which the Nation can not permit to die out.

Of course, when the Government takes away the insurability of the man it ought to give him a substitute, and Government insurance, as outlined in the bill, is the only substitute. We must not be led off on a red-herring trail by the argument that the proposed bill opens the door to the Government's eventual assumption of the insurance business. It is nothing short of criminal to fall in the adoption of legislation necessary to the effective conduct of the war through fear of such legislation in times of peace. The old-line insurance companies and the fraternal orders should welcome this new move in social progress. In the interest of their policyholders they can not and ought not to stand the cost of the war risk except to the extent that they are now obligated. The Government can and ought to do it; and when the insurance is granted it must be kept in force for these men at rock-bottom rates after as well as during the war.

The bill is a real and constructive measure. I believe it should be passed and should go into effect when the first men of the new National Army are called out. I know of nothing more important than to lift the fears of men that their families may become objects of charity and to hearten the wives and children and parents of this country to respond bravely and gladly to the Nation's call.

Now, in this legislation we propose to provide an allowance for the wife and children and in certain events for the parents of the enlisted man who goes into the war, and we all agree that that is just. We go further and provide compensation for death or injuries received in the service. We go still further and provide that the provident man in the service may protect himself by Government insurance in the sum of $5,000 or $10,000, payable in the event of total disability or death. In other words, this bill is intended to provide for all these eventualities mentioned, and I am sure that the insurance companies of this country are not so biased, are not so obsessed with the spirit of profit, are not so selfish that they would interpose any objection to the enactment of the insurance provisions of this bill. For the most part, their attitude is friendly if not cordial, and I can not understand how anyone would have the heart, in the interest of private insurance companies, to interpose any objection to this legislation. I am sure that we are all animated by the common purpose of this committee to make provision for these men who have volunteered in the service or who have come in under the selective draft. I do not know of any greater sacrifice a man can make than to go into the service and offer his life on the altar of his country, and I would not undertake to estimate the value of that service in dollars and cents. My only hope is that this bill may be speedily enacted into law, that these men before they are called into the foreign service—and I pray that they may never be—that they may go with the assurance that the Congress of the United States has them in mind and has in mind their loved ones at home; and if they come back maimed that we will provide for them, will educate them for such duties and vocations in life as may be suited to their condition, and in all respects will meet as far as possible the obligations resting upon us toward those heroes who may lay down their lives on the high seas or on foreign soil in vindication of our rights as a Nation, and with their blood add luster to our flag. [Applause.]

It will cost money! Of course it will cost money, but who will stop at that? Are we not willing to pay the cost, whatever it may be? I am sure that is true, and animated by that patriotic purpose I appeal to the membership of the House to study the bill in a friendly spirit and give it their support, and I believe it will finally receive the support of every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, the life insurance companies of Wisconsin—five in number, assessment and old line—got together, or their executive officers representing them, and gave a very thorough consideration to this bill. They unanimously favored making this bill a law. I wish to read certain extracts from their report. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the investigation and report made by the executive officers of these life insurance companies ought to be of great importance, because the report differs radically from reports and criticisms made by most of the companies in other States. The man that prepared this report, William A. Fricke, of Wausau, Wis., was insurance commissioner of the State of Wisconsin a number of years and ranks very high as an authority among insurance experts in the United States.

This committee representing the life insurance companies named in the report went over this bill very thoroughly, and make the following observations in favor of this bill, all of which I heartily concur in:

"Objection has been raised to the provision permitting conversion to other forms of policy after the war, and that this provision would be a continuance of the Government in the conduct of the business of life insurance. In reply to this statement, answer is made that the members of the Army and Navy are employees of the Government engaged in a hazardous occupation for which the employer should provide indemnity; that many of these soldiers and sailors will, after the war, be uninsurable; that regular companies would not entertain their applications at regular rates; and that as this measure contemplates abolishing the pension system it will impose upon the Government no greater but a more definite cost; and that to terminate then the insurance of those who can pass a satisfactory physical examination would leave the Government with a group of defectives with a very high mortality, while with still a Standing Army of from 100,000 to 500,000 men the protection afforded by the pending measure should be continued and extended also to them.

"Whether you designate the provisions of Article IV as 'life insurance' or as 'indemnity,' the objection that this article and the continuance of the privilege of insurance after the war places the Government in the position of conducting the business of life insurance will hardly hold. It is an entirely different proposition from the attempt to place the State of Wisconsin in the business by means of the State life fund, where insurance was sought to be afforded to anyone in competition with the regular companies at less than the real cost by imposing upon the people, as a whole, the additional cost as a benefit to the favored few and so permit the exploitation of a pet theory for political purposes. This plan is simply a part of the contract of employment and may be compared to the plan of an employer of a very large number of employees engaged in a very hazardous occupation—the risks are sufficiently numerous to form an insurance group and by the elimination of all overhead charges the employer is able himself to carry the risk at actual cost and make certain the indemnity to each employee without the intervention of an insurance company.

"Not only does the continuance of this insurance after the war seem justified, but an insurance man might well argue that it would make for a reduction in cost—as to the extra hazards of war for which the people are taxed and which they must pay—if the privilege of this insurance were extended to all officials and employees of the Government."

In conclusion this report says:

"The bill as a whole is a good and patriotic measure—we want our agents to feel this and say so—and while from a life-insurance standpoint we might suggest changes in Article IV, the time to do so does not seem opportune, and so in closing we content ourselves in quoting from a speech of Theodore Roosevelt, delivered at Springfield in 1903:

"A man who is good enough to shed his blood for his country is good enough to be given a square deal afterwards."

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to print this report in full, which takes up this bill in detail and goes over it very thoroughly, as part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNE. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

The article referred to is as follows:

LIFE CONVENTION OF WISCONSIN INDORSES BILL FOR FEDERAL INSURANCE BUREAU TO INSURE THE MEN IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

"MILWAUKEE, September 6.

"The Life Convention of Wisconsin, the State organization composed of the executive officers of the Great Northern Life Insurance Co., of Wausau; Guardian Life, of Madison; Wisconsin National Life, of Oshkosh; Wisconsin Life, of Madison; and the Old Line Life, of Milwaukee, at its meeting held in Milwaukee yesterday considered the bill now pending in Congress to provide insurance for the men in the Army and Navy and adopted an explanatory bulletin of the measure for the information of agents and the public, in which the convention gives approval and indorsement of the provisions of the bill. This action of the Wisconsin companies differs so radically from the position assumed by other companies and the bulletin adopted so clearly explains the provisions of the measure that it is published in full:

FEDERAL INSURANCE BUREAU.

"The bill for insurance of men in the Army and Navy, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, has been introduced in Congress.

"Article 1 provides for the organization of the bureau, for which $100,000 is sought, and appropriations aggregating $176,150,000 are provided, to cover the cost, as estimated, of the indemnities and insurance for the first year. The cost as estimated is divided as follows:

	First year.	Second year.
Family allowances.....	$141,000,000	$190,000,000
Death indemnities.....	3,700,000	22,000,000
Compensation for total disability.....	5,250,000	35,000,000
Compensation for partial disability.....	3,200,000	21,000,000
Insurance against death and disability.....	23,000,000	112,500,000
Total.....	176,150,000	380,500,000

"Article 2 provides that each enlisted man must permit the Government to withhold not more than half his pay, which must not be less than $15 per month, for allotment to his wife and child, the Government supplementing such allotment by a family allowance upon written application of the enlisted man or his prospective beneficiary, which allowance, however, shall not exceed $50 per month in any case, and is payable from time of enlistment to death or discharge or end of the war. The amount allowed by the Government depends upon the family conditions; for wife, but no child, the allowance is $15 per month; wife and one child $25, etc.; but in no case exceeding $50.

"Article 3 extends provisions of Federal compensation for death or disability—from personal injury or disease contracted in the course of the service. The benefits provided apply to enlisted men, commissioned officers, and to Army and Navy nurses.

"The compensation provided under this article follows very generally the provisions of the workmen's compensation laws of the various States, and the compensation is based upon the pay in the service, with added benefits following along the lines of the Canadian provisions.

"In the event of death, compensation is provided for the widow, minor children, or dependent widowed mother. There is also a burial allowance of $100 if death occurs after discharge or resignation from service. It provides compensation for total disability of not less than $40 per month, which amount is increased where there is a wife, children, or dependent widowed mother, with an additional allowance of not exceeding $20 where there is constant need of a nurse. In the event of partial disability the compensation is a percentage of the compensation for total disability based upon the degree of reduction or loss of earning capacity. Provision is also made for necessary medical, surgical, and hospital service with appliances, such as trusses, artificial limbs, etc.

"Under certain conditions there is provision for commutation of the compensation not exceeding one-half, and less if dependents exist.

"This article also provides for courses of rehabilitation, re-education, and vocational training for disabled persons, such courses to be established when required by the Government.

"The provisions of this article are very complete and are most commendable.

"Article 4 is entitled 'Insurance' and is of special interest to life insurance men. It provides that the Government shall grant life insurance to enlisted men in the Army and Navy and Army and Navy Nurses' Corps for amounts from $1,000 to $5,000, payable only in installments and to a fixed class of beneficiaries, the premiums to be deducted from the monthly pay or may be otherwise made at the insured's option. The insurance to be provided is a net rate term insurance for successive terms of one year during the war, convertible after the war, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance and with such provisions for premium payments as may be prescribed by regulations. Such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after enlistment, or, if already in the service, within 120 days from publication of the terms of the insurance. As no war extra is to be charged, $23,000,000 of the appropriation called for in the bill is for the excess mortality and disability during the first year under this article.

"Objection has been raised to the provision permitting conversion to other forms of policy after the war and that this provision would be a continuance of the Government in the conduct of the business of life insurance. In reply to this statement, answer is made that the members of the Army and Navy are employees of the Government engaged in a hazardous occupation, for which the employer should provide indemnity; that many of these soldiers and sailors, will after the war, be uninsurable; that regular companies would not entertain their applications at regular rates; that as this measure contemplates abolishing the pension system it will impose upon the Government no greater, but a more definite cost; and that to terminate then the insurance of those who can pass a satisfactory physical examination would leave the Government with a group of defectives with a very high mortality, while with still a standing army of from 100,000 to 500,000 men the protection afforded by the pending measure should be continued and extended also to them.

"Whether you designate the provisions of article 4 as 'life insurance' or as 'indemnity,' the objection that this article and the continuance of the privilege of insurance after the war places the Government in the position of conducting the business of life insurance will hardly hold. It is an entirely different proposition from the attempt to place the State of Wisconsin in the business by means of the State life fund, where insurance was sought to be afforded to anyone in competition with the regular companies at less than the real cost by imposing upon the people as a whole the additional cost as a benefit to the favored few, and so permit the exploitation of a pet theory for political purposes. This plan is simply a part of the contract of employment, and may be compared to the plan of an employer of a very large number of employees engaged in a very hazardous occupation—the risks are sufficiently numerous to form an insurance group and by the elimination of all overhead charges the employer is able himself to carry the risk at actual cost and make certain the indemnity to each employee without the intervention of an insurance company.

"Not only does the continuance of this insurance after the war seem justified, but an insurance man might well argue that it would make for a reduction in cost—as to the extra hazards of war for which the people are taxed and which they must pay—if the privilege of this insurance were extended to all officials and employees of the Government.

"The position of the Government was clearly stated to the congressional committee considering the bill by the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Edwin F. Sweet, as follows:

"Soldiers and sailors engaged in war service ought to know in advance what is to be done and what is going to happen to them, and not leave it to conjecture.

"Some way ought to be devised by which those engaged in the war service could get insurance and could buy it at substantially peace rates, and that the Government or the people of the United States in the final analysis ought to pay that extra cost. The insurance companies certainly can not do it, and I would very strongly counsel against permitting any private insurance company to sell insurance at peace rates at the present time. It seems to me that it would be absolutely unjust to the present policyholders, and that it ought not to be done. There would be great risk of insolvency on the part of some of our insurance companies, and it would not be in accord with good public policy, in my judgment.

"I do not see how the Government could properly go into the insurance business upon a permanent basis—certainly not as regards the insurance of anyone except those in the Government service. I can not see that it would be particularly harmful or anything that insurance companies could strongly object to, if the Government should sell insurance to those engaged in the Government service.

"As an argument to continue the insurance after the war, the following was presented:

"We want insurance by the Government and continuing after the war and continuing to that man's death, for which insurance that man himself shall pay the cost of insurance or the pure cost of insurance against the ordinary risks of life, but for which the Government will pay the extra loss, which will result to all of those men in the aggregate for their impairment due to war. Suppose you take 1,000 men at the end of the war; now you can not take any one of those men if he dies 10 or 20 years later and say that that man's death resulted from war service and that that other man's death did not, because you can not balance it well enough; but if for all those 1,000 men you have a mortality rate twice as great as the ordinary rate among the same number of men who did not go to the war and who are of the same ages, it is perfectly right and it compensates these men rightly for the United States to pay the extra cost because of their extra mortality, while they themselves are paying the normal cost of the normal mortality for insurance. That is the proposition.

"Objection by the companies, so far, has been directed only against the life insurance provisions of the bill, but with small effect.

"The objection of the life insurance companies has resolved itself to this:

"1. Insurance granted by the Government should be uniform to all in the service.

"2. That it should be gratis—no premium charged.

"3. That provision should be made for discontinuance after the war.

"For ourselves, we should not oppose amendments covering objections "1" and "2," but whatever the form in which presented we believe that once the insurance has been granted it should continue, not only as a fitting recognition but as an act of justice and economy.

"We can not accept war risks without an extra premium, and when we agreed to accept these extra premiums as a deposit, to be used only when the mortality exceeded that provided for in the regular premiums and return any excess remaining after the war, we went to the extreme of liberality and good faith with the ability to still maintain proper safeguards for all policyholders.

"Undoubtedly the enactment of this bill into law will result in the lapse or surrender of some policies now carried by men in the service—who then can secure their insurance at a net term rate and without the extra war-risk premium—but its enactment can not seriously affect the business of the agent or the company, as only a limited number of insureds can be secured within the draft ages, war or no war.

"Incidentally, if this bill is enacted into law, it will result in three possible results of great value for the future:

"1. It will emphasize to the world the money value of the individual human life and the importance of its conservation rather than its reckless destruction.

"2. It will demonstrate broadly that one-year renewable-term insurance, with its yearly increasing cost, is not a satisfactory form of life insurance for the individual, except for temporary purposes, and that unless the difference in cost is paid out of the people's Treasury, the Government can not furnish life insurance at less cost than the properly conducted company.

"3. That the life insurance companies must recognize the very probable contingency of war in every lifetime and provide for this hazard in or from every premium for the creation of a war-risk reserve, and so make war clauses and extra war premiums unnecessary when that contingency arises.

"The bill as a whole is a good and patriotic measure—we want our agents to feel this and say so—and while, from a life insurance standpoint, we might suggest changes in Article IV, the time to do so does not seem opportune, and so in closing we content ourselves in quoting from a speech of Theodore Roosevelt delivered at Springfield in 1903:

"A man who is good enough to shed his blood for his country is good enough to be given a square deal afterwards."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, under its attractive title, "War-risk insurance," attempts to create in this administration a new bureau with a director at a salary of $6,000 a year, two commissioners at $10,000 annually, three members as an advisory board at an expense annually of $21,000, deputies, accountants, assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees. This new bureau is given the authority to rent offices and buildings for the bureau; to provide for equipment, supplies, for traveling expenses; to provide books and printing and binding; to take care of all other expenses connected with the bureau; and make that bureau after the war a permanent bureau, and appropriate to organize to start this bureau the sum of $156,250,000, and the estimate for the second year of expense is $493,000,000.

The object and purposes of this new bureau are threefold. First, to keep back and deduct without the consent of the soldier and sailor one-half of his wages, and without his consent to pay the same over to the family or certain dependents of that soldier or sailor. It also provides that the balance of his wages, under regulations of this new bureau, may also be taken and allotted as the bureau may desire. In the second place, it is provided in this bill that no future pension law shall be enacted by Congress and no pension shall be given to the soldier and the sailor of the present war, and denies them that right, and places all future pension matters exclusively in the hands of this new bureau, and in place of future pensions it take or attempts to take the principle of the workmen's compensation laws of the several States and to adapt those laws, made in times of peace, to the relief of our soldiers and sailors in times of war, and calls it "compensation." Third, it attempts to force this Government into the business of life insurance without any of the rules, regulations, methods, or principles ever adopted by any life insurance company, and then attempts to retain from the wages of the soldier, if he takes out a policy of insurance, the balance of his wages practically and to issue policies in form to be regulated by this bureau to certain beneficiaries and deprive the soldier and the sailor of the right of even naming the beneficiary. If a soldier or sailor does not consent to have his wages so commandeered to pay for this insurance and is killed in the trenches or on the battle field, he is denied a pension. It is no wonder that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] said this was the most important bill that has been so far before this Congress. [Applause.]

Now, I confess when this bill was first reported from the committee I was prejudiced in its favor. I have always believed that a married man should take care of his family and children, and that the son should take care of his mother, and if he did not do so he should be made to do so. I am a firm believer in the principle of workmen's compensation laws as enacted in many States. I am also a firm believer in life insurance. I believe every man should carry a life insurance policy, although those who ought to carry life insurance do not usually do so. In my study of this bill I have read very carefully the hearings before the committee, the letter and the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, the statements of insurance experts who testified, also the testimony of Mr. Gompers, head of certain labor organizations, and the statement of the learned judge who drew this bill. I listened to the honored Speaker of the House this morning who answered certain objections made against the bill, which objections I did not consider vital. I have listened to every word that has been said, both in favor and against the bill up to the present time, and after these two or three days' debate I think, with great deference to the judge who drew this bill and with an apology to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who is upon the committee, that it will take a Philadelphia lawyer to explain the bill. [Applause.]

Since this Congress has been in session and since we have declared war they tell us down in the Patent Office that they have received over 10,000 applications for new devices to destroy the U-boats, and not one of those devices has been approved by the Patent Office because they say they will not work.

If this beautiful piece of machinery called "war-risk insurance" can be made to work, in practice, I am in favor of it, but if its passage is to demoralize our Army and if it will necessarily fail to perform what its advocates claim, then I am against it. [Applause.] Now, I want your attention, gentlemen, for a few moments while I take up the subdivisions of this bill. Complicated as it is, if we strip it of all its technicalities, if we take away the lawyer pleading of Judge Mack and look at it in a common-sense way, you will find, in my opinion, that it will not work in actual practice. Now, first as to that division of the bill called "allotments and family allowance." The American Army as now constituted and as being formed and sent to the field is formed under laws recently enacted by this Congress wherein exemptions are given to those having dependents, and, under the late ruling of the President, married men are exempt. So that if anybody goes into the service who has dependents or who are married men they do so because they either enlist or waive the exemptions. I apprehend that a small number of men will be found in the service in this war who will have dependents and will be married men, and I apprehend that I am right in stating, gentlemen, that this war will not change the character of the American soldier and sailor. I apprehend I am right in my statement that the man who supports his mother and his wife and children at home in times of peace will attempt to voluntarily send his wages to his wife and family in times of war.

When you come to this matter of allotment, this compulsory allotment by the Government, you place the true man, the good citizen, the patriotic American soldier and sailor, along with the "slacker," and I will never give my consent to thus disgrace, dishonor, and degrade the American soldier. [Applause.]

What do you claim to do under this new bureau? You reach out your strong hand and take the wages of every man who has a wife and family, regardless of whether they are dependent or not upon him for support. You take from the soldier who is sending his money home one-half of his wages and attempt to allot it between a wife and a divorced wife.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. Is there not a provision in the bill that gives the wife a right to waive her share of her husband's wages?

Mr. HERSEY. There is a provision of waiver on the part of the beneficiary, but you and I know well enough that there will not be many waivers made in any case.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERSEY. If you will extend my time.

Mr. DEWALT. Is the gentleman aware that in section 201 there is also a privilege given to the enlisted man to make application for the waiver?

Mr. HERSEY. Oh, yes. He can do it, but this bureau has the right to take the wages without the consent of the soldier, who is now supporting his family, commandeer them, and deprive him of them. Now, I claim this, gentlemen: That the American soldier and sailor in the Army, in the trenches, and on board our ships feels as you and I do, that if up to the present time he has supported his wife and children out of his wages and earnings given to him by this Government, he wants the right to continue to send his own money to his wife and children himself. He wants control of his own money. He does not want a guardianship on the part of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time is under the control of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCR], and the gentleman gave notice to the Chair that he at this time wished to use the time allotted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may be allowed to proceed for five minutes without the time being taken out of the time under the control of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes without interfering with the time in control of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HERSEY. Thank you.

I can only understand this "allotment" business on the ground that you want thereby to reach the "slacker" in the service, and not the man who is willing to send a part of his wages to his family. You have no right to reach out your hand and take the wages of the soldier who is willing to send his wages home to his wife and family, you have no right to put him under guardianship. You may have some right to take the wage of the "slacker," the man who willfully refuses to provide for those dependent on him.

Mr. BROWNE. Was not that fact established in the Mexican trouble? Did we not do that same thing, and was there any objection on the part of the men?

Mr. HERSEY. Oh, I do not remember.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HERSEY. Is this going to be taken out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman yields.

Mr. HERSEY. Then I can not yield. I want to say a word here about the man called the "slacker," that you are trying to reach. There is many a man, I have no doubt, who has gone into the service that has a wife at home, and I know some that have gone into the service to escape that wife at home. I know men who seek the trenches of France rather than return home at night. And while I am happily married I have a good deal of sympathy with that fellow, and I say "For God's sake, give him a chance." [Applause.]

Now, this allotment business can not accomplish a single good thing. There must be an application from home, and the most deserving will not apply. You have got first to obtain certain information, at great cost and expense, and then you are liable to demoralize the Army by seizing the wages of the men who are faithful to home and family.

Second, there is what is called "compensation for death or disability," and, stripped of all its technicalities, it is simply a poor pension law, and that is all there is to it. You can not take the compensation laws of the several States and adapt them in times of war and give proper compensation to men who are injured in the service. This part of the bill is simply an inadequate pension law, and it is nothing else but a poor pension law, and a more liberal pension law can be enacted by this Congress than that provided by this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. If you will extend my time, or have it extended.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the committee is very indulgent this afternoon. The persons having control of the time are not in a great hurry to have the bill passed this evening.

When the author of this bill was considering the question of compensation he stated that the compensation provided in this bill was inadequate, and yet it carries the maximum amount to be paid to the widow of an officer at $200. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that amount is inadequate in view of the fact that the maximum amount now paid to a widow of an officer of the highest rank in the service, where the officer dies from injuries received in the service, is $30 a month?

Mr. HERSEY. My answer to that is that this compensation law as set forth in this bill is not so good as a reasonable and proper pension. I am for liberal pensions. I believe that a liberal pension bill enacted by this Congress would be better for our soldiers and sailors than this bill can possibly be. [Applause.] And I want you to understand, gentlemen, that it will require the same evidence in making compensation under this bill as it will to award a proper pension, and will not take any more time.

We can enact a pension law at once in this Congress that will take care of every injury and every death in the service to come. Much better than can possibly come from this new experiment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, may I have a little more time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERSEY. We have a Pension Bureau that has been established in this country for over 50 years. We have in that office an experienced lot of clerks, employees, experts, and an experienced commissioner. They have had in the Pension Bureau a half century of experience. There are 1,200 employees in the Pension Bureau, and the administration of that bureau, according to the last report of the commissioner, costs $1,562,855 for 1917. Why should not the Pension Bureau take care of the only thing in this bill that means anything—and that is compensation, which is nothing but pensions?

Some gentlemen has said here that a pension is a charity. It is no more a charity than is compensation. Somebody said here that pensions had not been satisfactory in the past. I say to you that this Government has given its soldiers of the Civil War most liberal pensions. I appeal to the men of the southland to say if that is not true. Here we are a united country, the North and South, in this great war. Why can we not in this Congress pass a liberal pension bill that will take care of every soldier and sailor, North and South in this war?

Now, the third matter in this bill is life insurance.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HERSEY. Just for a brief question.

Mr. BORLAND. I understand that the gentleman is very well satisfied with the present pension system?

Mr. HERSEY. No; I am not. I am for a more liberal system. I am not for the present system in this war. I want a new pension law enacted by this Congress that will be very liberal to our soldiers and sailors.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman realize that we have spent in Civil War pensions since 1866 five and one-half billion dollars, and of that sum four and one-half billion dollars was spent since 1890, or commencing 25 years after the close of the war? Is that the kind of a system that the gentleman wants to put in force instead of this?

Mr. HERSEY. No; I am for a new system, based on our past experience, with a new and better pension law.

Now, in regard to this matter of insurance, it is called "insurance," but that is a misnomer. It has in it none of the principles of life insurance at all. It has none of the essentials or methods of life insurance. It is not life insurance in any way. It is simply a lottery on the part of the Government and those engaged in it.

What does it mean? It provides that those who apply for insurance must pay out of their wages the premiums; if killed, the insurance may be of some benefit to those who survive them. But will those who need insurance come in? Will the man whose wages have been commandeered one-half use the other half in paying insurance premiums, or will he send it home to wife and child to give them present support? Experience has shown that the man who should have an insurance policy will not apply for insurance, while the man who thinks he can make something out of it in the way of an investment will take it. What will be the result? The men who are killed in the war and leave a widow and children without property will not take out these insurance policies, while those who have no dependents will take policies, and then if killed the needy will not be helped and the Government will be the loser. There will be millions paid out to beneficiaries that are not deserving beneficiaries and would never be recognized under any pension law, and there will be pensions lost to the most deserving, because the soldiers did not make application for a pension.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERSEY. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Maine seriously contend that in his judgment this is a bill drawn for the purpose of taking advantage of and punishing the boys who are going into the Army and their dependents?

Mr. HERSEY. Oh, no. I want the gentleman to understand that I believe that the committee who reported this bill are sincere and those who stand here on this floor and advocate this bill are sincere, and I believe all who have advocated it have done so with a sincere purpose. I do not believe that this bill was presented for the purpose of giving places to some ex-insurance experts or helping any insurance companies; but I believe that the bill will not work out in practice the way intended by its friends. The more you study this bill, the more you must be convinced that you can get the same thing in a better way under a proper pension bill than under this so-called war-risk insurance law.

The insurance part of this bill is the pet measure of the Secretary of the Treasury. He has a beautiful theory about life insurance, and he has secured the favorable opinion of a few other expert theorists. Yesterday the Sunday papers published a letter from him under great headlines which said, "Secretary William Gibbs McAdoo, genius of finance, writes that soldier's insurance is duty of Nation." His letter ignores the matter of "allotments" and "compensation" and devotes its whole space to a glowing approval of the great benefits this new scheme in life insurance will bring to our armies. He fails to give any reason why we should embark the Nation on this untried experiment in finance, but only says, in substance, that the adoption of his theory would cheer our soldiers with the prospect of getting great benefits to themselves and their dependents from this new lottery.

In spite of all these finespun theories, these new experiments in legislation, the fact remains that all there is to this bill of interest or benefit to the soldier is the pension section called "compensation," and that part of the bill can be more efficiently administered by the present Pension Bureau. The result of the passage of this bill in its present form will entail a needless expense of millions upon the taxpayers of the country in this time of greatest need and while on every hand we are being exhorted by the administration to practice in legislation the most rigid economy. The present bill and new bureau will also give shelter and power to a new army of place hunters and office-holders who will fatten at the expense of the people. Unless these objectionable features are eliminated from the bill, I can not consent to wrong the American soldier abroad and betray the rights of the people at home by giving it my support. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, with most of the provisions of this bill I am in hearty accord. I have received several communications from life insurance companies particularly urging me to support at least the first three articles, qualifying to some extent article 4.

I am not at all certain that we have been enlightened very much in regard to the present insurance laws or with regard to the present pension legislation. I have read the bill very carefully and earnestly, and studied it perhaps as much as I have studied any legislation with which we have had to do at this session, and the first suggestion that came to my mind was that it is strange indeed that a system which undertakes to pension the soldiers of this war should be put under another department and a new bureau organized.

I heard the gentleman who introduced the bill characterize it as a compensation measure and not a pension measure. I rose in my seat to ask him to clearly distinguish between this bill and a pension. I am unable to do so, and if the gentlemen who have spoken are able to do so they have failed to put it in such terms as that I am able to comprehend.

May I not say in passing, gentlemen, that it will be futile, so far as we are concerned, to undertake to say that never again in this country shall we have pension legislation?

Under the terms of this bill I think it is provided that no application for compensation under this law shall be made after one year, except in the judgment of the director, who may extend it another year. And yet, when we study the matter carefully, we must know that a man who goes into the shock of battle, who is in the trenches, may come out with certain definite injuries which will be taken care of in this bill; but no man can go through the experiences of this war and come out with the same balance mentally and with the same powers physically after undergoing the fearful ordeal of the modern battle field, even though not touched by shot or shell. So I say it is futile for us here to undertake to provide that never again shall we have a pension system in this country. I might say, too, that should the war continue, and a great number of our boys fight for our country on foreign soil, after they come home many of them will sit here where you and I are now sitting, and those men, understanding the conditions, will do what is right, and perhaps we shall hear more of service pensions in the future than we have over heard in the past.

But as to the provisions of this bill, I talked to a gentleman who has been in the Pension Bureau for many years, an expert, and I said to him, "In your judgment is this bill more liberal than any of the other pension laws?" He said, "It certainly is, as a whole, more liberal than any other pension legislation which has ever been enacted." So in so far as that part of it is concerned, I am in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the bill, and am fairly well satisfied with the compensation that is provided for in it, except as to total disability. But I have not yet heard an adequate reason why the operations of the compensation part or the pension part of it should be put under another bureau.

It has been suggested that some ulterior motive actuated the transferring of it from the Pension Bureau to the Treasury Department. I am not saying that that is true, for I do not know, but I would like to have a reason stated sufficient for the transfer of what is manifestly pension legislation in its nature from a bureau that has had the experience of a hundred years, and in which, instead of the business increasing, it is now decreasing, there being 36,000 fewer men upon the pension rolls to-day than there were one year ago, and more than 30,000 Civil War veterans dying every year; a department wholly organized, with experts employed there, a bureau capable of taking care of this matter and with a decreasing amount of business. Yet it is taken wholly from the Department of the Interior and carried over into the Department of the Treasury. I do not believe any man on this floor can give an adequate reason for that change from the Interior Department to the Treasury Department.

There are some other things in the bill that I was much interested in. You will remember that a few years ago there was introduced into our pension law what is known as the pauper clause, which provided that in order to get a pension one had to go into court practically and certify that he was unable to support himself, that he had no resources and no income adequate to take care of himself. I notice that ever and anon that same thing has crept into this bill, so that it will be necessary for a man to go before a court really, for it will be a body appointed by the director, who shall determine whether the pension shall be granted to a widow or not. I want to read that particular provision, right at the beginning of the part that has to do with compensation for death or disability:

If from a marriage contracted before the injury the deceased leaves a widow or child, or if he leaves a widowed mother substantially dependent upon him for support, the monthly compensation shall be the following percentages of his pay:

Now you and I know that many a man who goes into the war may have a little farm, and he may die, and it may be possible for the widow, even without his help, with the assistance of her children, to maintain herself and her children by the fruits of that farm, or it may be possible for a man to eke out a scanty living; but this bill provides that before getting what is manifestly due to them they must go before a court and swear that they are unable to take care of themselves. I say we ought not to discriminate; our legislation on this subject ought to be uniform, and if we take from wealth and continue to take from wealth, why discriminate; for if we turn back to wealth, we will take it out again. [Applause.]

The truth is that the provision of the law which requires a widow or widowed mother to prove that they are substantially dependent upon the soldier for support bears hardest upon the conscientious. Self-respecting people, though needy, having a higher regard for their standing in a community, will be slow to make oath that they are dependent. Others less worthy will have no scruples, will make application for full indemnity and be enabled to secure proof that will grant them a pension. This provision of the law puts a premium on perjury. If, as the law states, an effort is made to compensate, the compensation is due to those who by energy and frugality have saved a competence as much as to those who are needy. In other words, it should not partake of the nature of pauper legislation.

While in the main the compensation is in excess of sums previously granted under our pension system, one does not fail to note that in the case of total disability the amount given is much less than under the present system. The loss of both eyes, both legs, or both arms are cases of total disability. The pensioner is granted $100 per month. Under this law he is given $40 per month if single. Many of the single men will have left positions paying much more than this. Their salaries in civil life range from $75 to $200 per month. They have entered the Army, many of them enlisting, all of them serving alike under a law that granted $100 per month. They return maimed for life, shut out from an opportunity to increase what they had earned before. They find, if this bill passes in its present form, that for all the future they must not only be content to surrender the ambitions of life but that they have been reduced to $40 per month. There is no hope that they can save enough from this meager sum to start a little business of their own. A bare subsistence has been granted to them and yet men upon this floor have dared to say that this is a law of compensation. It is not even a good pension law in this particular respect.

What was in the mind of the committee when this provision was drawn? Did they fear that the total disability lists would be so large that we would shrink from the huge sum that would be necessary to meet the charge? If so they have failed to understand the spirit of the American people. For those who have given all but life and yet remain with us, the gratitude of a Nation would gladly pay all that is necessary to take the canker of anxious thoughts from mind and heart and make it possible for them to live in what comfort they may for the remainder of their days. At least $100 per month should be appropriated for total disability.

If he has a wife but no child he and his wife will receive the magnificent sum of $55 per month, instead of the $100 per month granted by our pensions laws. If a wife and one child living, $65 per month. A wife and two or more children, $75 per month. Of course, if he is totally disabled, and in addition so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, he shall receive $20 additional per month. No one worthy of the name of an attendant upon a person absolutely helpless could be secured for $20 per month. What has thus far been discussed on total disability applies to the private. Much greater remuneration is allowed to the officer, based on a percentage of his salary.

The widow of a private to receive $30 per month. Widow and one child, $40 per month. Widow and two children, $50 per month, with $5 additional for each additional child up to two. These rates apply to the private. For officers' widows there is a much larger sum allowed. Their compensation may reach as high as $200 per month.

Why should the widow of an officer receive greater compensation than the widow of a private? Many of the privates in civil life would be more than equal to many of the officers in earning capacity. In theory we are democratic. This bill makes a distinction based on position in the Army and Navy. To the widow of a private the bill grants $30 per month. To the widow of an officer the bill grants in some instances as high as $200 per month. This is not democracy; this is the recognition of a military aristocracy. I know it may be urged that the manner of life of the officer's family is such that more money will be needed to maintain the same social relations, but in this country that very easily may be true of the widow of the private.

This bill creates a new department. Much power has been given to the director in the making of regulations. As the law now stands, untried in its operation, there may be mistakes made, favoritism shown and absolute fraud creep in. In the Pension Department the regulations have been tried out, the errors largely eliminated, the system thoroughly organized. Much of that work already done would very properly apply to the putting into operation this bill when properly amended. In any case, it should be so amended that the employees should be appointed from lists of eligibles by the Civil Service Commission or by transfer from the Bureau of Pensions of the Interior Department and in accordance with the civil-service law. It is certainly unwise legislation that permits two departments to handle pension legislation. Already the pension department is operating under laws which necessitate the classification of the pensioners into different groups. This would add but another group to a well organized and systematized department which is most ably conducted.

Every soldier should be insured. If the Government pays $50 of the risks per thousand why not insure all of them? At least every soldier should be urgently solicited by Government officers to avail himself of this provision. When the war is over there would be less discontent if the Government had insured every man in the sum of $2,500. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, the worthy objects of the bill under consideration may well engage the best thought and wisest action of Congress.

The bill may be divided into three distinct parts:

1. To provide for the dependents of soldiers and sailors during their absence in war and to make permanent provision for such dependents in the event of the death of the soldier or sailor.
2. To provide pensions, or "compensation," as it is termed in the bill, for soldiers and sailors who may become disabled during their service.

3. To provide an insurance system for all such soldiers and sailors as may elect to avail themselves of it at a very low cost.

The objects which are sought to be attained can not be too highly commended. The Nation owes it to its brave defenders, who offer their lives in the service of our country, that all three of these acts of justice should be done. The authors of the bill have shown a proper conception of the obligations of the Nation to its champions on land and sea by attempting to make provision therefor. The only question that can arise is as to the wisdom of their efforts and as to the justice and adaptability of the bill which has been presented.

While the bill has been generally known and referred to in the public prints as the "soldiers' insurance bill," on reading it one is surprised to discover that it is essentially a pension bill, amplified—and wisely amplified, in my opinion—with provisions for insurance and for the care of dependents. The careful avoidance of the use of the word "pension" and the substitution of the word "compensation" is difficult to understand. The word "pension" is far more accurate and appropriate. Why should the authors of the bill "shy" at having their bill known as a "pension" bill and seek to have the pension therein provided called "compensation"? The fact is that you can never fully "compensate" soldiers who are maimed and disabled in war. You can recognize their valor and sacrifices by conferring on them an honorable "pension"; but that is not "compensation."

The plan providing for wives, children, and other dependents of soldiers and sailors while they are away at war impresses me as most wise and beneficent and altogether the best feature of the bill. During the Civil War such dependents were left without any protection upon the part of the National Government. The States, counties, towns, and benevolent organizations—sometimes one, sometimes another, and sometimes none at all—worked along those lines; but many wives sustained themselves and their families of small children by their own hard work. This is the first time, I believe, that the National Government has ever undertaken to provide for soldiers' and sailors' dependents during a war. It is a splendid endeavor, worthy of all praise, and, in my opinion, the plan proposed is feasible and workable.

The insurance plan, also, is one conceived in fine spirit, and I am glad to give it on its broad lines my hearty commendation. I believe that it is destined to accomplish a vast amount of good; or, to state it in obverse order, that it is destined to avoid a vast amount of material suffering of widowed wives and orphaned children, though it can not avoid or prevent their griefs and sorrows.

The United States has honored itself and appropriately honored its surviving soldiers of every war in which it has been engaged by providing them with pensions. The soldiers of the Revolution generally served for short terms, usually of a few months, through some particular campaign. Frequently they had two or three or more of these short terms of service. They were all pensioned, though the country was then young and poor.

The soldiers of the War of 1812 were pensioned and granted patents to lands in the West, upon which they could make their homes, or the patents to which they could sell, as they might choose. The soldiers of the Mexican War of 1846 were pensioned, and a few are on our pension rolls to-day. The widows of the soldiers of the Revolution, the War of 1812, and of the Mexican War were all pensioned.

The soldiers and widows of soldiers of the Civil War have been pensioned, and while the aggregate paid has been very large, in my opinion they have not been too generously pensioned. The persistent and noisy warfare that has been made upon pensions, making use of the infinitely small number of fraudulent applications for pensions that have been made, and the almost negligible number which in a half century passed the vigilance of the pension officers of the Government, as a basis for such warfare upon the part of a few newspapers and one unscrupulous and malignant magazine, is possibly the reason why the authors of this pension bill preferred to call it something else.

However, as it is a pension bill, it should be considered from that standpoint, and its merits or demerits estimated by comparison with other pension legislation and in the light of our experience therewith.

Several Members have pointed out the discrepancies in the "compensations" allowed in this bill and the "pensions" now granted by law to soldiers and widows of other wars. In a few cases the allowances are less in this bill than in the general pension laws—notably for the loss of both eyes, which is $100 in the general law and less than $50 in this bill. As a rule, however, the pensions in this bill are very much larger. Notably is this the case as to officers, widows, and children. Civil War orphans have never drawn but $2 per month each. Up to a few years ago Civil War widows received $8 per month; then it was raised to $12; and in 1916, under the admirable law framed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK], and which is known as the Ashbrook law, widows who have reached the age of 70 years were allowed $20 per month. Under the present bill the lowest rate for widows is $30 per month. I do not criticize the amount fixed, but I call attention to the discrepancy and the enormous increase in the annual pension bills that must result.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] made the pertinent inquiry whether it was not likely that the Civil War pension rates, in view of the obvious discrepancy, would be brought up to those in the present bill, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], in charge of the bill, frankly admitted that he thought it was probable.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand the gentleman to say that by the pending bill the compensation for the loss of both eyes will be only $50 a month?

Mr. OSBORNE. It is $40 a month.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it is not true that the average man who loses both eyes is totally disabled?

Mr. OSBORNE. Surely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As far as helping himself is concerned?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And that he must have help?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. In that case he gets $20 additional for a nurse, or $60 a month.

Mr. OSBORNE. That is for a single man. If he has children, the children's pension will be allowed.

Mr. DEWALT. Then he gets the insurance also of $25 a month?

Mr. OSBORNE. The insurance is an entirely independent provision.

Mr. DEWALT. He will get $40 and $20 and $25, or $85 a month.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He is still shy $15.

Mr. KEARNS. Suppose he did not have any insurance, then what?

Mr. DEWALT. Then he gets $60.

Mr. OSBORNE. It is refreshing and renews confidence in human nature to observe the confiding trustfulness of the gentlemen who believe that this bill, and especially the insurance feature, will obviate or prevent any pension legislation in the future. Gentlemen give generous assurances that they would feel morally bound to refrain from granting further pensions than are provided in this bill to the soldiers of 1917. It is not necessary that the Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress should take any such obligations. Ten years hence half the membership on this floor will consist of these same soldiers of 1917, and they will act upon their own convictions, as to what the American people owe to the surviving soldiers of democracy.

For myself, I do not and shall not borrow one moment of sorrow over that prospect. If they shall enact that every soldier of the War of 1917 who reaches the age of 62 years shall thereafter be entitled to a pension in accordance with a law similar to that which bears the name of our distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], in my opinion they will be doing no less than justice.

I am going to vote for this bill because I am in favor of a pension bill for the soldiers of this war. The allotment and insurance features suitably amended are satisfactory in the main. The "compensation" or pension provisions are faulty—so much so that I do not see how they can be amended into satisfactory shape. I hope that it may be improved and I shall vote for it because there is no choice.

The construction of pension legislation is highly technical. It has taken over 100 years to develop our pension laws. I am constrained to believe that the distinguished gentlemen who drew up this bill, highly capable and informed on other subjects, were wholly "at sea" when they encountered the pension features of the bill. If this had been intrusted to the Pension Committees and the very capable Commissioner of Pensions, I believe that they would have had better results, and have saved the creation of another addition to our rapidly increasing number of boards and commissions which, as in this instance, have conflicting or closely allied duties.

Indeed, it would have saved much confusion, have been more just, and probably in the long run would have saved vast additional expense, if the present pension laws, the result of 100 years of experience, applicable to soldiers of the Civil War and of the Spanish and other wars, had been simply extended to the soldiers of the present war, with the addition of the dependents' allotment and the insurance features; this legislation to be executed by the present very competent Pension Bureau, with small expense compared with that which must be incurred under the present bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I reserve the balance of my hour for a subsequent section.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is not the reading of the bill now in order?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have a motion to strike out the section. I have not made the motion, but I reserve the right to make it. I desire to make it.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I intended to submit a few remarks under general debate on this subject, but waived the opportunity in common with other gentlemen in order that we might get into the reading of the bill.

This bill is to my mind a scientific plan of eliminating as far as possible some of the inevitable hardships of the war. The only legitimate reluctance that an American can have to service in behalf of his country is distress over the conditions that his absence would leave those depending upon him. That is a burden which the United States recognizes that it can assume, and recognizes that it ought to assume. In my judgment this legislation, carefully drawn as it has been, is the first real attempt to reach a real need at the time when help will be of service.

This bill has three main features. First, is the family allowance, which is similar to that now provided for under the Mexican expedition by special appropriation handled by the War Department. The second is the so-called compensation or pension feature for indemnity for injury or death occurring in line of duty. That might be called a pension; and if so, is analogous to the pensions now provided under the pension laws which are administered in the Pension Bureau. The third, the insurance feature, is allied to the war risk in the Treasury. So we have three departments of the Government—the War, Interior, and Treasury—dealing with the three main features of the bill. It is not right to say that any one of these departments has been deprived of its legitimate powers. There must be some selection of a department to administer this act, and that selection is thrown on the War-Risk Bureau, which deals with the larger and more technical class of insurance.

There is one feature of the bill that must be admitted to be vital to the interest of the soldier. I am not going to answer any argument here from the standpoint of the candidate for Congress. There has been too much said as to whether this is going to hurt or help the Members of Congress and whether it is going to do away with private pension laws hereafter. That will take care of itself. The question with us is how we can get the maximum benefits for the soldier. I have not heard any man on the floor rise to defend the existing patchwork of pension laws, not even the chairman of the Pension Committee. They say they believe in liberal pensions. So does everybody, but we want to help the family when the family needs it. We have spent on pensions since 1866 $5,500,000,000. We are spending $166,000,000 a year now more than half a century after the close of the war. Four and a half billion of that five and a half billion has been spent since 1890, or in a period beginning 25 years after the declaration of peace. Did any of that help the dependent families of the soldier? Why, thousands of men died before there was a dollar of service pension paid by the civil government. Thousands of widows were taken care of by charitable organizations before there was a widow's pension law on the statute books.

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman will yield, let me say that $140,000,000 are now paid under the service-pension law alone out of the $165,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and thousands of families were left destitute for years after the Civil War with no help but from charitable organizations. Is that the condition we expect to leave the soldiers of this war in? I say no, and I challenge any gentleman on the floor to defend a system which followed the Civil War.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. Does the gentleman say that the payment of a hundred and sixty million dollars or a hundred and forty million dollars for service pensions is wrong?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not say it is wrong.

Mr. SWITZER. Then why impute to those who voted for the Sherwood bill this odium?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not have to say it is wrong in order to say that when you come, 25 years after the war or 50 years after the war, as you did in the Sherwood bill, and increase the pensions, you are not reaching the real evils that this bill is reaching to-day. What I want to do is to eliminate as far as possible the inevitable hardships and sufferings of this war and not provide for the reelection of the candidates for Congress. They will take care of themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. For a question.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that about $25,000,000 of the present appropriation—

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I can not yield for a discussion between two other gentlemen. I want to discuss briefly the insurance feature of the bill. I believe in the family allowance proposition; in fact, this House is committed to it. I believe in the indemnity for death and injury, because we are committed to that also in the compensation law now on the Federal statute books. This is the same principle, almost identically the same machinery. The question is about the voluntary insurance.

There are two views about that. One is that we ought not to have any insurance at all for fear the Government will get into the insurance business; and, second, that it ought to be a blanket insurance, compulsory and uniform on all the soldiers. The latter proposal violates my notion of the science of insurance. There are thousands going into the Army that do not feel the necessity of any indemnity, because there is no one dependent upon them. There is no reason why they should have a policy in favor of some distant relative, because it would be a mere gamble whether the relative got anything out of it or not.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. IGOE. As far as life insurance is concerned, there might be, there may be, merit in the gentleman's argument, but this insurance includes indemnity to a man in the case of total disability.

Mr. BORLAND. That is included under section 3. Under section 3 full provision is made for indemnity.

Mr. IGOE. If the gentleman will permit—

Mr. BORLAND. Now, the question comes whether we should or should not do right and provide an additional indemnity in case the obligation of one soldier is heavier than another man.

Mr. IGOE. What I would like to suggest is if you want to prevent inequality and preserve the equities, why should not the Government give to all these men this accident or disability insurance? You say in the other case the man has no relatives. In this case every man certainly wants to provide for himself.

Mr. BORLAND. I am endeavoring to answer the gentleman's question. Voluntary insurance provides an additional amount of indemnity from any loss or injury that the man can purchase at cost rate. This is in addition, as I understand it, to the pension or indemnity that is provided in section 3. Now, the question the gentleman says is, Ought he be allowed to add to that indemnity? If that is true, it simply means increasing the indemnity or pension in section 3.

Mr. IGOE. I think they ought all to be put on an equal basis. I think it ought to apply to all and not simply to a man who has enough foresight within 120 days to pay so much a year, and exclude a man who, after 120 days, might want to take out this; and I think we ought to give it to him all during his service and let them elect after the service whether to continue it or not.

Mr. BORLAND. If I understand the gentleman's question, it is in reference to the soldier being shut off after 120 days, and I think that he and I agree on that. I think any time during the soldier's service he might be allowed to take this insurance. I have seen no particular objection to that, and I think I agree to it.

Now, I want to speak on the question of the right to take voluntary insurance in addition to the pension or compensation provided by law. It does not seem to me there is any discrimination about it. Insurance, in the first place, ought to be put at a rate every private in the ranks can pay. He can pay for the maximum amount of insurance which the Government is willing to give. So there is no discrimination about it. It just checks it up to the man whether there is a moral obligation upon him to take care of relatives in addition to what the law would do, and, if so, whether he is willing to pay that insurance.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman a question I asked the other gentleman who preceded him.

Every man who has gone to France who is in our Army has gone knowing the present pension law would, if he were blinded there, give him $100 a month. The pending bill proposes to give him if blinded very much less, $40 less. Does the gentleman think that is right?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to take an isolated case, an extreme case, and compare it in reference to the bill. There is no question but what this bill is more liberal in its whole scale than the present pension law, and yet these gentlemen who are raising objections are the advocates and defenders of the present pension law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I would ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. They are the defenders and advocates of the present pension law. We have an extreme case where one man under some circumstances gets $100 a month which he would not get under this act. I will say it is open to amendment, but it does seem to me that the existing pension law has also had this great defect, that it classes all men upon a blanket uniformity without regard to the number of dependents, without regard to the position in life, without any regard whatever to all the differentiating circumstances in the separate cases. It gives a man $100 without knowledge of whether he needs it or not. I know a man who is drawing $6,000 a year as a retired Federal judge and $50 a month as a pension. I know another man who is drawing $75 a month as a pension and $6,000 a year as a retired circuit court judge and $7,500 as a Member of the Federal Congress. Why, there is no equality or justice in the present law, and no man can defend it. Ten per cent of the amount that is now paid to foreign pensioners is paid to pensioners in Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Turkey, and yet no man can introduce a single solitary reform to the present pension law. I have attempted time and again to see that pensions were not paid to foreigners under the present law and taken out of the pockets of the American taxpayers, but no reform to the present pension law has ever been possible.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will ask the gentleman to state if he knows pensions are now being paid to soldiers of the Civil War who are in Germany?

Mr. BORLAND. I imagine there is no way of getting that money to them, but the money is accumulating here in the Treasury.

Mr. RUSSELL. Before the war came on we were paying to Germany—

Mr. BORLAND. We certainly were.

Mr. RUSSELL. About $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. BORLAND. We certainly were. This insurance that is offered to these men is the plain-term insurance. It expires at the end of each 12 months and it has to be renewed. In other words, it is the plainest—

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I have not the time.

Mr. SWITZER. I will see that the gentleman gets the time. Just one question, and I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended. Does the gentleman mean by this argument that if a man obtains compensation under this law and 10 years from now moves to Germany and moves to Russia, if he wanted to go over there, or his mother was in England and he wanted to go there, would you propose to cut him off?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman knows my position about that, because I have argued on this floor repeatedly the injustice of a dollar of American pensions going abroad, and I intend to introduce an amendment every time I get a chance to do so to see that it does not. I do not think we ought to pay a dollar of the money of the American taxpayer to people who are not willing to live in this country.

On the question of this insurance business, if a man is in civil life and wants to buy insurance, he can buy plain term insurance at that age for about $8 a thousand; but the minute he goes into the Army he can not buy insurance at a rate within his reach, for it runs up to $50 or $60 a thousand. The difference is in the war risk. That is the legitimate risk that the Government itself is attempting to take off his shoulders. It is taking away from him by his service in the Army the power to protect himself and those dependent upon him, according to the exigencies of his situation. He wants to buy insurance. He has a right to buy it, but by drafting him in the Army we have taken away his power to buy it. The Government owes him that right on the question of voluntary insurance. It does not owe him the right to force insurance on him, but simply the right to afford him facilities to obtain it himself. He is not going to keep that insurance long after he gets out of the Army. It is the old kind of insurance that lapses if the policyholder does not pay the premium annually. It is not the kind of insurance that extends itself; it does not provide for so many annual payments. It is never paid up. It has no surrender value. It is the old kind of insurance. My judgment is that the fears of some of these insurance men that this is going to lead to a large number of men being insured by the Government and being taken out of the possible customers of private companies are not going to be realized. Rather the opposite is going to be the case. When a man has been taught the need of insurance and had it impressed upon his mind by the exigencies of his family in time of peril, he will be an insurance customer to the last days of his life. We have the right to give to these men who go into the service the same facilities, as far as we can, that they would have had if they had remained in civil life, and it is not going to be a matter of very heavy expense to the Government to do it. The Government is going in that way, as I believe, to take care of a great many losses scientifically and at the time they occur, which otherwise would have to be taken care of by private pension bills in the future.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. ROSE. What do you think of a case of this kind, namely, where some of the young men who go to the war are carrying a policy in old-line companies? Suppose when they go to war they are unable to keep up the payments in the old-line companies, do you not think the Government should do something in cases of that kind?

Mr. BORLAND. That is a very good illustration. That is exactly in line with what I say. I know some young men in that condition, who are carrying policies that are being cancelled, and if they do not get insurance in this way the rate will be changed so it will be made prohibitive.

Mr. MADDEN. There are some policies where that is not true.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Then we ought to pass a moratorium bill, it seems to me, to protect everybody who can not go to war and can not pay their debts.

Mr. BORLAND. That is another matter. But we ought to pass this bill, because this bill gives them opportunity to take care of themselves out of their own wages.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am reserving a motion to strike out the section.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, in order to get something before the House, if the gentleman is going to move to strike out the section, I move that he make the motion now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The debate was confined to that motion. I am ready to make that motion if no one has a motion to amend.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent—

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes in this general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The only motion so far made is to strike out the last word.

Mr. DECKER. I would like to ask unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SWITZER. Reserving the right to object, can I not get five minutes following the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER]?

Mr. DECKER. You can get it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to have five minutes in this general debate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] in the general debate. I have been here for three days.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio wants to demand recognition immediately after the gentleman from Missouri? Let the Chair state the situation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that I want to be liberal to everybody who wants to speak, and I hope nobody will object to these three requests, but to-morrow I am going to see if we can not proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the record expressly states that I was to have 15 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will stand by the record, and I will include the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. If they are going to back up on this agreement, I am going to know whether there is a quorum here or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin, by agreement of the House, which, of course, is binding on the Chair, has 23 minutes remaining. The Chair has on the list the names of a number of gentlemen who desire recognition under the five-minute rule, and the Chair expects to recognize those gentlemen in the order in which their names are listed here, following the usual custom, except, of course, under the rule that the members of the committee will be given preference.

Mr. ADAMSON. In securing that agreement Saturday evening, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] were included; and I hope they will be allowed to speak before the rule is put into effect as to confining debate to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not put that into effect unless it is demanded.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like a quarter of a minute. I am one of the parties that the Chair has listed there to be heard this evening in general debate; but I am willing to waive any plan for this evening if I can have some sort of assurance from the gentleman in charge of the bill that I can have about 10 minutes when I offer an amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would suggest, however, as to general debate, that there was no general debate except that which was allotted to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch].

Mr. RUSSELL. Is has been called "general debate," but there has been no real general debate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House, commonly known as the soldiers' insurance bill, is as meritorious as any we have been called upon to consider at this session of Congress.

I have read both the majority and the minority reports and have attentively listened to the arguments both in favor of the bill and against it. The principal criticisms against the bill are:

First. The bill was considered by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and was not considered by the proper committee.

Second. It is to be administered under a bureau in the Treasury Department instead of a bureau in the Interior Department.

Third. There is some criticism against the insurance features of the bill.

It is not material what committee considered the bill. The question is, Are its provisions such as we indorse, and does it make generous provision for the soldiers who are entering this war? Nor is it material by what bureau the bill is administered. It will cost additional money to carry out the provisions of the law and it makes no difference what bureau administers it. As to the insurance feature, I think that is one of the best provisions of the bill.

The bill generously provides for the dependents of enlisted men and makes liberal compensation for disability or death. It provides for rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training for soldiers receiving injuries causing permanent disability. It also enables enlisted men to take out insurance at no greater rate than if they were not in the Army. The bill is an amendment to the war-risk insurance bill, and the law will be administered under the supervision of a director in the Treasury Department when passed. It is intended to take the place of pensions and appropriates $173,150,000 in addition to appropriating $100,000 for administering the provisions of the act.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

When we were last before the people we were at peace with all the world, and it was the fervent prayer of every patriotic father, as well as every loving mother, that we should so continue. We then discussed domestic affairs and the things that looked to our internal development, including agriculture, the distribution and marketing of crops, good roads, rural mail delivery, rural credits, and kindred topics. We are now confronted with far more serious questions.

On August 1, 1914, a war broke out across the sea and spread like a conflagration until it enveloped nearly all of Europe. The United States proclaimed its neutrality and did everything possible to keep out of it. For two and one-half years we succeeded. The President, with calm, patient diplomacy unequalled in the history of this country, succeeded in avoiding war. We were encouraged to believe that the end would come to the terrible conflict in the no distant future without our being drawn into it.

As in all wars, neutral rights were violated, and we entered vigorous protests. Lives of our citizens were taken on the high seas without warning, and at first excuses were made and apologies offered. About two years ago the Lusitania was sunk without warning, and the civilized world stood aghast. Among the passengers going to a watery grave were 115 American citizens.

A demand was made on the Imperial German Government by the United States to define its policy with reference to the use of submarines, and that Government was then informed if such a policy was to be followed longer it would lead to the severance of diplomatic relations and the holding of that Government to a strict accountability. Everybody applauded the diplomatic victory of the President, and our Government was assured of a discontinuance of the submarine policy of Germany.

This continued until January 31, 1917, when, without previous notice, our Government was warned that the submarine policy of Germany would be renewed again on February 1, 1917, against all vessels within a certain prescribed zone around the British Isles and in the Mediterranean Sea. This led to the severance of our diplomatic relations. There was no other course open for our country to pursue, because Germany had admittedly become an outlaw upon the high seas. The American people still hoped that this would not lead to war and that Germany would not in fact pursue the policy of destroying the lives of neutrals or the sinking of vessels without warning in admitted violation of international law. However, since that time, ship after ship flying alien flags and the flag of the United States has been submarined without warning and 226 Americans have lost their lives. This was murder as much so as if Germany had invaded the United States and killed our citizens on our own soil.

THE CAUSES OF THE WAR.

The murder of Archduke Ferdinand on June 28, 1914, was the excuse and not the cause of the war. (Exhibit 1.) Intensive preparations had been made by the Prussian autocracy for a quarter of a century or more. Few people would agree as to all the causes of the war. It would require a careful study of the history of all the European countries; their treaty alliances, the wars for the past half century, the adjustments that followed, the annexations of territory, and money indemnities exacted. To more fully understand the situation, racial and religious conditions must be inquired into, the desire for territorial expansion, including outlets to the sea, the foreign possessions of the European nations, and particularly trade relations and commercial jealousies. The people of Alsace-Lorraine have their eyes turned toward France, those in Poland want their freedom, and Bosnia and Herzegovina resent the treachery by which they were placed under the domination of Austria-Hungary and afterwards annexed by that country in violation of solemn treaties. There is a seething unrest among the nations of the Balkan Peninsula, a desire cherished by some of them at least to form a confederacy for their mutual benefit, to increase their importance very greatly, and to insure their protection against their treaties being violated and their countries being dismembered and annexed.

It must be remembered that Serbia, Roumania, and other Balkan nations lay athwart the commercial path of Germany and her ally, Austria-Hungary via Constantinople and the East.

Innumerable questions, great and small, and many complications impossible to enumerate inspired the preparations that resulted in the bloodiest war and the most appalling that ever shocked mankind. All these causes and others contributed in varying degrees to bring on the conflict, but the judgment of the best thought is that the one principal controlling cause of this war is the overweening ambition of the Kaiser and the military autocracy of Prussia to dominate the world.

The murdering of the heir to the Austrian throne by the Serbian student, Gavrilo Princip, was the fuse, the lighting of which was the signal to set vast military forces of Central Europe in motion. The Kaiser was willing to adopt any excuse for deceiving the German people into supporting his ambition to destroy democracy and to rule the world. The evidence is indisputable that German autocracy caused this war. Germany knew, approved, and inspired the ultimatum sent Serbia by Austria-Hungary. (Exhibit 2.) It made demands that no independent nation could accept and retain its sovereignty. (Exhibit 9.) All were quickly conceded, save one—to allow Austrian judges to sit in the Serbian courts and try the people charged with conspiring with the student who killed the archduke. Serbia could not yield to that demand, but offered to leave it to arbitration.

An opportune time was selected to make the demand for acceptance within 48 hours; the Russian ambassador was temporarily absent from Vienna, so that his Government could not be promptly notified; President Poincaré, of France, ally of Russia, was away from Paris; and the Kaiser made it convenient to be absent from Berlin and hard to find. All these circumstances made it difficult for Sir Edward Grey, acting on behalf of Great Britain and joined by Russia and France, to secure an extension of time of Austria within which Serbia could answer the ultimatum, and failing in that to secure an agreement to leave it to arbitration. The Kaiser refused to join in preferring this reasonable request.

Austria then invaded Serbia. Russia declared war against Austria. On August 1 Germany declared war against Russia, and on the next day demanded of Belgium a right of way through that neutral country into France. Belgium refused, and on August 3 Germany declared war against France, giving as an excuse that some French aeroplanes had flown over the border, and began an advance on France through Belgium. On August 4 Germany declared war on Belgium. When Great Britain saw that Belgium was invaded and her neutrality violated, she declared war on Germany, and thus the greatest war in history was started.

BELGIUM.

Belgium was a neutral country at peace with all belligerents and Germany was under solemn treaty obligations not to invade her territory. Belgium had an area of 11,373 square miles and a population of 7,423,784 in 1910, or a country about one-sixth as large as the State of Oklahoma but with a population something like three times as great.

The treaty was regarded as no more than a "scrap of paper," and this numerically weak but gallant nation was brutally overrun, its territory laid waste, its fields devastated, its cities burned, its churches, hospitals, and universities leveled to the ground, and outrages perpetrated against the people so shocking, brutal, inhuman, and appalling as to beggar description.

Authentic reports give innumerable details of women being outraged and violated, of old and decrepit men being murdered, and of hundreds of children being killed, their bodies mutilated, their limbs dismembered.

I want to plead with our chivalrous American boys who worship their mothers and the ideals of our country, when they get to Europe to remember the barbarous outrages perpetrated upon the poor Belgians.

England came into the war, as did her ally Japan, not for conquest and not for gain but in defense of the Belgians, because she was under treaty obligations to do so.

WAR RESOLUTION.

When every means known to diplomacy had failed to protect the lives of our citizens the President called Congress to meet in extra session on April 2, and submitted to it in a memorable message the entire controversy. On April 5 the House passed by an almost unanimous vote a resolution declaring that a state of war existed with Germany. There was no other course to pursue. This Government could not with honor permit the lives of American citizens to be taken in violation of international law. I voted for this resolution.

In these circumstances what else could be done? Our plain, undisputed rights on the seas had been violated, our ships had been sunk, our property rights had been destroyed, and American citizens—men, women, and children entitled to the protection of our Government—were sent to the bottom of the ocean in torpedoed vessels. They should always be safe under the folds of our flag. Is this Government, great and powerful as she is, going to submit to these outrages and insults? What answer do you think the men who fought at Bunker Hill and Yorktown and who suffered at Valley Forge would make? Are we who follow after them less courageous or less deserving?

We all love our country and we love peace, but no self-respecting American citizen can stand idly by and see his country's rights assailed, its people murdered, its Government insulted, and its flag held in contempt. For me and mine, I am willing to make any sacrifice in its protection. (Exhibit 3.)

Our great President tried in every possible way to avert this war through negotiations. Germany admitted that we had the right to the freedom of the seas and that it was a violation of international law to sink our ships and murder our people. She spurned our rights, held international law in utter contempt, and gave notice on January 31, 1917, that she was to become an outlaw on the high seas and sink all ships crossing a certain prescribed zone without warning, regardless of international law. Under these conditions, after doing all he could, the President, on February 3, 1917, submitted the matter to Congress, expressing the hope in his memorable message that German autocracy would not by an overt act destroy the property and endanger the lives of neutrals.

Even then Congress did not declare war, hoping and praying that it might yet be avoided. Congress adjourned on March 4, and the Members had not reached their several homes until reports came that ships flying our flag had been sunk and the lives of American citizens sacrificed. Following one after another, ship after ship was torpedoed, until a total of 1,276 merchant vessels were sunk, of which 425 were under neutral flags and 15 of them were flying the flag of the United States. A total of 226 American lives were sacrificed. I ask any self-respecting, peace-loving, law-abiding citizen of this Republic what else your President and responsible head of the Government could do in these circumstances except to reconvene Congress and ask it to pass a resolution declaring that a state of war existed with Germany? (Exhibit 8.)

It must never be lost sight of that we were at peace with all the world; that we were trying in every way to preserve our neutrality; that we were carrying on our commercial pursuits, as we had a lawful right to do; that Germany was the aggressor; that we had asserted our rights time and again as vigorously as they could be presented; that Germany defied all the neutral nations on earth; that she persisted in violating international law when it suited her convenience; and that she openly gave notice she was going to be an international outlaw and proceeded to carry such policy into effect by sending to the bottom of the ocean our men, women, and children.

Is there any man within this Republic, I care not how much he loves peace, who will not defend himself or the lives of the members of his family dependent upon him? Germany told this powerful Nation, the Government for which Washington sacrificed so much, for which he and his brave soldiers fought to see established, and for which Franklin and Jefferson and Hamilton wrought, that a zone proscribed around the British Isles and the Mediterranean Sea was closed to all vessels of the neutral nations of the world. No self-respecting nation could submit to such humiliation. No government worthy of a name would permit its citizens to be murdered without coming to their defense.

We love our flag and the circumstances that gave it birth. Annual exercises are held commemorating its natal day on June 14. Our memories are refreshed as to its being selected by a committee with Washington at its head and as to the first flag being made by Betsy Ross 140 years ago. As the years go by and we stand and gaze upon the flag of our country and think of the hardships endured, the privations and suffering of our Revolutionary ancestors, who made it possible for us to secure our liberty and establish here the greatest Republic of freemen on earth, we should reconsecrate ourselves to its service. We should see that no autocracy on the globe insults it with impunity.

The 13 stripes, alternating red and white, represent the original 13 Colonies, and the stars, now 48, on the field of blue, represent the States banded together in an indissoluble Union, whose citizens, I am sure, are as ready now as they were in 1776 to risk all, endure all, and suffer all in defense of the flag and the ideals of our country.

We did not seek this war and were driven to the last extremity to which we could go with honor before entering it. We have now turned about face and this contest will not be ended until we are assured that our rights and the rights of all allied neutral nations, great and small, are safe from an international outlaw, bandit, and murderer.

We have no fight upon the German people. There are no better citizens of this Republic than those of German descent. They are thrifty, law-abiding, and industrious. They have done much to help develop America. We welcome them to our country. Our fight is not against them, but against the autocratic Prussian rulers, who are attempting to dominate the world. There is no doubt now but what if the plain people of Germany could get first-hand information, so that they would know the truth, they would rebel. If they then had some adequate way of carrying their wishes into effect their rulers would be set aside and men the civilized world could trust would be selected to represent and govern them and an enduring, lasting peace established. However, they can not know the truth now, due to a censored press and the might of the military caste of Germany.

It has been urged that war could have been avoided by our abandoning our rights upon the seas and by our citizens not going aboard ships destined across the ocean. If our Government had submitted to our commerce being swept from the ocean and American citizens prohibited from going where they have a lawful right to travel, it would have merited the contempt of the civilized world. Are we to permit an international outlaw to define the rights of American citizens? If our Government is not powerful enough to protect the honor and dignity of Old Glory wherever it floats, then indeed shall all semblance of respect for it disappear.

What would have been the result had our commerce been stopped? Three-fifths of it goes through the zone prohibited by the Imperial German Government. The people of this country saw the effect of not having a foreign market in the fall of 1914, and the people of the South felt it more acutely than any other section. At first, there was absolutely no market at all for cotton. The farmers, most of whom owed money secured by mortgages on their crops, were unable to meet their obligations, and many of the smaller merchants were forced into bankruptcy before a market for cotton was restored. When the market first opened, it sold for 5 to 6 cents per pound; and later, when Congress passed the war-risk bill, which insured the trade safe transportation across the sea, the price of cotton and other agricultural products, as well as manufactured goods, began to rise, so that the farmers of the Nation receive a fair price for their crops.

What I want to emphasize is that without a foreign market and without our products being shipped across the ocean, our home markets are not sufficient and our home consumption is not great enough to insure fair prices for home products. What is true of farm products is also true of manufactured goods. Without a foreign market we would have industrial paralysis, business stagnation, labor thrown out of employment, and bankruptcy, with financial ruin on the one hand and misery, starvation, and suffering on the other. Why should these conditions exist? Shall we allow these conditions to be brought about because an autocratic outlaw and a merciless autocracy temporarily rule the German people? Remembering the circumstances that gave this country birth, the sacrifices that were made and hardships that were endured, shall we not assert our rights, protect the liberties of our people, and give notice to the world that while we are a peaceful Nation no government on earth can violate our sacred rights, murder our people, and dishonor our flag.

THREE WARS.

Everything points to the fact that the military autocracy of Germany cherished the ambition of ruling the world and expected to do so by winning three wars. (Exhibit 4.)

First. With her ally, Austria-Hungary, completely under her domination and using the assassination of the archduke as an excuse and knowing that Russia would come to the aid of Serbia and that France was treaty bound to assist Russia, Germany expected to overrun the smaller Balkan countries, fall upon unprepared France, besiege and capture Paris, and with a quick stroke bring Russia to her knees. This would let her dominate continental Europe. She did not expect England to enter the war; and with England out it was not anticipated Japan, her ally, would enter it. However, England was under treaty obligations to preserve the neutrality of Belgium; and Germany made the mistake of invading that neutral country in its brutal, mad onrush into France.

Second. Germany expected as her second war, after having conquered continental Europe, with her own navy and with that of France to attack Great Britain, surround her in submarine warfare, and conquer her and Japan, if the latter came to her relief as she is bound under treaty to do.

Third. With the powerful fleets thus acquired, the third war would have been with the United States. We are now joined with about 20 other nations as our allies in defending ourselves against a military autocracy and international bandit. I am sure that when this war is ended provision will be made for disarmament and an international army and navy, with power to enforce international decrees, which will result in an enduring and a lasting peace.

OTHER CAUSES OF WAR.

This is not all. Not only was our commerce destroyed, our ships sunk, the lives of our citizens taken, our Government insulted, and our flag dishonored, but when our President was using all the diplomacy possible to compose differences and avert war, preserving neutrality, cautioning and warning our people to commit no unneutral act, when the patience of our people was strained to the breaking point, agents under the direction and in the pay of representatives of the Imperial German Government, while protesting friendship for our Nation, were meddling in our domestic affairs, stirring up strife among our people, inciting strikes, dynamiting property, and encouraging law violations. Over and above all, these inspired and trusted agents were plotting with Mexico in the throes of a revolution to the south, advising a coalition with Japan to make war upon the United States, and holding out as a reward the annexation of Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona to Mexico. Disclosures within the past few months abundantly sustain these statements. No nation could tolerate this treachery and treason.

We all dread the horrors of war. We love peace. Every Member of Congress keenly felt and gave expression to the awful responsibility resting upon him when the war resolution was up for consideration and passage. We realized the fearful consequences; the hardships that must be endured, the sacrifices that would have to be made, the lives that would be lost, the financial burdens that must be borne, and the awful results in other ways, but every means known to diplomacy had failed, and there was no honorable way of escape except to accept the challenge and defend our Nation against insults and our people against murder.

SPECIOUS ARGUMENTS AGAINST WAR.

All the wrongs committed and the outrages perpetrated, to which I have invited attention, must be admitted, and can not be denied. Those who oppose the purposes of the Government are not without ingenious argument. (Exhibit 10.) They are able, skillful, and resourceful. To disagree with them and to dispute their statements and to controvert their logic does not necessitate impugning their motives or assailing their integrity.

The seasoned debater too often attempts to divert attention from the leading salient points. He enlarges and dwells on minor details. He almost always only half states the facts, and invariably appeals to the passions and prejudices and the avarice of his audience.

The skillful lawyer turns from the main points in the evidence which are against his client and too frequently resorts to abusing the witness on minor points in the hope of throwing dust into the eyes of the jury and leading their minds away from the main facts in the case.

This was never better illustrated than in the speeches made on the present war. No one denies that our commerce was destroyed in violation of international law; that helpless men and innocent women and children were murdered; that spies infested our country; that factories were blown up; and that German agents plotted with Mexico. It is admitted that diplomacy was exhausted and that nothing was left but war or cowardly submission.

It is urged that other nations, particularly England, violated some of our treaty rights and caused vexatious delays in carrying on our commerce and the loss of some of our property. Granted that this is true. In every war there is always some loss of property and extended controversy over the construction of points of international law. These matters can all await adjustment until after the war is ended.

The alleged wrongs of one nation do not justify another nation's wrongs. We could have and would have postponed the settlement of the question of property rights with Germany until after the war was over, but not the murdering of our people in admitted violation of law. I have but pity for the person who can not draw a distinction between the destruction of property and the sending of human beings to a watery grave.

It is urged that dastardly outrages were committed against our citizens in Mexico, all of which are to be condemned in unmeasured terms, but that was in the throes of a revolution, and the outrages were not traceable to the paid agents of the recognized Government of Mexico. Our people were murdered by agents of and under the instruction of the Imperial German Government, and that Government is responsible to our Nation for it.

It is urged that we are restricting the right of free speech and the freedom of the press. The greatest latitude is allowed in criticising men and measures and the administration of affairs by the Government. I believe in free speech and wholesome criticism and the widest publicity. The people should be informed as to every detail, if it can be done with safety. They understand that many things connected with the conduct of this war, including the movement of troops, the kind and amount of guns, ammunition, and other material, as well as hundreds of other things, must be kept secret for military reasons. It must be remembered that the right of free speech does not carry with it the right to advise anyone not to obey any act of Congress. To do so is a felony.

Then there are constitutional objectors. They are the most numerous of all. When every other reason fails, it is always safe to hide behind the Constitution. There is but one place to attack the constitutionality of an act of Congress, and that is in the courts. This right is reserved to everyone, and instead of encouraging disobedience to an act of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional, the jurisdiction of the proper court should be invoked. (Exhibit 5.)

Then there is the familiar argument advanced that our Government before entering the war was unneutral, and was selling food and supplies, particularly munitions, to the allies. Our Government, of course, sold to no one, but our citizens and manufacturers sold to all purchasers. The central powers were necessarily restricted in their purchases, because of their inability to secure safe transportation across the Atlantic Ocean. The selling of munitions was not an unneutral act. Germany sold munitions to all belligerents in every war for the past quarter of a century. Germany sold munitions to both belligerents in the Boer-English War and the Spanish-American War, as well as to Mexico when the United States was having difficulty in assisting to restore order in that republic three years ago.

You hear it frequently stated that we should not send troops to Europe, as this is not our war, we are not mixed up in European affairs, and we should wait until we are attacked on our own soil. Such persons forget that we are now defending ourselves and that Germany attacked our Nation first by sinking our ships, destroying our commerce, and murdering our people. This is a defensive war against those attacks. Belgium, Russia, France, and Serbia waited until they were attacked, their countries overrun, their cities destroyed, and their people outraged. This is what some advise in the United States. If we are compelled to wage war against the greatest military autocracy in defense of the lives of our people, we should welcome cooperation and assistance of our allies in making a common cause in this war. If with the assistance of four-fifths of the nations of the world in point of area, population, and resources, we are unable to win this war, certainly we would not be successful if we should withhold our support and permit the central powers to conquer the nations of Europe singly, after which with the added strength and power of their navies they will come across and attack us.

Again, the persons who use this argument are cowards at heart. The distress of others does not appeal to them, and if the German Army and Navy were to come across the sea they would insist upon waiting until their particular State was attacked, then their county, then their own township, and at last their own home. While we deplore the necessity for this war and deeply regret that we were forced into it, now that we are in it, each nation is in honor bound to do its part toward carrying it to a successful conclusion. If we must fight in defense of the life of our Nation, we should welcome the assistance of France, Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Japan, and our other allies.

Then it is asserted that we have enacted much drastic legislation; that in a fight for democracy we may sacrifice some of the liberties of the people at home. It is true that we have enacted much legislation of this character, but in time of war concentration of power with authority to act quickly is absolutely essential.

Again, there is the appeal to the cupidity of those who want to coin money out of the blood of their fellow citizens, who want to enrich themselves in this their Nation's crisis, and who place dollars above patriotism. They do not want to bear any of the financial burdens in the way of paying additional taxes which the war necessitates.

Another way is to work upon the prejudices of the people. It is urged that this is a rich man's war, and that eastern capitalists started it, in order to make millions of dollars out of it. Figures are cited to show that munition makers and certain corporations have declared enormous dividends. Large increases are recounted and the unfortunate condition of some of the poor is contrasted. Everyone knows that we went to war in defense of the lives of American citizens, some of whom had been brutally and cruelly slaughtered by the torpedoing of ships flying our flag. No sane man will in seriousness contend that the wealthy men of this country were in league with the Kaiser in destroying the lives of our people. The enormous profits were largely made from contracts with foreign governments before our entrance into the war. Congress has enacted legislation giving the President power to fix the price of all necessities, which will greatly reduce profits, and we have largely increased the tax on incomes and excess profits, so that the rich men of the country will, as they should and as they never did before, bear the greater part of the financial burden of this war.

All kinds of ingenious arguments intended to array one class against another will be advanced—the rich against the poor, the laborer against his employer, the farmer against those who live in cities and town—and many mistakes of administration will be found and held up to criticism. Some supplies which have to be quickly purchased in large quantities will cost very much more than in normal peace times. I do not condone or apologize for any mistake or blunder, administrative or otherwise. I condemn them one and all. Our officials should be given wide latitude, because they must act quickly. However, they should be held to strict accountability. I denounce and condemn the making of large profits in this war of every kind and character. We enacted legislation giving the President plenary authority. He can not do everything at once or in one day. He is proceeding cautiously after being fully advised. As he proceeds, I have confidence that many mistakes will be corrected and enormous profits reduced.

It is argued that we have enacted much drastic legislation. We have, but it is war legislation. Most all of it contains provisions that the law shall not be operative after the war is over.

LEGISLATION.

A war can not be fought simply by making a declaration. There must be men to fight and money to supply food, clothing, and other munitions of war. The expenses incident to a great war are staggering in the aggregate. The war resolution passed the House by a vote of 373 to 50. It passed the Senate by a vote of 82 to 6. On April 14 the House passed an act authorizing the issuance of $5,000,000,000 in bonds and $2,000,000,000 in certificates for the purpose of conducting the war to a successful conclusion. This bill passed both the House and Senate unanimously. The House on September 6 unanimously and without a roll call authorized a second emergency-bond issue of $7,538,945,460. Of this amount all but $4,000,000,000 has been authorized to be issued by the act above referred to. In addition, the bill authorizes the issuance by the Secretary of the Treasury of $4,000,000,000 worth of certificates of indebtedness, payable within one year from date of issue, and $2,000,000,000 worth of war savings certificates maturing within five years from the date of issue. The short-time certificates were authorized to make cash immediately available, anticipating the revenues to be collected under existing law and pending legislation. It authorizes the raising and expending of the largest sum of money of any measure passed by a legislative body in the world.

In addition, we increased the pay of enlisted men from $15 to $30 per month; existing law provided for an increase of 20 per cent for foreign service; so that an enlisted man in Europe now gets $33 per month. These and other large appropriations indicate the liberality of Congress toward the enlisted men in this war.

We voted large appropriations for the Army and the Navy, and greatly increased the number of enlisted men in the Navy and the Marine Corps.

It was necessary to raise an army. We had no army of any size, and everybody agreed that our Military Establishment should be increased, the only question of difference being whether it should be done by the selective system or the volunteer system. Recognizing that every citizen of military age owed an obligation to this Government and should perform military service, the military authorities favored the selective system. Every country in the civilized world has it and every one recognizes that it is an absolutely fair method. We boast that our Government guarantees equal protection to all alike, and I insist that there is a corresponding military obligation upon every citizen of this country to serve it and to defend its honor. All the European countries without exception require some military service. England was compelled in May, 1916, to resort to it. Canada has recently passed a compulsory military-service law. The South in 1862 was forced to pass a conscription act, as did Congress in 1863, applying it to the Union soldiers. Without the selective system, service in the Army would be voluntary, and I am sure that subsequent events have conclusively demonstrated the wisdom of the selective system, and that it would have been difficult, indeed, to have gotten an efficient army without the selective system. It recognizes no distinction. It requires all between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, to render military service, if not physically exempted. I personally witnessed the drawing which took place in the room of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and am sure the entire country is confident that it was absolutely fair, and that there was no discrimination.

Lincoln urged and Congress passed a conscription act in 1863. President Wilson, the Secretary of War, every Army officer, the governor of every State, the adjutant general of every State, ex-Presidents Taft and Roosevelt—all familiar with the military history of our Government—strongly advocated the selective system.

Washington and Jefferson, in messages and letters, strongly recommended it. (Exhibit 6.)

FOOD LEGISLATION.

We passed two food bills—one known as the food-survey bill, that provided for an inventory of food products, and the other known as the food-control bill, about which so much has been said and written until the public is fairly familiar with it. Its scope was enlarged so as to include food, feed, fuel, and articles required for their production. This legislation is drastic, and confers large powers upon the President, but is only temporary, ending with the war. This war can not be successfully fought without food in great abundance for our soldiers and allies, without clothing, and without munitions of all kinds and the material and ingredients necessary to make them. This legislation has three main purposes:

(1) To stimulate food production, and to that end a minimum price of $2 per bushel for wheat was guaranteed for the crop of 1918. The farmers who sow wheat this fall are assured of at least $2 for all the wheat grown next year. It is believed that this price, about two and one-half times the average price in peace times, will cause a very large acreage to be sown and a much larger production. In Oklahoma on October 1, 1916, 73 per cent of the wheat grown last year had been marketed at an average price of $1.05 per bushel.

(2) The act makes it unlawful to hoard, monopolize, willfully destroy, or engage in discriminating or unfair practices for the purpose of enhancing the prices or restricting the supply, distribution, or manufacture of any necessities. Under this legislation the President is authorized to prohibit options and transactions on boards of trade. He is given plenary power to correct all abuses. There has always been too great a difference between the price received by the producer and the price paid by the ultimate consumer for food products, and the purpose and intent of this legislation is to do away with this evil and permit the Government through its representative to fix a price and purchase these products direct. An appropriation of $150,000,000 is made for this purpose, which will be adequate, when it is remembered that this purchasing agency will also purchase for all our allies. To win this war, it is as necessary our allies be supplied with food, clothing, and munitions as it is to supply our own soldiers.

(3) It authorizes the President to place an embargo upon the exporting of these articles. Of course everyone understands that this is done for two reasons, (a) that our supplies may be conserved for ourselves and our allies, and (b) to prevent them going through neutral countries to our enemies, the central powers. While statistics do not show that Germany is importing direct from the United States wheat, cotton, meats, and other food supplies, yet they do show that exportations to the neutral countries adjoining Germany, including Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, have increased enormously, and that they now import almost as much in the aggregate as went to them with Germany and Austria included prior to the beginning of the war in 1914.

I believe our farmers are as patriotic as any other class of people; that they are willing to make some sacrifices; and that they appreciate the necessity for some legislation along this line. Everybody knows that labor is higher; that the things which the farmer buys are higher; that the things which they live on are higher; and that they should, therefore, receive a fair price for their farm products. On the other hand, we are calling millions of men to the colors. We must help feed our allies. A great army of consumers, including laboring men, throughout the country must be looked after. All these conditions made it necessary to enact legislation to prevent cornering the market and stock gambling in order to support our soldiers and prevent starvation at home.

Again, let me remind the farmers of this country that in September and October, 1914, cotton had no market, and when the market did open it sold at 6 cents per pound. Wheat was worth 65 cents per bushel and corn sold for about 35 cents per bushel. Now cotton is selling for 22 cents to 25 cents per pound, according to the grade; wheat at $2.20 per bushel; and corn for $1.50 per bushel.

In all past wars and in all emergencies the farmers of the country have shown themselves equal to the occasion. Most of the great men in civil and military life have come from the farm, where they breathed the air of freedom and were taught lessons of patriotism. I can not believe that the farmers of this country to-day are less loyal to their flag than the brave men who followed and starved under Washington in Revolutionary days, who fought under Old Hickory in 1812, who marched to victory with Grant, or who went down to defeat under the gallant Lee. They deplore the necessity for this war, and every single one of them deeply regrets it, but being in it I am sure they are ready to make every reasonable sacrifice.

Congress passed an act increasing the number of members on the Interstate Commerce Commission and gave it much greater power to regulate the transportation facilities of the country, the necessity for which, I am sure, is apparent to all in this emergency.

Congress passed an act to increase the shipping facilities of the country. It provides for a shipping board, giving it powers to build and commandeer ships and to regulate water transportation, much after the authority given the Interstate Commerce Commission in regulating transportation on land by railroads in the United States. All the leading countries of the world have lost so heavily on account of submarine sinkings that this law is necessary. It is imperative that troops be transported across the sea as well as food and supplies of all kinds for our soldiers and allies, and that transportation facilities across the Atlantic be enlarged in every possible way.

AEROPLANE SERVICE.

There was appropriated $640,000,000 for the Aeroplane Service. This is a new kind of warfare and but little used in any previous war. We are planning to build and equip them in large numbers. Work is being expedited upon them as much as possible and men are being trained to use them in schools all over the United States and France. Already we have been thrilled with the great success and daring of many of our brave American boys in attacking and bringing to earth German aeroplanes. Aeroplanes are to play an important part in this and future wars, if they do not prove a controlling factor. They can now quickly ascend to an altitude of 18,000 or 20,000 feet. Their principal use is threefold:

(1) To make a complete survey of the country, including the location of the enemy troops, estimate their number, the formation of their lines, their trenches, and report such information by wireless or in person to headquarters for the immediate use of the allied commanders. They also photograph the enemy's lines, troops, and so forth, when on these flights.

(2) Their second use is to beat back, assault, and destroy all enemy aeroplanes, so as to prevent them from getting information with reference to the location and distribution of our troops for the use of our enemies.

(3) The third use to which they are put is to drop bombs and other explosives upon the armies in the field, their supply bases, their naval bases, and their cities, setting them on fire and destroying them. Many people wonder why they are not put to this last use with greater effect. It must be remembered that as aeroplanes are being constructed to rise to greater altitudes, anti-aircraft guns have been invented to destroy them at 10,000 or 12,000 feet. It is therefore necessary that the aeroplanes stay at such a height as to be out of reach of these guns, which makes the dropping of explosives and projectiles uncertain. At the present time their use is regarded much more important from a military standpoint in securing information with reference to enemy lines and locations and for beating back enemy aeroplanes engaged in the same work.

WAR-REVENUE BILL.

Perhaps the most difficult legislation we had to enact was the war-revenue bill. It is much easier to spend money than it is to make it. It is much easier for Congress to appropriate money than to accumulate it through tax gatherers into the Treasury Department. Members of Congress receive all kinds of advice as to the purposes for which money should be appropriated in order to carry the war to a successful conclusion, but they also receive many suggestions about taxing all kinds of business, other than that in which the writers are engaged.

There are two theories as to how revenue should be raised in war time. One advocates a large bonded indebtedness, and the other advocates the raising of a large amount by taxation. Of course, all debts contracted must be paid at some time, and whether they are paid from moneys received now or from the sale of bonds, the people must pay these taxes in the end. We found our allies in straitened financial circumstances. It became necessary to lend them financial assistance, in order to make them effective in the war. We did this and pledged our own credit. The war-revenue bill provides for raising a part of the expenses of this war by the sale of bonds, and a very large part by taxation. A large part of these taxes, as provided in the bill, is to be paid on incomes, by corporations, on excess profits, on inheritances, on liquors, and on tobaccos. I believe that a large part of the war indebtedness should be paid by the present generation. I supported the theory that if we conscript the boys of the Nation for the Army to defend the honor and glory of this Republic, we should conscript the wealth of the Nation through the income tax, excess profits tax, and inheritance tax, to pay the expenses of conducting the war.

Let me call your attention to the war profits of several of our large business concerns for the year 1916:

United States Steel Corporation	$207,945,953
Bethlehem Steel Corporation	53,715,041
Anaconda Copper Mining Co.	39,087,187
Utah Copper Co.	32,174,480
American Smelting & Refining Co.	11,158,084
B. L. du Pont de Nemours & Co.	76,581,729
General Chemical Co.	9,700,191
Central Leather Co.	12,016,397
American Sugar Refining Co.	4,211,403
Republic Iron & Steel Co.	11,687,863
Standard Oil Co. of New York	20,425,510
Corn Products Refining Co.	3,798,892

Of course they are profits made prior to our entering the war and before the President was authorized to fix the price of many of their products, but their profits will continue to be great. I favor the taxing of large incomes and large profits such as these, the raising of taxes from estates, the collection of additional taxes on liquors and tobaccos, but voted against all the stamp and consumption taxes contained in the bill.

These profits will be much larger this year than in any subsequent year, and we should collect a larger per cent from war taxes during the continuance of the war, because the Government will be unable to get so much at the same rate after the war closes. The Government will then be compelled to raise a large amount from a greater number of people, which will cause the burden to fall more heavily upon the masses, including those less able to pay.

It is not a sound argument to say that all the money to meet these staggering appropriations should be raised from the sale of bonds and their payment passed to another generation. I favored and voted for an increase in the income tax and increased war profits taxes. The thought of our country in this critical time should not be centered on hoarding and accumulating wealth, but individuals, companies, or corporations should consider themselves fortunate if they are able to continue through this war without financial loss.

The war-revenue bill passed the House on May 23, 1917, by a vote of 329 to 76, and the Senate by a vote of 69 to 4. As it goes to conference for adjustment of differences between the House and the Senate, it provides for raising more revenue than any single tax bill in the history of the United States. It is estimated that it will raise approximately $2,404,520,000, as follows:

Income taxes	$842,200,000
War profits	1,060,000,000
Liquor	218,000,000
Tobacco	56,000,000
Transportation facilities, public utilities, etc.	146,700,000
Excise taxes, autos, etc.	41,000,000
Admissions, etc.	18,000,000
Stamp taxes, etc.	22,000,000
Virgin Islands products	20,000
Total	2,404,520,000

It will be seen that nearly all of this revenue is gathered from wealth. Incomes and war profits contribute $1,902,200,000, and adding to this liquor, tobacco, transportation facilities, public utilities, and so forth, as well as excise taxes, including autos, and so forth, the entire amounts aggregate $2,364,500,000, leaving only $40,020,000 to be collected from other sources. Of this last sum only $22,000,000, or less than 1 per cent, is collected from stamp taxes, much of which are paid by the wealthy.

This analysis of the bill clearly shows that approximately all the taxes collected under this war-revenue bill are paid by wealth. This is as it should be and the above amount of $2,404,520,000, estimated to be raised in the present bill, is in addition to $1,300,000,000 raised under existing law, making a total under existing and pending legislation of $3,704,520,000.

COMPENSATIONS.

While we deeply deplore the necessity for this war and look with horror on the slaughter of so many men, the devastation of cities and towns, and the wholesale burning and destruction of property, there are some compensations to the gallant, patriotic men of our country, who are courageous enough to come to its defense and who return with an honorable discharge. It was an inspiring sight to witness the President, Members of Congress, and Senators join in the parade down Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington on September 4 in honor of the boys drafted into the military service of the United States. We honor ourselves when we do them honor. While this was a scene long to be remembered, imagine, if you will, the enthusiasm with which they will be received in every city and town throughout this Nation upon their return.

The discipline in the Army will rescue many a young man from a life of ease and indifference. It will appeal to his manhood and awaken patriotic impulses in his breast. The opportunity for service will be embraced by countless thousands, and the new responsibility will develop and strengthen them as well as open up entirely new conceptions of life and duty.

We have no better illustrations than Grant and Sherman. Both graduated from West Point. Both served in the Regular Army and left it. Both had gone into other callings and had not succeeded. Grant had done a little of everything—farm work, the tanner's trade, clerking in a store, and finally hauled wood for a living. When the war broke out he enlisted and was given a minor position. The discipline in the Army and the responsibility placed upon him developed him, and the remainder of his military career is familiar history. He was elected the first President of the United States after the close of the Civil War and was the youngest man to attain that honor.

Sherman tried every kind of a business pursuit, including banking and the commission business. He afterwards opened a law office, but without success; and when the war came on he was teaching school in Louisiana. After the close of the Civil War, and Grant became President, Sherman was appointed to command the entire Army of the Republic.

Innumerable examples might be cited to show where the discipline of the Army makes one feel more keenly his responsibility and assists in bringing out and developing the very best there is in men. The people of this Nation will not forget its defenders, but for all time to come will remember with gratitude the men who risked all in defense of our Government. The presidential chair, the Halls of Congress—the Senate and House of Representatives—and thousands of positions of honor and trust, both National and State, will be filled by the men who return from this war.

Washington's service as commander in chief of the Continental Army made him President of the United States. Service in the War of 1812 and Indian Wars materially assisted Jackson in his political ambitions and finally landed him in the White House. Zachary Taylor was a war President, as was the elder Harrison and others. The Spanish-American War rescued Theodore Roosevelt from the position of Assistant Secretary of the Navy and made him governor of the great State of New York, from which position he was drafted as a candidate for Vice President and afterwards elected President of the United States. To-day he is one of the foremost citizens of this Republic and known throughout the world.

NATION'S DEBT OF GRATITUDE TO FRANCE.

I would not neglect to remind the soldiers who go to France that they will have the satisfaction of knowing we are repaying a Nation's gratitude to France for men and money furnished to help us gain our independence in the darkest hours of the Revolution—Lafayette and Rochambeau and De Grasse with a fleet from the French Navy and funds loaned the struggling colonies when our soldiers were starving. The loans included 53,000,000 livres, equal in purchasing power to about that many dollars. The interest on these loans was not collected, but deferred until after the treaty of peace was made. Altogether France furnished us 47,989 men and 99 vessels of war and transports. As variously estimated, she spent between three hundred and fifty and seven hundred and thirty-two million dollars on her own army and navy, which money was never repaid.

At the siege of Yorktown the colonies had 5,500 regulars and 3,500 militia, while the French troops commanded by Rochambeau numbered 7,000 and the French Navy numbered 36 ships under the command of De Grasse. The brave, daring, and gallant Lafayette was with Washington and commanded colonial troops. He risked his life and gave his time and his fortune to the colonies struggling for liberty and self-government. He shared Washington's confidence, admiration, and affection as no other foreigner ever did. When this assistance came, Washington was in the direst straits, pleading for men and money with which to purchase supplies for his naked and half-starved men.

Without the help of France our independence would have been postponed, if not defeated. When Lafayette visited America in 1824 he was received with open arms, and his reception was one ovation after another in the different cities, and in a small way Congress showed our appreciation of the invaluable services he rendered.

Let our soldiers remember that in defending ourselves we are repaying a debt of gratitude to France after a lapse of 140 years.

MAGNITUDE OF THIS WAR.

As to when the war will end and when peace will be restored, no one can foretell with certainty. Let us pray that when peace does come it will be permanent and the onward march of civilization will never be checked by another disastrous war. This question involves the consideration of many things—the number of countries at war, their population, their military strength, their resources, the effectiveness of their Governments, and their ability to marshal their forces and cooperate with the other nations. Much depends upon supplies—food, clothing, and munitions—we are able to keep at the front and our ability to prevent, in so far as we can, from going to the enemy.

AREA AND POPULATION OF NATIONS ENGAGED.

This war is the greatest tragedy of all time. Its full magnitude is incomprehensible. Everything is done upon such a gigantic scale. It was never equaled in the past and can not be surpassed in the future. Four-fifths of the nations of the earth, from the standpoint of population, military strength, wealth, and resources, are engaged in this inhuman slaughter. Twenty nations—Serbia, Montenegro, Russia, France, Belgium, Great Britain, Japan, Portugal, Italy, Arabia, San Marino, Roumania, Monaco, United States, Brazil, Cuba, Panama, Bolivia, Greece, and China—are on the side of the United States and our allies; and four nations—Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria, Turkey, and Germany—are the central powers.

Every neutral nation accepts our interpretation of our rights under international law, and all have vigorously protested to Germany against the violation of their rights. A number of neutral nations have severed diplomatic relations with Germany that have not as yet entered the war. Many of the smaller ones, appreciating the fate of Belgium, hesitate and can not afford to openly assert their rights.

The population of the allied countries is estimated at about 1,000,000,000, and the population of the central powers is estimated at about 140,000,000. The nations most actively engaged with the United States and the allies are Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, Belgium, Greece, and the Balkan States, including Serbia, Roumania, and Montenegro. They have a combined population of 438,518,910.

Great Britain has an area of 121,633 square miles and a population of 45,370,530, and, of course, a large colonial area and strength.

France has an area of 207,054 square miles and a population of 39,602,258.

Belgium has an area of 11,373 square miles and a population of 7,423,784.

Russia occupies about one-seventh of the entire land area of the globe, or 8,417,118 square miles, and has a population of 182,182,600.

Serbia has an area of 33,891 square miles and a population of 4,547,992.

Roumania has an area of 53,489 square miles and a population of 7,508,009.

Montenegro has an area of 5,603 square miles and a population of 516,000.

Greece has an area of 41,933 square miles and a population of 4,821,300.

Italy has an area of 110,632 square miles and a population of 36,546,437.

The United States, including Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, has an area of 3,574,658 square miles and a population of approximately 110,000,000.

The total population of these countries, the more active allies, aggregates 438,518,910.

Of the central powers, Germany has an area of 208,780 square miles—less than the State of Texas and about three times as large as the State of Oklahoma. It has a population of 67,812,000.

Austria-Hungary has a combined area of 441,593 square miles and a combined population of 49,832,786.

Bulgaria has an area of 33,647 square miles and a population of 4,752,997.

Turkey in Europe has an area of 10,882 square miles and a population of 1,891,000. The far greater part of the area and population of Turkey is in Asia, the total population being given as 21,273,900.

The total population of the central powers is 143,671,683.

COMPARISON OF MEN UNDER ARMS.

It is estimated that there were 13,000,000 men under arms the first year of the war, and perhaps 20,000,000 men would be a conservative estimate to-day. The first year of the war 2,000,000 men were killed, 4,000,000 wounded, and 2,000,000 taken prisoners. Nothing ever equaled it in former wars.

In our Civil War the men under arms at one time did not exceed 1,300,000. The total killed in battle or died of wounds on the northern side was 110,000 and on the southern side 80,000.

During the Napoleonic wars the largest army assembled at one time was about 500,000.

The greatest number of men engaged in any battle previous to that time was at Leipzig, in 1813, when the armies on both sides aggregated about 440,000. In the war of Prussia against Austria, in 1866, at the Battle of Sadowa, the armies numbered 436,000. In the Franco-Prussian War, in 1870, at the Battle of Gravelotte, in both armies, 300,000 men were engaged. In the Russo-Japanese War, at the Battle of Mukden, in 1905, 700,000 men were engaged on both sides. In the battle front in the present war at Verdun and at the Marne the staggering total of 2,500,000 men were estimated as facing each other in that great struggle.

No war in history has equaled this one in loss of life and wounded. It is estimated that losses from both wounds and disease in the Civil War were about 800,000; in the War of 1812 the loss by death was about 50,000; in the Mexican War the loss from wounds and disease was about 50,000; the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 caused a loss of 225,000; and the Napoleonic wars caused a loss of about 2,000,000. One of the greatest percentages of loss was at Waterloo, where 170,000 men were engaged and a loss of 42,000 men sustained.

This war is also distinguished by its fierceness, the new and barbarous methods used, including poisonous gases, the use of the submarine, and the general use of aeroplanes.

COST AS COMPARED WITH OTHER WARS.

In point of cost, the present war is more than double the combined cost of all wars for 125 years, or from the beginning of the French Revolution. The estimated cost of the Russo-Japanese war, 1904-5, was $2,500,000,000; the Franco-Prussian war, 1870-71, $3,000,000,000; the Napoleonic wars, 1793-1815, $6,250,000,000; the Civil War, 1861-65, $8,000,000,000; the War of 1812, $300,000,000; the Mexican War, $180,000,000; and the Spanish-American War of 1898, $800,000,000.

It is estimated that all the wars for the past 125 years prior to this one cost about $33,000,000,000. The best figures obtainable estimate that all the belligerents have appropriated and expended in this war so far $100,000,000,000, a sum no mind can comprehend.

FINANCIAL STRENGTH AND WAR DEBT.

(A) ALLIES.

Let us consider the financial strength and war debt of the principal nations engaged in this great struggle.

The estimated national wealth of Great Britain is $85,000,000,000; its war debt is $18,400,000,000.

The estimated national wealth of France is $62,400,000,000; its war debt is $18,380,000,000.

The estimated national wealth of Russia is $40,000,000,000; its war debt is $11,570,000,000.

The estimated national wealth of Italy is $20,000,000,000; its war debt is $4,700,000,000.

The estimated national wealth of the United States is $250,000,000,000; its war debt is $5,511,945,460.

The combined financial strength of these five allies (Exhibit 7), $554,400,000,000.

(B) CENTRAL POWERS.

The estimated national wealth of Germany is $80,000,000,000; its war debt is $16,746,000,000.

The estimated national wealth of Austria-Hungary is $25,000,000,000; its war debt is $10,000,000,000.

The combined financial strength of these two nations, $105,000,000,000.

You will see that approximately 25 per cent of the national wealth of these countries has been expended in this war. If the cost was equally borne by rich and poor alike it would require approximately 50 per cent of their earnings to pay the expenses.

AMOUNT OF GOLD.

A recent statement showed that the United States had more gold in its banks than five other great nations combined. The United States had in gold $3,088,904,808. The five other countries are as follows:

France	$1,015,325,000
Russia	779,400,000
England	422,715,000
Italy	183,235,000

Germany	2,400,675,000
	629,500,000

Total for the five countries..... 3,030,175,000

The combined area of the central powers in Europe is 694,902 square miles. This does not include Turkey in Asia.

ALLIES WILL WIN.

I have invited attention to these totals to emphasize the fact that although Germany is well disciplined, its army well trained, possessed of a great military machine, and with thousands in civil life subjected to the severest economic measures in the conservation of food and supplies, yet the central powers are hemmed in on all sides, have only approximately 140,000,000 population from which to recruit their present armies and draw on for future armies, and an embargo against the shipping of food supplies to neutral friendly nations has been placed by the United States, so that the central powers have only their own area from which to get supplies. Germany is unable to use her navy and shipping facilities.

There can be but one ending to this war, and that is a triumphant victory for the allies. The greater the preparation and the better the concert of action the sooner that victory will be celebrated.

Against these combined resources Germany, which must feed, finance, officer, and compose all differences among the central powers, can not hold out indefinitely. Germany has sacrificed millions of men and must fill their places in the ranks from men employed in productive capacities. Her foreign commerce is in a large measure destroyed, and most of her factories have been transformed into munition plants. Difficulty in securing the necessary ingredients for making thousands of tons of munitions daily must increase. The food shortage is acute, and taxes must be heavy. The financial burden will soon become unbearable. Internal conditions in Germany are not known because of a censored press and our interrupted communication. Economic conditions will play an important part in bringing this war to an end.

Nor can Germany depend upon the foreign territory, notably in Russia, in part temporarily occupied, for food supplies. Retreating armies usually consume or destroy all supplies of value, leaving but little behind, and much of the territory occupied was not taken at seasonable times for planting crops. The uncertainty of maturing crops during their occupancy makes them less dependable. Of course, we are keenly disappointed over the present disinclination or inability of the Russian armies to defend their country against invasion and occupancy. We welcomed the establishment of a new republic. It must be remembered that there are many difficulties to be met in changing the form of government of any country, and it is hoped that the Russian people may yet be able to compose their differences, organize a representative government, and restore confidence, and that her armies under efficient leadership will regain her lost territory and join with her allies in crushing the most insolent and unscrupulous autocracy that has ever menaced the peace of the world.

The present autocratic rulers of Germany have made such a record in violating treaties at their convenience, regarding them as "scraps of paper," disregarding international law, invading neutral countries, infesting friendly countries with paid spies, and intriguing through their representatives to embroil one friendly nation against another as to justify the President and the representatives of all other nations, who hold treaties as most sacred obligations, in demanding that any peace treaty which may be negotiated shall be made with representatives who are responsible to the German people, as an insurance against its violation.

UNITY OF ACTION URGED.

The record shows, and we all appreciate, that we are in the greatest war known to history. No one can even hazard a guess as to when it will end. We can not estimate what it will cost in blood and treasure. We have entered this war, and the past is behind us. Our face is to the enemy. The flag of our country, which has never known defeat, will wave in victory over a triumphant army in the end. The President of the United States has a great responsibility to bear during these trying times, and every man connected with the various Departments of the Government is each helping him share this burden. It has been greatly lightened by the loyal and enthusiastic support of 110,000,000 brave, loyal, patriotic citizens of this Republic. They love their flag. They love their country and will defend its honor. They appreciate the liberty secured for them in the trying days of 1776, and they now know that they are battling against the greatest autocracy the world has ever known. The people of this country without regard to party are valiantly supporting their Commander in Chief. It is inspiring, indeed, to read in almost every daily paper about our two living ex-Presidents zealously, ardently, and patriotically supporting the President in this national emergency. The same is true of W. J. Bryan, Charles E. Hughes, and Alton B. Parker, all presidential candidates of their respective parties.

All the legislation enacted did not, perhaps, meet with their complete approval in every detail, but their country having spoken, they have felt it was their patriotic duty to sustain the President. For myself, in common with others, I entertained differences of opinion on some of the details of the various bills introduced, considered, and enacted in this House; but when Congress has spoken, and when the existence of my country is imperiled and the liberty of the people involved, I shall sink all personal differences and withhold all individual criticisms, and loyally, enthusiastically, and patriotically support the President of the United States. In these trying times, I am impatient with demagoguery. There are but two sides—you are either for or against this Government. There is no middle ground.

I am so impressed with the necessity for united action and loyal cooperation of all that I want to emphasize my impatience, condemnation and protest against any person in public or private life who utters a single word or writes a single line "grazing on the edge of treason" in this hour of our Nation's peril, or commits a single act which will make more difficult in the slightest degree the carrying on of this war to a successful conclusion.

The people of this country are going to be called upon to make the very greatest sacrifices. They will have to bear an immense financial burden. They have already subscribed generously to liberty-loan bonds, and are doing their duty in supporting the Red Cross. They will make every other personal and financial sacrifice. Above and beyond all they will send the youth of the land, the hope of the country, into the Army to hazard their lives in defense of their country and their Nation's honor. Under these circumstances I am not going to search for petty things to criticize, but I am going to steadfastly keep before me our one great and overwhelming purpose, which is to do what I can in the enactment of such legislation as will enable the President of the United States to use all the resources of this Government in winning a triumphant victory at the earliest possible date, when we shall witness the dawn of an enduring peace. Then justice and not might will rule, and the rights of all nations, great and small, will be respected.

THE FLAG.

Our flag, which represents the power of our Government, stands for liberty for which our illustrious ancestors fought, for justice, equality, and righteousness—the principles upon which our Government was founded—for the maintenance of the honor of our Nation and for the protection of the sacred lives of our citizens wherever it floats.

The red stripes symbolize the blood shed in the birth of a free country, the white stripes symbolize the purity of our motives, the blue field for our fidelity to our ideals, and the stars stand for the fixed and united purpose of our country, that this Nation, dedicated to the principles of liberty, equality, and justice, shall endure forever.

Let us honor it and daily rededicate our lives to defend it, wherever it is unfurled.

Your flag and my flag, and how it flies to-day,
In your land and my land and half a world away;
Rose red and blood red its stripes forever gleam,
Snow white and soul white, the good forefathers' dream;
Sky blue and true blue with stars that gleam aright;
The gloried guldon of the day, a shelter through the night.
Your flag and my flag, and, oh, how much it holds!
Your land and my land, secure within its folds;
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight.
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed, the red and blue and white;
The one flag—the great flag—the flag for me and you,
Glories all else beside, the red and white and blue.

[Applause.]

APPENDIX.

EXHIBIT 1.

KILLING OF ARCHDUKE FERDINAND.

The Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the crown prince, and his morganatic wife, visited Sarajevo in Bosnia and were killed by a Serbian student named Gavrilo Princip on June 28, 1914. Princip was immediately arrested and later tried. His trial lasted from October 11 to October 28, 1914, when he was convicted, but because of his extreme youth, he was sentenced to 20 years imprisonment.

EXHIBIT 2.

THE POTSDAM CONSPIRACY.

Herr Hasse, a member of the German Reichstag, in a recent speech in the Reichstag, said:

"We do not forget the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia, the Austrian preparations against Russia, the conference in Berlin on July 5, 1914, and the activity of Tirpitz and Falkenhayn in those days.

"I have it on authority which it is difficult, if not impossible, to doubt that the meeting referred to was a meeting which was held at Potsdam on the date named. There were present the Kaiser, Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, Admiral von Tirpitz, Gen. von Falkenhayn, Herr von Stumm, the Archduke Frederick, Count Berchtold, Count Tisza, and Gen. Conrad von Hotzendorf. It appears that Herr von Jagow and Count Moltke were not present."

EXHIBIT 3.

VIOLATION OF TREATY AND INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Germany in torpedoing our ships violated—

First. A solemn treaty with the United States:

"The twelfth article of the treaty concluded between the parties in 1785 and the articles from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth, inclusive, of that which was concluded at Berlin in 1799 . . . are hereby revived with the same force and virtue as if they made part of the context of the present treaty.

"ART. 12. If one of the contracting parties should be engaged in war with any other power, the free intercourse and commerce of the subjects or citizens of the party remaining neutral with the belligerent powers shall not be interrupted. On the contrary, in that case, as in full peace, the vessels of the neutral party may navigate freely to and from the ports and on the coasts of the belligerent parties, free vessels making free goods, in so much as all things may be adjudged free which shall be on board any vessel belonging to the neutral party, although such things belong to an enemy of the other; and the same freedom shall be extended to persons who shall be on board a free vessel, although they should be enemies to the other party, unless they be soldiers in actual service of such enemy."

Second. International law as defined by all authorities and as interpreted by Germany herself before the war.

Before the outbreak of the war the following were the standing orders in the German Navy for dealing with even enemy merchant vessels, and, if that was the case, how much more consideration should be given to neutrals. The new German orders are a brazen contradiction of their own previous precepts.

General orders of German Admiralty staff, Berlin, June 22, 1914. (Note date.)

"If an armed enemy merchant vessel offers armed resistance, . . . such resistance is to be overcome with all means available. . . . The crew are to be taken prisoners of war. The passengers are to be left to go free unless it appears that they participated in the resistance." (German Prize Code, p. 75, par. 116.)

"Before proceeding to the destruction of the [neutral] vessel [which has been seized for proper reason], the safety of all persons on board and, so far as possible, their effects, is to be provided for . . . ." (German Prize Code, p. 68.)

Dr. Wehberg (great German authority on international law, quoted in American Journal of International Law, October, 1916, p. 871):

"The enemy merchant ship has the right of defense against enemy attack, and this right it can exercise against 'visit' (i. e., being stopped and investigated), for this indeed is the first act of capture. The attacked merchant ship can indeed itself seize the overpowered warship as a prize."

And still again—

In Oxford, 1913, at a meeting of the Institute of International Law, at which the representatives of Germany, as well as of all other great nations, were present, it was decided as a firm principle that private vessels may not commit acts of hostility against the enemy, and that they may defend themselves against the attack of an enemy vessel. (American Journal of International Law, vol. 10, 1916, p. 868.)

Right of American citizens to protection in their doings abroad and on the seas no less than at home. Decided by Supreme Court of United States. (Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall., 36.)

"Every citizen . . . may demand the care and protection of the United States when on the high seas or within the jurisdiction of a foreign government."

See Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law, third edition, page 273 (standard authority).

Obviously, a government which can not or will not protect its citizens against a policy of lawless murder is unworthy of respect abroad or obedience at home. The protection of the lives of the innocent and law abiding is clearly the very first duty of a civilized State.

Third. Germany violated her promise to us, as shown by her diplomatic correspondence.

On February 16, 1915, in a note to this Government, Germany said: "It is very far, indeed, from the intention of the German Government . . . ever to destroy neutral lives and neutral property."

And further said: "The commanders of the German submarines have been instructed, as was already stated in the note of the first instant, to abstain from violence to American ships when they are recognizable as such."

On July 8, 1915, in a note to the American ambassador, the German Government said:

"The Imperial Government, therefore, repeats the assurances that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping and the lives of American citizens on neutral vessels shall not be placed in jeopardy."

"In order to exclude any unforeseen dangers in American passenger steamers . . . the German submarines will be instructed to permit the free and safe passage of such passenger steamers when made recognizable by special markings and notified a reasonable time in advance."

On December 1, 1915, in another note, the German Government promised:

"Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance."

On January 7, 1916, our Government was again notified, in a diplomatic note, as follows:

"First. German submarines in the Mediterranean had from the beginning orders to conduct cruiser warfare against enemy merchant vessels only in accordance with the general principle of international law, and in particular the measures of reprisal as applied to the war zone around the British Isles were to be excluded.

"Second. German submarines are therefore permitted to destroy enemy merchant vessels in the Mediterranean—that is, passenger as well as freight ships—as far as they do not try to escape or offer resistance, only after passengers and crews have been accorded safety."

On February 16, 1916, the following is contained in another note:

"Germany has . . . limited her submarine warfare because of her long-standing friendship with the United States and because by the sinking of the Lusitania, which caused the death of citizens of the United States, the German retaliation affected neutrals, which was not the intention, as retaliation should be confined to enemy subjects."

On April 8, 1916, the American Government, in a note to Germany, stated:

"If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should not immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight-carrying vessels the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether."

To which the German Government replied on May 4, 1916, that new orders had been issued by the German Government "in accordance with the general principles of visit and search and the destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law," and the communication contained the further promise that the lives of citizens of the United States would not be taken and no American ships destroyed without warning and without an opportunity for the passengers and crew to leave the ship.

On January 31, 1917, the German Government issued and gave notice of the following order:

"Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean, all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc. All ships met within that zone will be sunk."

EXHIBIT 4.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN THE KAISER AND CZAR
NICHOLAS IN 1904-1907.
"WILLY" AND "NICKY."

In further corroboration of the ambition of the German Kaiser to destroy democracy and rule the world, attention is invited to the interchange of telegrams recently given to the press, wherein the Kaiser signed his name "Willy" and the Czar as "Nicky."

On October 19, 1904, the first telegram sent from the Kaiser to the Czar stated that the former Japanese minister at Petersburg, Kurino, is in Paris and seems authorized to get France and England to mediate in favor of Japan for peace, and that strings of all these doings lead across the channel.

On October 23, 1904, four days later, the Czar thanked the Kaiser for information about Japan's activity in some European countries, but could not make out whether strings of these doings lead across channel or perhaps Atlantic.

On October 27, 1904, the Kaiser telegraphed the Czar that it was not impossible that Japanese and British Governments might launch joint protest against Germany coaling Russian ships, resulting in immobility of Czar's fleet, which new danger would have to be faced in community by Germany and Russia, with France forced in, forming a combination of three stronger continental powers, to attack whom Anglo-Japanese would think twice before acting.

On October 29, 1904, the Czar sent the Kaiser a telegram, in which he said that he had no words to express his indignation with England's conduct in coaling his ships by Germany, and agrees that the only way to stop such insolence would be to form an alliance between Germany and Russia, when France would be bound to join them. He suggested that the Kaiser lay down and frame outlines of such a treaty.

On November 23, 1904, the Czar telegraphed the Kaiser acknowledging receipt of telegraphed draft of the treaty and declining to sign it unless France was first notified, as he thought it would provoke a joint attack of France and England on Germany, but as long as it remained unsigned a small modification could be made in its text.

On November 24, 1904, the Kaiser telegraphed the Czar that serious news reached him from Port Said and Cape Town, and no time should be lost in signing the treaty, and no third power should know anything about intentions before Germany and Russia concluded convention about coaling.

On November 28, 1904, the Czar replied that both their governments must now come to permanent understanding and that he wished speedy settlement of this question.

On July 29, 1905, the Kaiser telegraphed the Czar that British Channel fleet did not pay calls at German ports on cruise to Baltic and thought England was trying to frighten him.

The Czar replied that he had heard of the cruise and stated the Kaiser's trip to Copenhagen came in good time.

On August 2, 1905, the Kaiser telegraphed the Czar that his trip to Copenhagen passed off well, but that much mistrust and misapprehension was engendered by it, especially in England, and that he could not talk about the matter with the King at Copenhagen, as he was intimidated. In case of war, the Kaiser said the Danes would be helpless to uphold their neutrality and that Russia and Germany would immediately take steps to safeguard their interests by laying hand on Denmark and occupying it during the war.

On September 29, 1905, the Kaiser again took up the separate treaty question, stating that it did not conflict with the Franco-Russian alliance, providing the latter was not aimed at Germany. He stated that France had left Russia in the lurch and that no one could blame the Czar for signing such a treaty, and that the treaty between Germany and Russia is a very good base to build upon.

EXHIBIT 5.

WAR POWERS OF CONGRESS.

The war powers of Congress are conferred by the Constitution in Article I, section 8, as follows:

Par. 11. To declare war.

Par. 12. To raise and support armies.

Par. 13. To provide and maintain a Navy.

Par. 18. To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers.

These provisions have been construed by the Supreme Court of the United States in numerous cases, among them in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., U. S., 2; 12 Wall., U. S., 457; 13 Wall., U. S., 408).

DECISION OF JUDGE EMORY SPEER.

On the question of the selective draft, Judge Emory Speer, United States judge for the southern district of Georgia, sustained the constitutionality of the selective-service law in the case of Ex parte Albert Jones and John Story, in which he defines the plenary power given Congress by paragraph 11, Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, in the following opinion:

"Arthur Jones and John Story, imprisoned in the Richmond County jail under commitment for unlawfully failing to register for military duty as required by the act of Congress of May 18, 1917, known popularly as the selective-draft law, have made application for writs or habeas corpus. They allege that their imprisonment is unlawful. They charge that the enactment, made to raise a national army, is violative of the Constitution of the United States. It is insisted that the authority exercised by the United States under this legislation is void because the act contravenes the thirteenth amendment. This provides that 'neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the parties shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.'

"To agree to this contention we must conclude that a soldier is a slave. Nothing could be more abhorrent to the truth, nothing more degrading to that indispensable and gallant body of citizens trained in arms, to whose manhood, skill, and courage is and must be committed the task of maintaining the very existence of the Nation and all that its people hold dear. The Grand Army of the Republic, the Confederate Veterans, and the Sons of Veterans are not maintained to preserve the traditions of slavery. Nations do not pension slaves to commemorate their valor. They do not 'give in charge their names to the sweet lyre,' nor does—

"Sculpture in her turn
Give bond in stone and ever-during brass
To guard and to immortalize the trust."

CAN'T ESCAPE SERVICE ABROAD.

"The sole additional ground of the petition is that by the common law it was the right of petitioners to 'remain within the realm,' and that this right should now be held to relieve them from military service beyond the borders of the United States. The reply is that the common law—that is, the immemorial English law—can not prevail as to the United States or its people against the explicit provisions of an act of Congress. Nor has a court of the United States power to declare an act of Congress invalid because it is inimical to the common law. The touchstone for such judicial power is the Constitution and nothing else.

"It remains to be determined whether the Constitution has conferred authority on Congress to enact this law. Clause 11 of Article I, section 8 of the Constitution, empowers Congress 'to raise and support armies.' This power is plenary. It is not restricted in any manner. Congress may summon to its Army thus authorized every citizen of the United States. Since it may summon all, it may summon any. Said the Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Tarble (13 Wallace, 408): 'Among the powers assigned to the National Government is the power to raise and support armies. Its control over the subject is plenary and exclusive. It can determine without question from any State authority how the Army shall be raised, whether by voluntary enlistments or forced draft, the age at which the soldiers shall be received and the period for which they shall be taken, the compensation they shall be allowed, and the service to which they shall be assigned.'

"It is urged that by this legislation Congress has taken over and in this way conscripted the National Guard. This, it is said, is the State militia. It is contended under clause 14 of the article and section above quoted that such militia can be used only to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. Since those petitioners are not members of the National Guard, in no event could their rights in this way be affected. But the National Army is not the militia. An army is a body of men whose business is war. (Burroughs v. Peyton, 16 Gratt., Virginia, 475.) The militia is a 'body of men composed of citizens occupied temporarily in the pursuits of civil life.' (Idem.)

"As we have seen, Congress in the exercise of the power to raise armies may summon to the colors every citizen. It follows that the States, even if they so desire, can not defeat this power by enlisting such citizens in the State troops or National Guard. Was this possible, it would be also possible for the States to prevent altogether the raising of armies by Congress.

RIGHT TO ANTICIPATE INVASION.

"There remains to be considered the contention that Congress can not employ the National Army to be created by virtue of this legislation in foreign lands or beyond the seas. If this is true, then, indeed, is our country impotent. Then must its people, indeed, suffer in their own homes, in their cities, and on their farms all the horrors of invasive war. Its military leaders must ignore the settled principle of their science, that the best defensive is the most vigorous offensive. The keen swords of its sons instead of flashing over the guard of the enemy and piercing his vitals, must be held immovable, as if on an anvil, to be shattered by the reiterated blows of his hammer. Deprived of our aid in the field, successive defeats will visit and crush our allies. Their lands conquered, their navies taken, we must then in turn, solitary and alone, meet on our own soil the impact of victorious and barbarous legions whose laws do not forbid their service abroad but which inspire their fierce and veteran armies to deeds of conquest in every clime.

"Was this contention maintainable, the misguided men who for their personal ease advance it might all too late discover their fatal error. They would discover it in the flaming homesteads, in the devastated fields, in murdered brethren, in outraged wives and daughters, in their lands, their factories, their merchandise, their stock, their all, coolly appropriated by the conqueror as his own; their institutions destroyed; homeless, landless, and beggars to spend whatever interval of degraded life remains to them in abject slavery to the conqueror.

"But our organic law does not so shackle the gigantic energies of the great Republic. After the enumeration of the powers of Congress, among them, as we have seen, 'the power to raise and support armies.' In clause 17 of Article I, section 8, it provides the power to 'make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested in this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.' Here is the greatest reservoir of power to save the national existence.

"It is said that there is no express power to send armies beyond the sea. True; but there is no express power to enact the criminal laws of the United States, none to convey the public domain, to build a trans-continental railroad, nor to construct the Isthmian Canal, nor to create the Interstate Commerce Commission, nor to declare the Monroe doctrine, nor to make the Louisiana Purchase, nor to buy Alaska, nor to take over Porto Rico and the Philippines. This has all been done under the great power to promote the general welfare, just as the selective army will be created under the law here assailed, 'to provide for the common defense,' and beyond and above all is the inherent power of every nation, however organized, to utilize its every man and its every energy to defend its liberty and to defeat the migration to its soil of mighty nations of ferocious warriors, whose barbarous inhumanity for three years has surpassed all others since the death of Attila, the scourge of God. The writs are denied."

EXHIBIT 6.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF WASHINGTON AND JEFFERSON.

Washington repeatedly urged the universal military liability system. On October 17, 1777, he wrote Thomas Wharton, president of Pennsylvania, as follows:

"There is another matter which I beg leave to recommend to the serious consideration of the legislature of your State: That is the adopting of some mode of completing and keeping up the quota of your continental regiments. Upon an average, your battalions have never been above one-third full, and now many of them are far below even that. From the extravagant prices given to substitutes in the militia in the different States, it has become impossible to recruit more upon the bounty allowed by Congress. The New England States and Virginia have begun to adopt the mode of drafting, and I am informed they have succeeded very well. I am convinced that this will be found the only method of raising continental troops, and if the measure were to become general throughout the States it would not be deemed a hardship. I mention this matter to you at this time in the hope that you will as soon as possible fall upon this or some other mode to recruit your regiments in the course of this fall and winter, and as it is more than probable that our opposition will not end with this campaign we ought to endeavor to have a respectable army in the field in the spring before the enemy can receive further reinforcements from Europe."

In a letter dated November 18, 1779, to the President of Congress, he said:

"In the more early stages of the contest when men might have enlisted for the war, no man, as my whole conduct and the uniform tenor of my letters will evince, was ever more opposed to short enlistments than I was, and while there remained a prospect of obtaining recruits upon a permanent footing in the first instance, as far as duty and a regard to my station would permit, I urged my sentiments in favor of it. But the prospect of keeping up an army by voluntary enlistments being changed, or at least standing on too precarious and uncertain a footing to depend on for the exigency of our affairs, I took the liberty in February, 1778, in a particular manner to lay before the Committee of Arrangement, then with the Army at Valley Forge, a plan for an annual draft as the surest and most certain, if not the only means left us, of maintaining the Army on a proper and respectable ground. And more and more confirmed in propriety of this opinion by the intervention of a variety of circumstances unnecessary to detail, I again took the freedom of urging the plan to the committee of conference in January last, and having reviewed it in every point of light and found it right, or at least the best that has occurred to me, I hope I shall be excused by Congress for offering it to them, and in time for carrying it into execution for the next year, if they should conceive it necessary for the States to complete their quotas of troops."

Again, on May 25, 1780, Washington wrote to Philip Schuyler, John Mathews, and Nathaniel Peabody, a committee from Congress, as follows:

"Unless the principal part of the force be composed of men regularly organized, and on the continuance of whose services we can rely, nothing decisive can be attempted. * * * The mode by draft is, I am persuaded, the only efficacious one to obtain men."

On March 12, 1782, he wrote James McHenry from Philadelphia:

"There is no other effectual method to get men suddenly but that of classing the people and compelling each class to furnish a recruit."

On December 3, 1805, Thomas Jefferson, in his annual message to Congress, recommended universal liability, and in explaining this message in a letter on February 28, 1810, to Gen. Kosciuszko, he said:

"Two measures have not been adopted which I pressed on Congress repeatedly at their meetings. The one to settle the whole ungranted territory of Orleans by donations of land to able-bodied young men, to be engaged and carried there at the public expense, who would constitute a force always ready on the spot to defend New Orleans. The other was to class the militia according to the years of their birth, and make all those from 20 to 25 liable to be trained and called into service at a moment's warning. This would have given us a force of 300,000 young men, prepared by proper training, for service in any part of the United States, while those who had passed through that period would remain at home, liable to be used in their own or adjacent States. These two measures would have completed what I deemed necessary for the entire security of our country. * * * But these measures will, I hope, be completed by my successor, who, to the purest principles of republican patriotism, adds a wisdom and foresight second to no man on earth."

EXHIBIT 7.

WAR DEBT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Interest-bearing indebtedness, Feb. 28, 1917.....	$973,000,000
Liberty loan issued under act of Apr. 24, 1917.....	2,000,000,000
Bonds authorized, not yet issued, required to be issued under this bill.....	3,538,945,460
Additional bonds authorized under this bill.....	4,000,000,000
War-saving certificates authorized under this bill.....	2,000,000,000
Total indebtedness, if the above bonds are issued.....	12,511,945,460
Bonds authorized under the act of Apr. 24, 1917, and this bill to extend credits to foreign Governments, to be secured by foreign obligations.....	7,000,000,000
Should all of above bonds and war-saving certificates be issued the total interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States, exclusive of the $7,000,000,000 proposed to be loaned to foreign Governments, will be.....	5,511,945,460

EXHIBIT 8.

SHIPS DAMAGED OR DESTROYED SHOWING LOSS OF AMERICAN LIVES.

Following is an approximately correct list of all American ships damaged or destroyed by German submarines and ships sunk with loss of American lives:

American ships damaged or destroyed by German submarines.

Name of vessel.	Date.	Particulars.
Gulflight.....	May 2, 1915	Torpedoed.
Nehrascan.....	May 25, 1915	Do.
Leelanaw.....	July 25, 1915	Torpedoed and shelled.
Seaconnet.....	June 16, 1916	Damaged by mine or torpedo.
Oswego.....	Aug. 14, 1916	Fired on 10 times by submarine.
Lanao (Philippine).....	Oct. 28, 1916	Sunk by submarine.
Columbian.....	Nov. 7, 1916	Do.
Colena.....	Nov. 26, 1916	Fired on.
St. Helen's.....	Dec. 10, 1916	Attacked by submarine.
Rebecca Palmer.....	Dec. 14, 1916	Fired on; slight damage.
Sacramento.....	Jan. 9, 1917	Fired on.
Housatonic.....	Feb. 3, 1917	Sunk.
Lyman M. Law.....	Feb. 13, 1917	Burned by submarine.
Vigilancia.....	Mar. 16, 1917	Torpedoed.
City of Memphis.....	Mar. 17, 1917	Sunk by gunfire.
Illinois.....	.....do.....	Torpedoed.
Aztec.....	Apr. 1, 1917	Do.

SHIPS SUNK WITH LOSS OF AMERICAN LIVES.

British ship Falaba, torpedoed March 28, 1915 (warned); 1 American lost.
 British ship Lusitania, torpedoed May 7, 1915 (no warning); 114 Americans lost.
 American ship Gulflight, torpedoed May 1, 1915 (no warning); 2 Americans lost.
 British ship Armenian, torpedoed June 28, 1915 (ordered to stop; tried to escape); 23 Americans lost.

British ship Iberian, sunk July 31, 1915 (tried to escape; stopped by shell fire); 3 Americans lost.

British ship Anglo-Californian, sunk July 4, 1915; 2 Americans lost.

British ship Hesperian, torpedoed September 4, 1915 (no warning); 1 American lost.

British ship Arabic, torpedoed August 19, 1915 (no warning); 3 Americans lost.

British ship Persia, believed to have been torpedoed; sunk December 30, 1915 (no warning); 2 Americans lost.

Italian ship Ancona, torpedoed November 9, 1915 (no warning); 7 Americans lost.

British ship Englishman, torpedoed March 27, 1916; 6 Americans lost (1 more whose nationality is doubtful).

British ship Sabota, sunk by gunfire October 20, 1916; 1 American lost.

British ship Marina, sunk by gunfire October 28, 1916 (warned); 8 Americans lost.

British ship Russian, torpedoed December 14, 1916 (no warning); 17 Americans lost.

British ship Eveston, sunk by shell fire February 5, 1917; 1 American lost (1 other whose nationality is doubtful).

British ship Vedamore, torpedoed February 7, 1917 (no warning); 10 American lost.

British ship Turino, torpedoed February 7, 1917 (no warning); 1 American (?) lost.

French ship Athos, torpedoed February 22, 1917 (no warning); 1 American lost.

British ship Laconia, torpedoed February 26, 1917 (no warning); 8 Americans lost.

Norwegian ship Sjostad, believed torpedoed March 2, 1917 (no warning); 1 American lost.

American ship Vigilancia, torpedoed March 16, 1917 (no warning); 5 Americans lost.

American ship Healdton, torpedoed March 21, 1917 (no warning); 7 Americans lost.

British ship Crispin, torpedoed March 29, 1917 (no warning); 68 Americans on board, 1 killed, 18 missing.

Total, 226 American lives lost.

On the Lusitania there were also 24 children born of foreign parents on American soil.

EXHIBIT 9.

AUSTRIAN DEMANDS OF SERBIA.

The gist of the Austrian demands, of which there were 10, was as follows:

"1. Serbia shall suppress all anti-Austrian publications.

"2. Dissolve the Narodna Odbrana and all similar societies, confiscate their funds, and prevent their re-forming.

"3. Remove from public education in Serbia all teachers and teaching that are anti-Austrian.

"4. Remove from military and civil service all officers and officials guilty of anti-Austrian propaganda: Austria will name the persons.

"5. Accept collaboration of Austrian representatives in the suppression of anti-Austrian propaganda.

"6. Take judicial proceedings against accessories to the plot against the archduke; Austrian delegates will take part in the investigations.

"7. Arrest Maj. Volja Tankositch and the individual named Milan Ciganovitch.

"8. Prevent and punish the illegal traffic in arms and explosives.

"9. Send to Austria explanations of all unjustifiable utterances of high Serbian officials at home and abroad.

"10. Notify without delay that the above measures are executed. Reply before 6 p. m. on Saturday, July 25."

The answers to the 10 points may be summarized thus:

"1. Yes; will suppress all anti-Austrian publications.

"2. Yes; will suppress the Narodna Odbrana and similar societies.

"3. Yes; will expel all anti-Austrian teachers and teaching as soon as evidence is given.

"4. Yes; will expel all anti-Austrian officers and officials, if Austria will furnish names and acts of guilty persons.

"5. Yes; will accept collaboration of Austrian representatives in these proceedings as far as consonant with principles of international law and criminal procedure and neighborly relations.

"6. Yes; will take the judicial proceedings; will also keep Austria informed; but can not admit the participation of Austrians in the judicial investigations, as this would be a violation of the constitution.

"7. Yes; have arrested Tankositch; ordered arrest of Ciganovitch.

"8. Yes; will suppress and punish traffic in arms and explosives.

"9. Yes; will deal with the said high officials, if Austria will supply evidence.

"10. Yes; will notify without delay.

"If this answer not satisfactory, Serbia will abide by decision of The Hague Tribunal."

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Chairman, the bill at present before the House to amend the act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war-risk insurance in the Treasury Department deserves the heartiest support of every Member. This bill, commonly known as the soldiers' insurance act, is one of the most constructive and enlightened pieces of legislation that has come before us in the course of the session. In a word, it provides that in this war we shall substitute modern methods of social insurance for the outgrown system of pensions. It was drawn under the supervision of the best talent the country possessed on the subject.

The act covers three chief provisions: First, family allowances; second, compensation for death or disability; and, third, insurance.

The sections covering family allowances are based on the principle that the Government should join with the soldier in supporting his family while he is away at war. Out of the soldier's pay a certain sum is reserved, not to exceed one-half and the Government adds the rest. The various sums are fixed by the act. The soldier provides not less than $15 a month and the Government makes an allowance of from $15 to $50 more. Thus the soldier's wife and children, or mother and father, if they be dependent, have a regular and dependable income to tide them over the war.

The sections covering compensation provide for the soldier's family in case of his death, or for himself in case of his disability. They are similar in principle to the present workmen's compensation laws with which we are familiar. The act has a full schedule of rates. In case of a soldier's death his widow receives not less than $30 a month and more if there be children. In case of a soldier's disability he receives not less than $40 if single and $55 or more if married. This compensation is protected from execution at law.

The sections covering insurance stand on the principle that a soldier is entitled to protect his family with insurance while he is away at war as well as a man who remains in civil life. War is a dangerous risk. The ordinary cost of private insurance to a soldier would be prohibitive. The Government therefore charges the soldier the normal peace rate only, and bears the rest of the risk itself. The present limit of insurance proposed is $5,000, but if the principle of the bill is right it should at least be raised to $10,000.

Under the beneficial provisions of this bill a soldier is free to serve his country with full confidence that his country will come to his aid in case of injury or take care of his family in case of his death. He will not be dependent upon charity after the war, upon the uncertainties of pension legislation, or the hope of political favor. The bill has the support of the leaders of liberal thought throughout the country. To New York City it has a particular value. I have received the following telegram from our mayor:

NEW YORK, September 6, 1917.

HON. G. B. FRANCIS,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I earnestly urge your active support of the soldiers' and sailors' insurance bill as presented by the National administration. The city of New York will have over 50,000 men in the service of the National Government in the near future. Hardships and difficulties will arise in some of their families, which the city government will do everything in its power to alleviate, but it is both necessary and a matter of justice that some uniform and dependable provision should be made by the National Government.

JOHN PURROY MITCHEL, Mayor.

This expresses well, I think, the sentiment of every part of the community. The bill should receive the support of every Member who is supporting the Nation in this great emergency. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. I probably will not use all of that time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BORLAND). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the three days' discussion on this bill indicates how dangerous it is to dress an old idea in new words. Some people are so afraid that a new idea may cause an explosion within their brainpan that they can not stand the introduction of a new word into their vocabulary. [Laughter.] There is not the slightest doubt that the present bill retains the best features of the pension laws, and there is, again, no doubt that the present bill modernizes pension legislation. It also introduces a new and desirable principle, the principle which has during the last 12 or 15 years been introduced in 33 States out of the 48, the principle of compensation to those who are injured in industry.

Now, the average lawyer in the service of private interests who gets to be a member of the legislature carries with him into the legislature the prejudices and the notions acquired in private practice. It is not very long since legislatures have become accustomed to the idea of workmen's compensation. Now, you will find very few men who have the courage to oppose it.

This is an attempt to systematize the pension laws. It is an attempt to liberate the Member of Congress from being the private claim agent of the individual in his district. How many a man after being elected to Congress feels that he is expected to be a private claim agent for individual constituents in his district instead of serving here as a legislator, instead of devoting his time and his energy to the bigger problems that confront the Nation. This law will liberate Members of Congress from private pension claims.

The fact that the present pension department is not intrusted with the continuation of this work simply means that the committee has felt the necessity of creating a new department, of trying to distinguish between the old method and the new system which they are about to inaugurate. Of course, the word "compensation" sounds wrong in the case of a man who sacrifices his life. You can not really compensate him.

In studying life insurance some years ago I came across this historic incident: The first insurance case that had been brought before a court in France after the French Revolution was thrown out on the ground that it was beneath the dignity of a Frenchman to have his life estimated in dollars and cents. It was thrown out of court on the theory that it was against public policy that the life of a Frenchman should be measured in money.

But that has all been wiped out by a century of commercialism, and insurance is the universal rule to-day.

I have contemplated for some time to introduce at the end of this session a bill repealing all the legislation of this special session, but the food-control bill and this law will probably prevent me from introducing such a bill. [Laughter and applause.]

I can see why the insurance companies are opposed to the provision of the bill which holds out to the soldier the opportunity to insure himself in the amount of five or ten thousand dollars. I think the limit of the proposed law is now $5,000, and, as the President wants it, it is to be $10,000, and it will probably be as the President wants it. He has had his own way in bigger things. The insurance companies do not like to see this entering wedge into their business. They have been accustomed too long to govern the Government, and they do not want to permit the Government to govern the insurance business of this country. Now, if there is any business in the world that is public in its character, that is social in its very nature, that we should not permit to run for profit, it is the insurance business. The life insurance companies take no chances whatever.

While some Members of this House may become immortal in a spiritual sense they are all in a physical sense mortal and while some individuals remain forever in the memories of mankind they are all sure to die and the insurance companies proceed with the certainty of mathematics in making their profits at the expense of the people. There is no excuse for private insurance. All insurance should be social, national in character, and, if I could, I know it probably would be held out of order, in connection with this bill I would ask for the appointment of a commission to study the problem of extending the principle of national insurance to all the big industries dealing with the war.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman please name one insurance company to his knowledge that offers opposition to this bill?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, the insurance companies criticize that part of the proposed law which offers to the man insurance at $5,000. They have criticized it, of course.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the gentleman name one company?

Mr. LONDON. All of them; the most of them; and you will find it in their literature, in the various newspapers; and you will find it in the statements made during the hearings.

Mr. LONERGAN. I do not know whether the gentleman was here on Saturday or not, but one member of the committee was talking along that line and I assured him, and now make the statement to the gentleman from New York, that in my home city of Hartford, Conn., the insurance center of this country, that I have received no requests from any of the insurance interests in that city to oppose this bill.

Mr. LONDON. Of course, I can not imagine a more philanthropic, more altruistic, more patriotic institution, one that is more willing to be a martyr to the great cause, than the insurance company of the city from which the gentleman comes. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the testimony of the hearings before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee show that the insurance companies testifying were not opposed to the bill if the Government gave a paid-up policy and went out of business when the war was over? In fact, they were not opposed to the bill except that feature of providing insurance.

Mr. LONDON. Yes. They do not care how much Uncle Sam goes into his Treasury; they do not care except what may possibly interfere with the insurance business.

Mr. FOSTER. Another question, if the gentleman will permit. Does the gentleman, in his judgment, believe there is any more menace for the Government to go into the insurance business than there is to permit these old-line insurance companies to pile up hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. LONDON. Insurance companies are the greatest money powers in the world. They are the real controllers of the money of the people. The Armstrong investigation in New York has shown what the insurance companies are. When I introduced last year a bill asking for the appointment of a commission to study the problem of social insurance the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] objected to it on the ground that it might interfere with the insurance companies.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman think of the statement made frequently, at least not infrequently, that the four great insurance companies are the money foundation of Wall Street?

Mr. LONDON. Why, the insurance companies hold the savings of the people, the savings of millions of the people, and it is perfectly natural that these resources of the people should not be used by the managers and owners of insurance companies except to finance the big undertakings. There is not the slightest doubt the insurance companies are a menace as they are constituted to-day, and that the principle of national and social insurance is the next thing on the program. I say I think it ought to extend to basic industries. Gentlemen, wars are not conducted only with the armies in the fields. The sacrifices involved in war reach every man, reach every woman and every child. All the people are affected. I hope we will never be called upon in this country to suffer as much as they have suffered in other lands. As a matter of fact, I believe the war will break down before the United States will have entered seriously into the conflict. I disagree entirely with the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn], and if the gentlemen here would have the patience to give me 10 or 15 minutes I would like to give them the reasons for my belief.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We will give the gentleman all the time he wants.

Mr. LONDON. I will proceed along that line, then. I believe the war will break down. I believe the nations of Europe are exhausted. You will notice in this morning's paper in big headlines, "The Reichstag is to draft terms of peace."

Now, of course, you are not going to find anything as absurd as that the Congress will draft terms of peace. That would be in violation of all democratic principles as they are understood in this country. The Reichstag is to draft terms of peace. There is a complete collapse in all European countries. The resolution adopted by the Reichstag some time ago was of the greatest significance. Either our newspapers are too ignorant to understand it or they do not want us to know the truth. The declaration of the Reichstag was significant, first, because it was an attempt by a legislative body which had heretofore had no voice in international relations to assert itself in that field. The declaration of the Reichstag was against an economical alliance. It included a demand for international arbitration and for disarmament. All these fundamental things were made the basis of a declaration by the elected representatives of a people in time of war. When I get the full meaning of that declaration the reply of the President to the Pope gives me hope that the war is about to break down.

What did the President say? Do not forget that this message is less obscured by intricate phrases than any document that ever came from the White House.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. You say that the war is about to break down. Where? I want to see that.

Mr. LONDON. One moment. Let me develop my argument, please.

The President's reply must be taken as a reply not only to the message of the Pope, but as a reply to the declaration of the German Reichstag. He assures the world that he is opposed, first, to an economic alliance after the war.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. LONDON. I am trying to prove that this insurance bill may not, after all, be necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. SANFORD. I make the point to protect the public interest.

Mr. LONDON. I can take care of the public interest as much as any other Member of the House. I have exercised greater self-restraint than any other Member of the House.

Mr. SANFORD. Criticism of the President in his war policy in his answer to the Pope is not material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. London] has expired. The Chair did not hear the language of the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. SANFORD. In order or out of order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In order.

Mr. SANFORD. I have no objection to his proceeding in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He was not out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. London] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Now, in order to prove that this insurance bill may not be necessary and that we will soon have to occupy ourselves with the big problem of social insurance for millions of workers engaged in the work of peace and for the purpose of analyzing the present situation, I want to bring out this fact, namely, that in the reply of the President there is the assurance given to the world that no dismemberment of any European nation will be attempted; second, that there will be no economic alliance after the war. Now, these two things are of profound significance to a man who knows what has been going on in Europe during the last few years. Dismemberment of Austria and Germany was held over the heads of these peoples by French, English, and Italian statesmen.

One of the best works written since the war, a book by Guyot—

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the language complained of?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is not addressing himself to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We are proceeding under the theory of general debate at this time.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Under the rule, he could not proceed for more than five minutes. Consequently he can not be out of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is in error.

The CHAIRMAN. Technically the House is now considering the bill under the five-minute rule, and, if insisted upon, the debate would have to be confined to amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is no amendment. You commenced to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion pending is to strike out the last word.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We have proceeded all the afternoon, Mr. Chairman, on the theory that we were liberalizing the debate on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with the understanding, but the Chair has stated the technical situation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I correct the Chair? I reserved the right to make that motion, pending the time the general debate and amendment to the section were over, because I did not want my motion confused by any such debate. And I have agreed with the gentlemen on the other side that I will make this motion when the general debate is over.

The CHAIRMAN. That which is now taking place does not in any way affect the rights of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from New York was not included or contemplated in the reservations made under the agreement, I hope he will be allowed to finish his remarks. We granted him 10 minutes. It will take a longer time to wrangle about it than it would take for him to finish.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe my colleague [Mr. Esch] has some time remaining. I assume that if he will yield the same time under general debate the gentleman would then be privileged to proceed along the lines that he was proceeding on.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes, not confining himself to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes, not confining himself to the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will have to object to that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. As in general debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I submit my parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ESCH. I still have 20 minutes of time under general debate. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields to the gentleman from New York 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman can not do that. The general debate is closed. This is the first time I ever made an objection of this kind on the floor of the House. I seldom make objections of any kind. The gentleman from New York is saying things that ought not to be said here on this floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair understands that there was an agreement whereby the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch] was to have one hour, to be yielded in general debate. Is the Chair correct as to that? The Chair so understands.

Mr. STAFFORD. The RECORD of Saturday confirms that statement, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair did not happen to be in the chair at the time that agreement was made.

Mr. ADAMSON. That was the intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I was trying to prove that the President's declaration against dismemberment is encouraging to those who want to see the present struggle end. It is significant, because the threat of dismembering the central powers was held over their heads. It is significant because, in the literature of some of the allies, the thought was expressed more than once that this war could not end until the central powers were broken into the little kingdoms and principalities which existed prior to the unification of the central powers. Therefore the removal of the dismemberment menace is an assurance to the peoples of the central powers that their integrity is not threatened, and that it is not the object of the war to destroy them.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Was it not also a notice to the central powers that they could not hold the territory that they had overrun?

Mr. LONDON. I am coming to that. I do not have to say anything against the central powers here. I am a Member of the American Congress, and I do not have to be making an attack upon the central powers in order to gain applause. That is too cheap demagoguery in which I have never indulged and never will. [Applause.] I am analyzing things as a historian and as a student—no, "historian" is too big a word—as a student of history.

The removal of the threat of an economic alliance is next in importance.

In May, 1916, the allies held what is known as the Paris conference, in which they agreed that after the war they would maintain an economic alliance so as to isolate the central powers from the rest of the world— isolate them economically by prohibitive tariffs—and when the President announces that he is opposed to any economic alliance after the war, that he is opposed to continuing the war after the war, he helps to bridge over the chasm which separates the nations to-day. Then, the statement that the treaty that the German Government is to make must be guaranteed by the people was subsequently explained by the Secretary of State that it did not necessarily mean to dictate to the German people what form of government they should have, but it meant a larger degree of democratic rule in international relations. So far as Germany is concerned, and so far as the Reichstag is concerned, it is evident that the thing they fear most is just that economic alliance after the war. They fear not a military defeat, but they fear that, in spite of a military victory, they may be defeated; that the longer the struggle continues the more likely it was that they would be deprived of their entire commerce; that they would be isolated from the rest of the world.

And when you read what is going on there now, the things that the censors permit to leak through, you will find that there is a universal demand for peace, both in Austria-Hungary and Germany. The very fact that the Governments of the world have not permitted the Socialists to come together at the Stockholm conference shows that they do not want the Socialists to have the credit for initiating peace; and the very fact that the Center Party in Germany, the religious, conservative party, is now for peace shows that there is competition between the parties there for the credit of obtaining and bringing about peace.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Perhaps the House would like to have the gentleman's opinion as to how much significance should be attached to the wish of the Reichstag, in view of what they represent as a power in the German Empire; that is, the power of the Reichstag in contrast with the power of the Emperor.

Mr. LONDON. It is evident that the Reichstag never exercised any power in international relations, and that the resolution which they adopted was of revolutionary significance, judged by German traditions. A German writer who could afford to be unjust to his own people, Ludwig Berne, has said that every people loves liberty in its own way; that the Englishman loves liberty as a respectable man loves his wife; he gives her all her rights, but does not get excited about it; that the Frenchman loves liberty as a young fellow loves for the first time, that he is crazy about it; while the German loves liberty as one loves his mother-in-law. [Laughter.]

Every nation has its own institutions, and you can not adopt a universal standard for all.

Mr. FESS. Now, let me put the question in just a little different form: A well-defined wish in the Reichstag for peace is not necessarily an assurance that we will get it, is it?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, a well-defined expression in the Reichstag for peace is an assurance that the desire for peace has become irresistible; the very fact that in Essen, where the Krupp manufactory is located, 8,000 workers held a meeting at which they adopted unanimously a resolution in favor of the Reichstag declaration, shows that the Government in Germany does not dare to prevent the people from discussing international questions. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one concrete statement in the beginning, which I hope will leave no doubt in the mind of any gentleman as to my attitude upon the bill now being considered.

It has been repeatedly and truly stated here that this bill contains three several parts or propositions; one is referred to as the allowance or allotment, another as the compensation, and another as the insurance provision. Reserving the right to vote for any amendment which would improve either one or all of these provisions or propositions I am unwaveringly and unalterably in favor of them, and each and all of them, as an abstract proposition. In other words, I am heartily in favor of the provisions contained in this bill designed and intended to care for loved ones whom the soldier boys this day marching across the country, perhaps on their way to foreign lands, will leave at home. If within the bounds of reason—and almost anything with reference to expenditure seems to be reasonable now—suggestions can be made which will make these provisions more humane, which will carry more comfort, peace, and contentment into the homes which young husbands and fathers have left, possibly never to return, I will vote for such amendments most readily and gladly. I commend and applaud the committee for reporting a bill containing such wise provisions.

The next proposition is the one I will designate as the pension provision. It seems that in this day and year of our Lord 1917, some gentlemen who in the past have introduced hundreds of bills to increase pensions or to grant special pensions by private bills have become just a little bit annoyed and manifested some degree of petulance because some other gentlemen, inadvertently possibly, have argued that this part of the bill under consideration provides for pensions. They say it provides for compensation—not pensions. I for one am not ashamed of pensions. I am an advocate of pensions. I prefer to refer to this provision in language which everybody understands, and which, in my judgment, is more complimentary to the soldier boy, as a pension provision. Do I oppose it? No. Reserving the right to vote for any amendment which will make the pension provisions of this bill, and all of them, equally as good or better than the provisions of existing pension law, I expect to and will vote for it.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not all. It must not be taken for granted by gentlemen who occupy seats upon this floor to-day that the American people, though aroused as never before over the great emergency which confronts us and the great peril which threatens us, the peril of long, disastrous, destructive war, will not, 5 or 10 years from now, or to-morrow, in their homes and shops and offices and on their farms, use the brains that God Almighty has given them. They will consider our action here to-day, and my judgment is that some of us may be called to account for a superabundance of sentimentality and a deficiency of good common sense and wisdom. We should provide pensions; but why provide a new vehicle to carry them to the people, when we have one now thoroughly well equipped and very able to perform that service? Why fasten upon the American people for all time hundreds of thousands of dollars of extra and wholly unnecessary expense simply to create places for a greater number of Federal employees, who will not serve in the war but who will work in the quiet, comfort, and safety of well-equipped Government offices for a monthly stipend which those who are left at home and are already heavily burdened will be taxed to pay? As was asked here a while ago, Can gentlemen give any good reason why the work pertaining to the adjustment of the pensions provided for in this legislation should be taken away from the Department of the Interior and lodged in the Treasury Department? Why should it be done? The Pension Bureau to-day has its local boards in every county throughout the land. They have been trained and schooled and qualified for the work. The Pension Bureau has its trained and experienced experts, the field examiners, going abroad all over the land to-day to see that the taxpayer is not robbed in paying pensions; in other words, to see that claims for pensions are meritorious.

It has its trained officers and employees over here in the Pension Bureau. It occupies that magnificent office building over there where thousands of men may work and have worked in the performance of the public duties.

I want to say that some gentlemen who occupy high places in this House, who serve on another great committee, may want to take this work away from the Pension Bureau. It was suggested by some one who stood here a few moments ago that perhaps the reason is that some gentlemen wanted to get away from the pension system and to discredit and destroy it, and therefore seek to lodge the administration of this bill in the Treasury Department. Let me suggest right now that I do not believe when patriotism is at high tide, when there is a thrill of patriotism stirring the hearts of men everywhere, North and South, East and West—that I do not believe such a purpose is the best thing that mature wisdom could suggest for the future political career of gentlemen who are advocating that kind of assault upon one of the most serviceable, valuable, and essential bureaus of the Government. I venture the prophecy that the pension system will be abandoned when the Stars and Stripes are lowered, and not until then. [Applause.]

We are committed to it through generations, and for fifty-odd years we have been taxing the people of the whole country to pay pensions which went largely to residents of one section of the country; and still those patriotic citizens of the States which received no pension were never heard to enter a protest against the principle, and if protests have ever been made they had reference solely to the merits of particular cases. Thank God the patriotic citizens of the Southland put their tributes with those offered by the patriotic citizens of the North, and all rejoice in carrying sunshine, joy, and happiness into the homes and lives and to the widows and dependents of those brave old heroes of '61 and to the valiant soldiers of the Spanish-American War.

This bill contains, it is said, the most liberal provisions ever made for the soldier boy; and I think it is true; and therefore I am in favor of it. But, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of treating alike every man who bares his bosom to shot and shell for the dignity, the honor, and the glory of the flag. I care not from what section he hails. I believe in treating alike every patriotic soldier boy, and my notion is—if you will pardon me for injecting into the debate my opinion, which amounts to so little—but it seems to me, and my judgment is, that that portion of this bill which I would denominate the second part, the pension part, ought to be sent to some committee skilled in the work, familiar with pension laws, with instructions to ingraft the pension provisions of the bill into the general pension laws of this country. [Applause.]

I believe when we provide, as we are doing to-day, $30 for the widow of some soldier boy who may lose his life in this war—and I fear there may be some who will—that we should at the same time and in the same law give the widow of the soldier who died fighting for liberty in the Spanish-American War $30, too. [Applause.] If we are going to give the widow of this war $5 for each of her children under 16 years of age, why not give it to the widows of those who fought for the liberty of the people in the far-off Philippine Islands? [Applause.]

Why not harmonize the pension legislation of this country and make it such as all of us can stand for? Forget not that the widow of the soldier of the Spanish-American War is the mother of the boy who this very hour is so proudly and heroically following the flag of his country. Forget not in this hour of impetuous and hasty action that the good old mother, the widow of the Civil War soldier, is the grandmother of the boy who will cross the ocean and plant the tree of liberty in foreign lands. She nurtured and held his father or his mother on her knee; and I tell you that the patriotism, American manhood, pride, and valor which will keep the Stars and Stripes afloat forever and forever was instilled into the hearts and minds of these American citizens now going to the front by these old mothers who suffered so much during the Civil War. [Applause.]

God knows that I feel a deep and profound sympathy for every soldier's widow and every soldier's wife. I have but few memories of the Civil War and I wish they could be forgotten. I know whereof I speak when I tell you of the hardships of the wives and mothers of those days. I can remember how a devoted mother trailed across the mountain passes of two or three States of this Union with a brood of children clinging to her, not knowing any day where she could find lodgment and shelter for the night. I know how patriotically and lovingly this mother, wife of a soldier of the war of 1861, struggled and fought against adversity and against all manner of trials and afflictions in her determination to keep her little brood of children together, and that those children help to make up the brave, noble manhood of this hour. [Applause.]

I am in favor of the insurance feature. I do not care if every insurance company on earth opposes it. I am in favor of turning the light of comfort and happiness into the home of every man who volunteers or responds to the demand of his country and who leaves home and loved ones to fight the battles of our Republic. [Applause.]

I therefore would like to see justice done. I would like for this great committee, composed as it is of so many distinguished and able lawyers and statesmen—I would like for them, if they will, to harmonize this bill, breathe into it the spirit of justice and of equity and of fair play. [Applause.]

Do not put us in the attitude by our vote here to-day of saying to the good woman whose husband died not long since in foreign lands while following his flag that "$12 is good enough for you, but we will provide $30 for your neighbor if her husband should fall in this war." Why put it that way? Can gentlemen give a reason for it? I say to you that the expense of giving the widows of the Spanish-American War and the widows of the Civil War and the children of widows of both wars the same as you give to the widows of this war will not add much more to the expenses of the taxpayers of this country than the enormous expense which you are forcing upon us by creating a new bureau in a department which is wholly unfit, unprepared, and unqualified to conduct the work required to properly and economically administer the provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have given this bill and the hearings had on it before the committee reporting it most careful and painstaking study, and in my judgment it is economically and fundamentally sound, and that all its critics, public or private, will not be able to puncture a single provision in it. Some of its details may need, here and there, some amendments to insure its easy working ability, and before it finally leaves Congress this may be done; but to change the basic principles on which it rests, never.

This is undoubtedly one of the most important pieces of legislation that this or any preceding Congress has dealt with, because it marks a new milestone in the enactment of legislation which will change the whole future policy of our Nation dealing with its soldiers in the way of pensions, and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, this session of Congress has enacted more record-making legislation than has been enacted by Congress during the past century. While practically all of it has been under the guise of war legislation, much of it is exactly what the people want, and for which they have been asking during the past two decades or more. Much of it will be permanent and continue in force forever. Some of it may from time to time be amended, but repealed, never. The vast scope of legislation enacted this session affects not only our own Nation, but it affects the relations of our Nation with its sister nations. War changes the whole face of a nation. Its well-defined and oft-traveled roads, economic and political, give way to actual necessity to meet new conditions in time of war. As new conditions arise emergency measures must be put in force to meet the ever-changing conditions of war. War is the most progressive of all sciences. Long before it engulfs a nation, and especially during its existence, the subtle brain of man is ever in search of some device by which he can overcome and conquer his enemy, and in the storm and stress of battle few nations take the time to look out for the welfare of those on whom it must depend to carry its war to a successful and quick conclusion. I predict the time will never come again in our country when war will be fought under the old, ancient, antiquated volunteer system. It has been tried and found ineffective to cope with a well-organized enemy. Besides in time of war it is unfair if not undemocratic to cast the burden of war on those who are willing to volunteer. The sound and safe practice is that based upon universal liability to military service. This principle of raising armies is not new to us. It was resorted to during the Civil War, and Gen. Washington repeatedly time and time again criticized the volunteer system as being inefficient for the purpose of raising an army to support the country in time of war. Acting upon the advice of the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, last April Congress promptly passed the universal liability law, known as the selective draft, under which an army of 500,000 men have been selected with increments of 500,000 other soldiers to follow as they may be needed from time to time.

These young men represent the flower of American manhood. They come from every walk and station in life. They come from the factory, the mill, the mine, and the farm, the countingroom, and from every section of the country, representing the distributed burden upon all the people as equal as it is possible to distribute it. Many of these young men were earning large salaries in private life. Many of them are to-day our leading business men, and many of those who return from the war will be our leading business men of to-morrow. Under the Constitution the power to raise and support armies is delegated to the Congress, and exercising its constitutional power Congress under the selective draft has called forth these young men, physically strong, with rugged bodies, free from disease, and asked them to go forth and fight the Nation's battles. As Congress has selected these men under the principle of universal liability, it is but fair and equitable that in support of these armies Congress shall, under the principle of universal liability, compel the civilian population to stand a part of the loss of the soldier which he will sustain in the war.

War is the most hazardous of all occupations, as shown by the unwillingness of old-line insurance companies to insure those who actually engage in this enterprise without greatly increasing the rate of insurance to the man engaged in it. A vast majority of those now forming in the ranks of war are unable to pay these increased premium rates demanded by the insurance companies. Some one should bear this increased burden. No one is abler, no one should be more willing to do it than all the people for whom the soldier is fighting. The insurability of a man's life is a real, genuine asset to him and those depending upon him for support and maintenance. More than this, it is a real asset to the State and the Nation. While this asset of life is lost, or at least partially destroyed, by the act of the Government in calling him to the colors, putting him in hazardous occupations, the Government should willingly make up this loss to the soldier and place him in statu quo, so far as his right of insurability is concerned. It will be impossible for the Government to place all its soldiers during or after the war in the same condition physically it found them at the time it accepted them, but as far as it is practical or possible so to do the Government should willingly undertake the enterprise. The insurance feature as outlined in the bill is what is called "term insurance," lasting a year at a time. Old-line insurance companies are willing to carry this insurance by the year in times of peace on men of military age at the rate of $8 per year, but in times of war they exact a charge of $58 per thousand.

This would place insurance for the average soldier above his reach, above his ability to pay the premium. A few of the extremely wealthy in the Army would be able to meet this increased demand for premium on the part of insurance companies, but a vast majority of the soldiers would not be able to carry any insurance whatever upon their lives. Under the plan proposed in the bill the Government will carry insurance for the soldier at the rate of $8 per thousand, the same rate at which insurance companies would carry the risk in time of peace. Under this plan the Government proposes to carry the increased risk of $50 on each thousand dollars of insurance, only requiring the soldier to pay insurance at the rate of $8 per thousand, the same rate he would be required to pay for similar insurance issued to him by old line insurance companies in times of peace. This is a splendid financial investment on the part of the Nation, and, in addition, it is extremely patriotic. It is a willingness on the part of the Government to make good, as far as possible, the loss to the soldier by putting him into the Army through the volunteer or selective-draft system. For many years the laboring men and those engaged in humanitarian work unceasingly urged the legislatures of States and the Congress to enact legislation exempting the toilers of the Nation from many of the harsh, unjust, and onerous burdens cast on them by the monstrous doctrine of assumption of risk—purely a court-made doctrine in the first instance, never recognized by any legislative body, so far as I am apprised—and while it took years of labor and toil to break down this unjust rule between employer and employee, to-day in every State of the Union, with the exception of three, this progressive and humane legislation is a part of the statutory law of the land. Not until a year ago did Congress realize the justness of the claim of those working for it and pass a wise, just, and humane measure along the line of compensation to Government employees, and more to the untiring work of the late lamented Senator Kern, of Indiana, than anyone else is due the enactment of this humanitarian piece of legislation. While our soldiers are not employees of the Government, they are by far more than employees; they are part and parcel of the Nation.

In fact, they are the Nation's vanguard and on them rests its destiny, and to them we confide our future civilization. And as the cry of the Nation's toilers have been heard in the enactment of wise and beneficent legislation in their interest, as far as it is humanly possible, let Congress now and here highly resolve that as far as its constitutional power will permit it to enact this humane law that will go far toward mitigating the horrors of war. The average man does not fear death. He has an abiding faith that death does not end all, but the average man shrinks and shudders at the thought of death, if he has failed to leave a reasonable competence for those dependent on him for support, and after all is done and said the soldier is as much human as any one of us. Many hundreds of thousands of these young men have wives and children depending on them for support. Many thousands have a widowed mother to support; many thousands of others have a father, brother, or sister broken in health, earning power gone, depending on them for support and maintenance. In fact, all but a few of them represent the meal ticket for those they leave behind. The supreme question agitating the minds of our soldiers is not their comfort, welfare, or health; is not fear of the Krupp guns they must face in the trenches of France or the deadly torpedo of the German submarine. He is asking himself while forming in the ranks of war in some of the training camps, "How about my wife and baby?" "How about my mother?" "Will they be cared for in my absence?" Let Congress answer the question by enacting this bill into law without a dissenting vote, and assure him that behind him stands 100,000,000 people with two hundred and fifty billions of wealth, and that everyone of the civilian population and every dollar of this wealth stands pledged to support his dependent wife, child, or mother in his absence. When this is done many of the horrors of war now staring our soldiers in the face and now confronting his dependents at home will have passed away. At the outbreak of war Congress passed the war-risk bill, whereby the Government insured vessels and their cargoes on the seas, and to the amazement and delight of its friends and the astonishment of its opponents it has not only paid the operating cost of the bureau, but left a nice and handsome balance to the credit of the Government in the United States Treasury.

Later Congress recognized that the lives of the crews on merchant ships was as important as ships and its cargoes, and by law Congress compelled the owners of vessels to insure the lives of their crews, and which has worked admirably to the interest and welfare of the Nation. Now comes the greatest and most valuable cargo ever assembled by our Nation, an army of 2,000,000 young men, to be subjected to the most hazardous and dangerous employment to which nations ever engage—war.

The Nation has a pecuniary interest in the life, health, and happiness of each one of its soldiers, and it should in every way possible strain to preserve their lives and health. Failing in this, it should replace the breadwinners taken from the dependents by at least a small competence given to them. In good conscience and fair dealing the Nation can do no less. A fear seems to be brooding over the minds of some that the Government may continue in the life insurance business after the war is over. For one I am not concerned at this time about the future policy of our Government after peace is restored, so far as life insurance is concerned. It ought to continue in this line of work with all its soldiers after the war is concluded until each soldier's policy is paid him, whether that be 20 years or 50 years. Time is of no moment now.

This will furnish a test, and if the Government can carry insurance cheaper than a private enterprise, for one I would openly advocate it. For more than 10 years the Post Office Department has asked Congress for legal power to bond its 100,000 employees required to be bonded. This department time and again has assured Congress that it can do it more cheaply and economically and at a premium from 25 to 33 per cent less than that paid by the employees to the present bonding companies, but down to the present hour, in some way or manner, the bonding companies who invariably infest the Capitol at every turn of the elbow every time the question has been up has been able to defeat this much-needed legislation. Here in the insurance feature of this bill the test will come between Government insurance, on the one hand, after the war is over and the private insurance companies on the other. If it is demonstrated, as I feel sure it will be, that the Government can carry on life insurance for its citizens cheaper than private enterprises the Government insurance is here and it is here to stay, and to stay forever. War is a function of the Government, and to a speedy and successful conclusion of this war Congress has pledged all the resources of the Nation, both men and money, and while this is a war measure it is more, it is a measure to heal the wounds, make whole the loss during its continuance, and aid in rehabilitating the Nation at its conclusion so far as practicable. [Applause.]

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the members of the committee in charge of this bill, and I will only take a few minutes.

I am one of the Members of this House who does not believe the pension laws of our country are so odious that if this bill becomes a law and should be administered through the Pension Bureau that now exists in this city it will at all be contaminated with anything that is evil.

I also believe that if you will allow us to write into this, that you call a compensation bill, a principle that was written into the pension laws of this country years ago for the old Civil War veterans, it will not make your compensation bill odious. And that is this principle—that there is something lost to the man who has lost his leg, or his eyes, or his arm, other than the ability to earn a living. In my boyhood in my father's home were two men that each had only one arm; one a half brother, whose arm was off at the shoulder, and one a cousin, a Civil War veteran, whose arm was off just below the left elbow joint. I think I know something about the trials and tribulations of a one-armed man, if I do not know about the blind. What I want to call to your attention is this, that in this compensation act you are going to measure that man's sacrifice by a commercial, industrial rule.

I say that a man who faces a cannon to-day on the field of battle and has his arms blown off or his legs torn off or has his eyes put out with poisonous gas has lost something more than his ability to earn a living. Great heavens, gentlemen, whenever that one-legged man on a crutch goes out among his fellow men, does he not bring discomfiture and sorrow to those who look upon him? Does he not realize that? Is not the man disfigured? Under your hard-headed commercial industrial rule for compensation you give him nothing for that disfigurement of his body or limb. When he moves along among his fellow men, do you not think that he realizes that he is a disfigured man? The existing law gives to every soldier, whether he be an officer or whether he be a private, if he loses both eyes in the defense of his country, or both arms, or both hands, or both feet, $100 a month. There is no discrimination between officers and privates. The law metes out absolute equality to all in granting pensions for specified injuries.

Now, gentlemen, that is about what I want to present here. I want you to write an additional principle in the bill to the effect that when men are mutilated that that must be taken into consideration as well as the inability to earn a living.

You say you make some provision for the widow. You take $60 off of the blind or $40 off of the blind and you give the young widow an increase of $18, and the Government gains $22 in the transaction. But what young widow of a deceased soldier will want to accept the pension if you have got to pay it out of a fund recouped from the pensions of the blind?

Gentlemen, I do not want to get into a fight with a blind man. I was trying a lawsuit once, and it developed that a witness got into a fight with a blind man and that the blind man whipped him. And I said to myself that he ought to have whipped him. And I believe if the Members of this House get into a fight with a blind man they will get licked, and I believe they ought to get licked.

Give the 1,200,000 volunteers and drafted men in the Army to-day the pension for frightful injuries that was in the law when they enlisted. They then understood that, should poisonous gas render them sightless, a pension of $100 per month would be granted them. But now, many of them being in France, away across the water, you start a fight without notice to them to reduce a promised $100 per month pension to $40 per month, and if an attendant is needed you will pay $60 a month. Recollect that the bill states that nothing will be taken into consideration on a partial disability except the inability to earn a living—a commercial rule. And when this one-armed or one-legged man comes back believing that he will receive a $55 pension per month when the limb is off at the shoulder or hip joint, what will he think of a Congress that in his absence reduced it to $20, $25, or $30 per month? The loss a man sustains who loses his arm while reaching for the throat of the Kaiser should not be measured by the same rule that you employ in measuring the loss of a man who in the gainful pursuits loses his arm reaching for the almighty dollar.

The commercial compensation rule in the pending bill fails to recognize heroism and takes no account of acts of valor rendered on the field of battle, although disfigurement of body or limb plainly shows heroic acts performed.

Why should Members of Congress daily bewail the lack of enthusiasm among the people in the great martial movement against our enemy when the committee reporting a general pension bill for the soldiers of the present war fail to recognize special acts of valor on the field of deadly conflict—a special mark of bravery, as evidenced by disfigured limb, body, or sightless eyes? The existing law grants specific pensions for certain specified injuries, and the Congresses that enacted them did not need the services of any compensation expert or any pension clerk.

This Congress ought to be able to fix the amount of compensation or pension for the injuries I have just referred to without the assistance of a compensation theorist. Will any Member rise on the floor of this Chamber and state that he needs the services of a departmental clerk or that he wants to listen to the chattering of some compensation expert to enable him to come to the conclusion as to the amount of pension he should vote for a blind man or an armless or legless man injured while fighting his country's battles?

I propose to offer the following amendment to the pending bill, namely:

Amend article 3 by inserting, at the end of line 20, on page 20, the following:

"That for the loss of one hand or one foot, or being totally disabled in the same, the rate of compensation shall be $40 per month; for the loss of an arm at or below the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, or being totally disabled in the same, the rate of compensation shall be $46 per month; for the loss of an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such a condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, the rate of compensation shall be $55 per month; for the loss of one hand and one foot, or being totally disabled in the same, the rate of compensation shall be $60 per month; for the loss of both feet on both hands or both eyes, or for becoming totally blind from causes occurring in the service of the United States, the rate of compensation shall be $100 per month; and for total deafness the rate of compensation shall be $40 per month."

These specific pensions have been determined by past Congresses. A Congressman can figure out the loss of earning capacity on account of these palpable injuries as well as any expert, and he can also take into consideration the disfigurement of the maimed soldier, an element unknown to the commercial compensation theorist. We do not want to leave the rate of pension for these well-determined injuries to the uncertain calculation of some bureau official or clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, before moving that the committee rise, I wish to express my appreciation of the patience of the gentlemen and also my gratification that three days of liberal debate seem to have clarified the situation so as to inspire in me a hope that we will be able to follow the rule more closely and make greater expedition to-morrow in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I think we ought to do so. I am willing to agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, with the admonition and thanks and hopes expressed, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department, approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. I object; Mr. Speaker.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the change of reference of a bill which I think was in error sent to the Committee on Military Affairs instead of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think I marked it to be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but I find it sent to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It makes no difference how the gentleman marked it.

Mr. HICKS. It is a Coast Guard bill, which is now under the Navy Department. The Coast Guard has been transferred since the war, and the bill is entitled—

"Giving rank, pay, and allowance to district superintendents of the United States Coast Guard."

Mr. FIELDS. Would the gentleman mind letting that go over until to-morrow, so that we can look into it?

Mr. HICKS. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, since objection was made to meeting at 11 o'clock to-morrow, I will state that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] authorized me to state that he hoped to finish this bill before adjournment to-morrow night.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I suppose Mr. KITCHIN will attend the session.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, September 11, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Attorney General submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1917 (H. Doc. No. 361); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of Commerce submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Commerce for aids to navigation in the Potomac River (H. Doc. No. 362); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 5993) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station at a point in or near the city of Biloxi, in the State of Mississippi; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5994) to require street railways carrying passengers in their cars within the District of Columbia to provide equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races, and to prescribe punishments and penalties for violating its provisions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5995) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Columbia, Marion County, Miss.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5996) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Bay St. Louis, Hancock County, Miss.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5997) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Pascagoula, Jackson County, Miss.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5998) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Jackson County, Miss., one bronze cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 5999) for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6000) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Gulf Coast Military Academy two bronze cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6001) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Mississippi Woman's College, at Hattiesburg, Miss., two bronze cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRANCIS: A bill (H. R. 6002) to amend section 1754 of the Revised Statutes, being "An act to provide for the preference of persons disabled in military or naval service in civil-service appointments"; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 6003) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, about one-half mile north of the town of Marked Tree, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: Resolution (H. Res. 136) to print 1,000 additional copies of the Soil Survey of the Biloxi Area, Miss., for use in the House document room; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 149) to have the food administrator investigate prices charged at markets; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Memorial of the Assembly of the State of New York, urging the increase of farm labor to help properly increase the output of foodstuffs; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorial of the Assembly of the State of New York, urging the prompt manufacture and timely distribution of farming implements of utmost importance in facilitating and increasing production; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 6004) granting an increase of pension to Pearl P. Ingalls; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 6005) to provide posthumous promotion to First Lieut. William T. Fitzsimmons; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 6006) granting a pension to Rufus R. Ford; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6007) granting a pension to Georgia Gentry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6008) to reimburse Gaston R. Poltevin for property lost by him while assistant light keeper at East Pascagoula River (Miss.) light station, as recommended by the Light-house Board; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6009) for the relief of J. L. Bonner; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6010) for the relief of the heirs or legal representative of Charls Johnsson and Kate Johnsson; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6011) for the relief of the heirs or legal representative of Charls Johnsson and Kate Johnsson; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6012) for the relief of N. Ferro; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 6013) granting a pension to Mary A. Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6014) granting a pension to William J. Shannon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6015) granting an increase of pension to George W. Cooper; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 6016) granting an increase of pension to Jerel Carver; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 6017) for the relief of William Guy; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VOIGT: A bill (H. R. 6018) granting an increase of pension to George Coppins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of W. M. Heseltine and 29 others, of Delaware, Ohio, protesting against the tax on telephone and telegraph companies; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Petition of the International Typographical Union, urging Congress not to impose any additional burden upon the printing industry of the United States or the general public through the increase of postage on publications of any kind; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the American Exporter, opposing tax on publishers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Motor Vehicle Co., opposing increase of second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Progressive Farmer, Birmingham, Ala., opposing the zone rate for periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of William Aaron, sr., and others, of Peru, Ill., for conservation of public lands and other natural resources; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: Petition of the Commodore Perry Council, No. 14, Junior Order United American Mechanics, urging the restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Tyler Council, No. 45, Knights of Columbus, Providence, R. I., protesting against the granting of any loan of money to the Carranzista Government in Mexico until that Government puts into effect religious liberty and freedom of worship; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PRATT: Petition of Sam G. Houghton, Hartley M. Gates, James Richford, Lloyd Durfee, E. F. Hopkins, Arthur S. Carter, Wilmer R. Wilcox, H. J. Knapp, E. L. Ash, F. R. Gibson, C. A. Southworth, C. F. Rice, Fred J. Horton, C. H. Gee, E. S. Burtenshaw, Charlie Biggs, H. E. Clapp, W. C. Cook, Ashbel Landon, Foster T. Van Buskirk, Glenn H. Adamy, W. S. Parker, and E. T. Tichenor, all of Groton, N. Y., in favor of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAINEY: Petition of Dow Camp, M. W. A., Illinois, protesting against the high cost of living; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Col. Thomas A. Peters and 24 other Grand Army veterans, of Virginia, Ill., favoring larger pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SULZER: Petition of 117 residents of Ester Creek, Alaska, complaining of high-food costs; to the Committee on the Territories.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, September 11, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee with the labor of our hands, for we recognize that we are under Divine obligation to bring our acts and the policy of our Nation into conformity to Thy will. As we touch the vital interests of millions of Thy children and project influences from this Senate that reach around the world we would have all done with reference to God's great plan for the uplift of humanity. We pray Thee to guide us to this end and bless us in our endeavor. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, August 15, 1917, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MERMENTAU RIVER DAM, LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2785) to authorize and empower the Southwest Louisiana Waterways Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock and dam in Mermentau River in the State of Louisiana, which were, on page 1, line 3, after "That," to insert "the consent of Congress is hereby granted for"; on page 1, line 4, to strike out "be, and is hereby, authorized"; and on page 2, line 6, after "hereof," to insert: "Provided, That no dam constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power, nor to generate electricity, but the use of the dam by the construction shall be limited to irrigation."

Mr. RANDELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR REVENUE—M'KELLAR AMENDMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, on yesterday, as appears on page 6881 of the RECORD, the Chair made the following ruling:

The Chair will endeavor to answer the question already asked, if the Senator from Tennessee will permit. The Chair finds that the House provision was stricken out and that the McKellar amendment, so called, was inserted as a different provision and not in connection with the motion to strike out. Therefore, if the Senate refuses to concur in the McKellar amendment, the House provision, which was previously stricken out, will still be left out.

As a result of that decision of the Chair I voted to strike out the McKellar amendment. I was in favor of striking out the House provision and the Senate committee provision, but I preferred the McKellar amendment to either the House provision or the Senate committee amendment, and had it not been for that decision of the Chair I should have voted so. As the object desired was accomplished by having two votes, I do not care to have the RECORD changed as to that, but I wanted the statement to go into the RECORD. I believe the whole question should be taken up by this committee, and after careful consideration a bill or amendment should be reported classifying second-class mail matter, and the postage should be fixed according to the amount of advertising carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that—

Mr. CURTIS. If the Chair will pardon me, later on the Chair changed the ruling, and it appears in the RECORD on the same page after the vote was cast.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it proper to say in this connection that on inquiry from the Secretary he was informed that the facts were as first stated. A further examination of the Journal by the Secretary disclosed the fact that the facts as stated were incorrect, and the Chair endeavored at that time to make the correction.

Mr. CURTIS. I made my statement not to criticize the Chair but simply to show what occurred and to explain my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair fully understands, but he thought the two statements should go together.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Woman's Improvement Club of Vallejo, Cal., praying for the removal of the exemption of aliens from serving this country or their own in the war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Texas pledging the active cooperation of that State to the Federal Government in a united effort to prevent the pink bollworm from being brought into the United States through Texas. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Resolution of Texas Legislature.

Whereas the United States is practically the only cotton-growing country not now invested with the destructive cotton pest, the pink bollworm; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has appropriated a liberal sum for the investigation of this dangerous enemy to the cotton industry, and to ascertain the prevalence of the worm in Mexico; and is proposing a very large appropriation to be used in precautionary measures to prevent the introduction of the bollworm into Texas and other cotton-growing States of the Union; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Texas pledges the active cooperation of this State to the Federal Government in a united effort to prevent the pink bollworm from being brought into the United States through Texas, and will enact such legislation to that end as may appear essential.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent the members of the Texas Delegation in Congress.

The foregoing resolution was adopted by the Senate this the 30th day of August, 1917.

JOHN D. MCCALL,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HUSTING. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 27) relating to the regulation of the fishing industry on the Great Lakes.

Whereas the rapidly increasing use of fish for food makes it highly desirable that the fishing industry should be properly and adequately regulated; and

Whereas it seems impossible to reach a uniformity of State laws of the different States bordering upon the Great Lakes in regard to this subject: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate, the assembly concurring, That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin does hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as shall give to the National Government the sole jurisdiction in the regulation of the fishing industry upon the Great Lakes.

That copies of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerks of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
LAWRENCE C. WHITTET,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. HUSTING. I present a resolution adopted by the National Association of Real Estate Boards at a convention held at Milwaukee, Wis., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of National Association of Real Estate Boards adopted at Milwaukee convention.

Whereas the present supply of coal at the various distribution points throughout the country is far short of the normal supply; and

Whereas the time for shipment of coal to meet the present emergency as well as the winter's demand is half over, particularly as affects a large territory supplied through the ports at the head of the Great Lakes; and

Whereas no immediate relief is in sight and a continuance of the present conditions will result in great suffering to the general public and financial loss to property owners; and

Whereas the National Association of Real Estate Boards represents 128 cities with 6,400 individual members, controlling vast property interests affecting millions of tenants, who are directly dependent upon them for heat, light, and power: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Association of Real Estate Boards, assembled in annual convention in Milwaukee, Wis., does hereby earnestly urge the national and State authorities of the United States of America to take immediate and drastic action to secure a more abundant transportation and supply of coal, the most extreme of necessities for the coming winter; and we beg to express the view that, if necessary to this end, the curtailment of passenger and other freight service should be cheerfully submitted to.

Mr. HUSTING. I present resolutions adopted by the Federated Church Choirs and the Young People's Society of Dane and Columbia Counties, Wis., expressing loyalty to the Government, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, delegates of the Federated Lutheran Church Choirs and Young People's Societies of Dane and Columbia Counties, known as the Madison Circuit of the Young People's Association of the Synod, in convention assembled at Madison, Wis., August 3 to 5, in harmony with the Holy Scriptures and our Lutheran confession, which enjoin upon us loyalty to the Government in all matters not militating against conscience, do hereby pledge our faithful and patriotic support of the Government in this our national crisis.

Mr. HUSTING. I present a resolution from the Council of Defense of Polk County, Wis., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions of Polk County (Wis.) Council of Defense.

Resolved, That we, the Polk County Council of Defense and citizens of the county en masse assembled, hereby declare that we will support our President and Government in every drastic measure necessary to back our allies and to win the present war.

We declare that the war was forcibly brought upon us by Prussian autocracy and declare our President and Government free of all blame.

We declare that we are willing to sacrifice to the limit of our endurance and means, and we are willing to submit to extreme measures by our own Government rather than take chances with Prussian autocracy.

We further declare that any attempt to retard or obstruct extreme war measures to crush Prussian autocracy is willful treason.

Mr. HUSTING. I present a letter from the George J. Meyer Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., relative to taxation which would prevent war profits, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., August 10, 1917.

Hon. P. O. HUSTING,
Washington, D. C.

Sir: Referring to bill H. R. 4280, which has been brought to our attention by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, we understand there has been a great deal of argument and controversy as to an equitable means of raising the enormous funds which will be needed to carry on the war. We believe in these times when the loyalty and honesty of all our citizens is so severely taxed that manufacturers should not hesitate to bear their proper share of the burden imposed by this condition. The vast majority of people, particularly those who take active part in this war and those who are near and dear to them, will be severely penalized and will make untold sacrifices in doing their share, and all real patriots should be eager to do their share to the best of their ability.

We can not see any possible excuse for anyone whatever to make a profit out of conditions as they exist at this time, particularly when it is at the expense of the best blood and manhood of our country, and we believe that all really patriotic manufacturers and business men should not only be willing but anxious to bear their just portion of the burdens and also make similar sacrifices to those made by the men actually at the front.

There has been a great deal of discussion as to the best way to raise this money, but we can conceive of no better plan than to tax everyone alike, on their excess profits. If it is logical that manufacturers and business men, as well as individuals, should make equal sacrifices with those actively engaged in the war, then the tax rate on excess profits should be greater than 100 per cent, and the writer personally believes that all excess profits should be taxed 110 per cent on the excess over the average profits of 1911, 1912, and 1913.

If this tax were enforced manufacturers could not then, with more or less reason, be accused of wanting this war for personal profit, and unless they show a willingness to make such sacrifices we can not see how they can escape this accusation. If all the people in this country are to be treated equally they certainly should all share in the burdens which are the inevitable results of the destruction which has been going on for the past three years, and we propose that all revenues to be used in the prosecution of this war be borne by those making a profit out of it.

We also believe that all manufacturers have practically agreed that the compensation law is the best law which has ever been put on the statute books, in compensating employees for injuries received while in their service, and we would also insist that every soldier and officer engaged in the war be put under a compensation act similar to that now in force in Wisconsin, and that the money necessary to take care of this compensation be collected by direct taxation and not by bond issues.

We also believe that it is entirely proper to levy a similar rate of taxation, namely, 110 per cent, on all surplus earned by concerns during the war, which has been set aside for other purposes or for the purpose of avoiding taxation.

We also believe it desirable that all manufacturing and business concerns be permitted to earn a maximum of 20 per cent on the actual amount of money invested in their business, this amount to be determined by the actual amount assessed for taxation.

We also believe it desirable that a law be established confiscating all property upon which the income has been improperly reported and inflicting similar punishment on those shirking their responsibility in any way in the same manner as punishment is inflicted on citizens subject to draft who avoid their responsibility.

We understand this country was established with equal rights, equal privileges, and equal responsibilities for all, and we see no possible way all can be made to bear the responsibility unless the sentiments expressed herein are carried out to the letter.

Yours, very truly,

Geo. J. MEYER,
Per Geo. MEYER, Jr.

Mr. HUSTING presented a memorial of the Wisconsin Retail Sugar Dealers' Protective Association, remonstrating against national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation permitting matter to be mailed which is necessary to enable churches to obtain wine for sacramental purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Eagle Post, No. 22, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eau Claire, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the bringing of the bodies of dead soldiers back to this country in a sanitary and recognizable condition, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented petitions of Delaware Grange, No. 126, Patrons of Husbandry, of Morristown; of Cold Spring Grange, No. 122, Patrons of Husbandry, of Erma; of Elmer Grange, No. 39, Patrons of Husbandry, of Elmer; and of Acquackanonk Grange, No. 183, Patrons of Husbandry, of Richfield, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to secure an adequate supply of nitrate of soda for agricultural purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARDING presented a memorial of the Ohio Seventh-day Adventists, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to protect the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday, from desecration and to secure its observance as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying that a tax be placed on all church property, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the observance of a national day of prayer and fasting, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WILLAPA HARBOR AND RIVER, WASH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) for improving Willapa Harbor and River, Wash., and I submit a report (No. 123) thereon. I wish to say that this joint resolution is really intended to correct an error that grew out of an error made in the report of the engineers and was carried into the river and harbor bill. I ask for its present consideration. It is a short measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War may proceed with the work of improving Willapa Harbor and River, Wash., in accordance with the authorization in the river and harbor act of July 27, 1916, provided he is assured that the city of Raymond and other local interests will contribute the sum of $71,775, being one-half the actual estimated cost of dredging in the North and South Forks of the Willapa River above their junction and will comply with all the other conditions of cooperation imposed by the said act.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably with two amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within three years from the date of entry into the United States. As it is an emergency matter I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Utah give some explanation for its consideration at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. I will explain it in a few words to the Senator. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to object if the explanation of the Senator from Utah will show that it is necessary that this legislation be passed at this time, but I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I can explain it to the Senator in a very few words without going into the details.

There are shipments of distilled spirits that have started from a foreign country to the United States—I think only a very few of them—and they failed to reach here by September 9. In the one case, on the East Gate, there was a shipment started and the boat was torpedoed on which the shipment was coming to the United States. The boat went into dock in England and was repaired. It started again to the United States and was again torpedoed, and it is at the present time under repair in one of the docks in England. It can not go to any other place, only to the port of the United States to which the shipment was consigned.

There are two amendments to the bill. One provides that the shipment shall be from any foreign country to the United States and the other that instead of allowing the liquor to remain in bond in the United States for three years it must be disposed of to some foreign country within one year.

Mr. GRONNA. Do I understand that the joint resolution merely applies to these shipments and to no others?

Mr. SMOOT. To no others.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. There were no other shipments except these, and it simply gives the importer the right to sell the liquor to some other country. If the joint resolution is not passed, the liquor has to go right back on the same boat. It simply allows it to go into bond and pay the expenses of whatever the Government is put to in allowing the liquor to go in bond, and it gives one year in which to sell it to another country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the words "foreign country," insert the words "to the United States"; in line 9, before the word "years," strike out "three" and insert "one."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Then in line 10, where the word "years" occurs, I move to strike out "years" and insert "year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution as passed is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the entry of distilled spirits shipped from any foreign country to the United States prior to September 1, 1917, into bonded warehouses in the United States, under bond to be given by the importer of such distilled spirits, conditioned for the export of such goods to some foreign country within the period of one year from and after the entry thereof into the United States.

REPORTS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, I have a number of reports from that committee to submit, which have been waiting for some time. I shall ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of each one. They are matters that ought to have been acted upon before this, but we have had no opportunity to present them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be received.

AMERICAN DEMOCRACY (S. DOC. NO. 80).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 121), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on July 30, 1917, entitled "The World Conflict in its Relation to American Democracy," an address by Walter Lippman, be printed as a Senate document.

BOOK-PAPER INDUSTRY (S. DOC. NO. 79).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 122), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the final report on the book-paper industry, submitted by the Federal Trade Commission on August 21, 1917, in response to Senate resolution 269, Sixty-fourth Congress [by Mr. FLETCHER], be printed as a Senate document, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

AMERICANS OF GERMAN ORIGIN (S. DOC. NO. 83).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 123), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], on August 22, 1917, entitled "Americans of German Origin and the War," extracts from an address before the Merchants' Association of New York, by Otto H. Kahn, be printed as a Senate document.

IMPERIAL VALLEY, CAL.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 127), which was read:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], on June 1, 1917, entitled "Colorado River in Its Relation to the Imperial Valley, California," by C. B. Grunsky, consulting engineer to the Secretary of the Interior, be printed as a Senate document, with accompanying illustrations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I thought that the Committee on Printing at a meeting held a month or so ago, had decided not to print that document.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps the Senator from Utah is right about that, but subsequently the committee decided to have it printed. The report was handed in by the chairman of the committee. It was ordered printed at a meeting at which I was not present. I am only now presenting the report because the chairman of the committee asked me to present it in his absence. I think subsequent to the meeting to which the Senator from Utah refers, it was decided to print the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, this report was made some 10 or 11 years ago, when the question of appropriations for the Southern Pacific Railroad was under consideration by Congress. I will ask the Senator from Florida to allow the resolution to go to the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution goes to the calendar.

PRICES OF AMERICAN FLAGS (S. DOC. NO. 82).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 125), which was read:

Resolved, That the report submitted by the Federal Trade Commission on July 26, 1917, entitled "Prices of American Flags," in response to a resolution of the Senate of April 16, 1917, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what is that about the prices of flags?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let that resolution go to the calendar. I do not know very much about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will go to the calendar.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether the Federal Trade Commission and other commissions and departments of the Government have not funds for the printing of such documents as this? I do not know; it is probably all right; but here we have a number of proposals submitted for the printing of documents, many of them departmental documents; and in the aggregate it costs a large sum of money. I should like to know just what public value there is in having papers of this kind printed as Senate documents, to lie up here in the Senate document room as dead matter; but it costs the Government considerable money to have them printed, when, as relating to departmental papers, the departments themselves have funds for the printing and distribution of such documents as they think important.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission has its regular allotment for printing documents, and, as I have said so many times, if the Senate undertakes to print departmental documents it is going to cost the Government many thousands of dollars each year. If the subject matter here involved was worthy of an investigation and a report, the Federal Trade Commission ought to have the report printed the same as they do other reports. I therefore object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In reply to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] the Chair will say that this report was made pursuant to a resolution which was offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Ohio offered the resolution, and the matter was transmitted in response to that resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. That presents the subject in an entirely different light. If that be the case, and the report is made in answer to a Senate resolution, I have no objection to having the report printed.

Mr. POMERENE. To what does the report refer?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is in reference to the prices of American flags and the history of the flag. The resolution was offered by the Senator from Ohio, and this information comes in response to that resolution. The committee reported favorably on having the report printed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the report being printed as a public document. I thought, from the mere reading of the resolution, that it was another case of one of the departments or bureaus of the Government undertaking to have its printing done by the Senate in order to save its printing allotment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The department was requested to make this report.

Mr. STONE. I fear I am unnecessarily consuming the valuable time of the Senate, but I am curious to know what there can be in the document of value to the public which concerns the prices paid for American flags—if that is the meaning of the resolution—whether it be 10 cents a pound or a penny a yard, or whatever it may be. I am just curious as to the value of the information.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Ohio can answer that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, information came to me some time ago that the prices of bunting and of flags had been advanced exorbitantly. I introduced this resolution calling upon the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation. They have reported the result of that investigation, and while it has been some time since I read the report, I remember that it clearly shows that the prices have been advanced, and my belief is that that has been done as a result, in part, of a conspiracy. The public is very much interested in the matter of flags and of their prices at this time, and I think the report contains information which will be valuable for the public to have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection to the consideration of the resolution which was made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] having been withdrawn, the Chair inquires whether there is objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is agreed to.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' INSURANCE (S. DOC. NO. 81).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 124), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] on August 24, 1917, entitled "Family Allowance, Indemnity, and Insurance for Our Soldiers and Sailors—the Duty of a Just Government," by Hon. W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, be printed as a Senate document.

BRITISH EXPERIENCE SERIES (S. DOC. NO. 114).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 126), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] on June 29, 1917, entitled "British Experience Series," as revised and edited by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, be printed as a Senate document.

BRITISH LABOR'S WAR MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 84).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 128), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on June 30, 1917, entitled "British Labor's War Message to American Labor," consisting of addresses and discussions at a meeting of the committee on labor of the Council of National Defense, Washington, D. C., May 15, 1917, be printed as a Senate document.

FOREIGN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2858) to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 117) thereon. In view of the urgency of the matter I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations and in such manner as he may prescribe, to employ such portion of the appropriations made for transportation of the Army and its supplies as in his judgment may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States during the present emergency, and that those officers and enlisted men, who may have been performing duties in this connection, be reimbursed from this appropriation for the expenditures they have already been obliged to make.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 2777) providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the first judicial circuit, and I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "first," to insert "and in the fourth"; in the same line, after the word "judicial," to strike out "circuit" and insert "circuits, respectively"; and in line 11, after the word "commission," to strike out the comma, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional circuit judge in the first and in the fourth judicial circuits, respectively, who shall possess the same qualifications, have the same powers and jurisdiction, and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges.

SEC. 2. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the circuit judge in the first judicial circuit senior in commission such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but three circuit judges in the first judicial circuit.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if this bill has the approval of or has been recommended by the Department of Justice?

Mr. HOLLIS. It was referred to the Department of Justice and approved by them.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume the title ought to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the title.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the first and in the fourth judicial circuits."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I understood that this bill only provided for the appointment of one additional judge in the first circuit.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true; but an amendment has been adopted providing for the appointment of an additional judge in another circuit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment adopted provides for a judge also in the fourth judicial circuit.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment adopted provided for the appointment of a judge in the circuit in North Carolina.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest that the title be changed so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the first and fourth judicial circuits respectively."

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

LIEUT. JOHN T. MELVIN.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the bill been reported from a committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it on the calendar?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it is on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2617) authorizing the restoration of John T. Melvin, a lieutenant (junior grade), to the active list of the Navy.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, is it the purpose now to consider bills on the calendar before we finish morning business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought that other bills had been taken from the calendar and acted upon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Several Senators desire to introduce bills, and have been waiting a considerable time seeking an opportunity to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I withdraw my request. I understood that other bills were being considered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Only those which have been reported this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

SERVICE IN FOREIGN ARMIES.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The bill is very brief, and I think there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person who, while a citizen of the United States, and during the existing war in Europe, entered the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war, shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, several cases of this character have come to my notice. I think this legislation is very important, and will do a very appropriate thing by citizens of the United States who have entered into the war under our allies. I know several cases of Michigan men who have entered the Canadian Army, and did it with a specific understanding that they were not renouncing their citizenship here, and yet a strict construction of that law bore very heavily upon them. I sincerely hope this bill will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER (S. REPT. NO. 124).

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate concurrent resolution 12, which I ask to have read, after which I shall ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 12), as follows:

Whereas the people and the Government of the United States are now engaged in the greatest war of history, which, in its determination is fraught with great results for good or evil, not only to the people of this country, but to the people of the whole world, and which is the greatest undertaking upon which this country has ever embarked; and

Whereas this country is about to engage in preparing for war and will soon be sending abroad to the theater of war great numbers of our young men, there to take part in the sanguinary conflict and offer their lives in defense of their country's rights; and

Whereas it is in accordance with the customs and traditions of this country as a Christian Nation and has heretofore been the practice of this country upon engaging in war to set aside a day, by official proclamation, for prayer for the aid of the Almighty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is, requested by Congress to issue a proclamation, designating a day of prayer and calling upon the people of this country on such day to assemble in their various places of worship, and there offer prayer to Almighty God for the success of our armies and victory for our cause in this great conflict.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2830) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 118) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUG RIVER BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Tug River, and I submit a report (No. 121) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were in line 5, to strike out the word "construct" and the comma; in the same line, after the word "operate," to insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906"; in line 6, after the word "thereto," to insert "already constructed"; in the same line, after the words "Tug River," to strike out "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation" and the comma; and in line 9, after the words "West Virginia," to insert "which bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co., and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, a bridge and approaches thereto, already constructed, across the Tug River at or near Wolf Creek near Kermit, W. Va., in the county of Mingo, in the State of West Virginia, which bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask some member of the committee if that is the usual phrase to insert in these bills granting a license, to wit, "which bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure"? Suppose there was something unlawful about the bridge in relation to its construction in the State? Suppose there was some State law that had not been complied with?

I do not know what was in the mind of the committee, but I do not recall to have seen that phrase in a bridge bill before. Of course, if Congress gives the authority, it is lawful so far as Congress is concerned; and if that is all that is meant, the language suggested as an amendment would appear to me to be superfluous. I wondered whether anything else was in contemplation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I do not think that is the usual language. The War Department must have had some special condition under consideration when it suggested the change. I have no objection to having it stricken out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was the change suggested by the War Department?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my understanding, as will be seen by the letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD and which is made a part of the report to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, August 13, 1917.

Respectfully returned to the chairman, Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

So far as the interests committed to this department are concerned, I know of no objection to the favorable consideration by Congress of the accompanying bill (S. 2663, 65th Cong., 1st sess.), granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Tug River, at or near Wolf Creek, near Kermit, W. Va., provided the act is intended to authorize the construction of a new bridge.

In this connection it is considered proper to state that under date of July 21, 1917, the engineer officer in charge of the locality reported that this company has constructed a bridge across Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, at the mouth of Wolf Creek, without a permit from the department and without the necessary act of Congress.

In 1915 the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. made application to the department for approval of plans of a bridge which it proposed to construct across the Tug River near Wolf Creek, but was informed that it would be necessary to first obtain an act of Congress authorizing the structure, as the waterway is one of the navigation portions of which do not lie wholly within the limits of a single State.

It appears that the company has been taken over by the D. E. Hewitt Lumber Co., of Huntington, W. Va., who stated to the district officer, in reply to a letter from him concerning the construction of the bridge without proper authority, that the matter had been placed in the hands of the Member of Congress from the Huntington district, Hon. J. A. Hughes, and it was supposed that the act had been passed and the permit issued.

The district officer states that the bridge already constructed is of the suspension type and is in no way an obstruction to navigation.

If it is this bridge that the bill (S. 2663) is intended to authorize, it is the view of the department that the passage of the act in its present form will not legalize the structure, as it would now be impossible to construct the bridge in accordance with the provisions of the general bridge act of March 23, 1906, which requires that "such bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction . . . have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and accessory works."

Under the circumstances, it is suggested that the bill be amended as indicated in red ink thereon. As thus amended I know of no objection to its favorable consideration by Congress.

WILLIAM M. INGRAHAM,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to ask to have it stricken out, because it may be necessary that it should be in. I have no interest whatever in the matter except to get an adequate conception of why it was inserted. It seems to me that a bill granting authority to maintain a bridge across a navigable river should be susceptible of intelligent explanation before Congress passes it; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River."

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2435) authorizing the counties of Itasca and Cass, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said counties, and I submit a report (No. 122) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOX RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 2823) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin, and I submit a report (No. 120) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The amendment was, to add at the end of the bill the following:

At a point suitable to the interests of navigation in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLICATIONS OF INVENTIONS.

Mr. WEEKS. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2531) to prevent the publications of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 119) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WEEKS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2531, reported by me this morning from the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever during a time when the United States is at war the publication of an invention by the granting of a patent might, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents, be detrimental to the public safety or defense or might assist the enemy or endanger the successful prosecution of the war he may order that the invention be kept secret and withhold the grant of a patent until the termination of the war: Provided, That the invention disclosed in the application for said patent may be held abandoned upon it being established before or by the commissioner that in violation of said order said invention has been published or that an application for a patent therefor has been filed in a foreign country by the inventor or his assigns or legal representatives, without the consent or approval of the Commissioner of Patents, or under a license of the Secretary of Commerce as provided by law.

When an applicant whose patent is withheld as herein provided and who faithfully obeys the order of the Commissioner of Patents above referred to shall tender his invention to the Government of the United States for its use, he shall, if and when he ultimately received a patent, have the right to sue for compensation in the Court of Claims, such right to compensation to begin from the date of the use of the invention by the Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REQUISITIONING OF ENEMY VESSELS.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I move the indefinite postponement of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) requesting the President of the United States to requisition vessels of alien enemies. The joint resolution is now lying on the table. The function intended to be performed by the joint resolution has been performed by an act of Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I did not quite hear the request of the Senator, but may I suggest that we are proceeding under the head of "Reports of Committees"? There are other reports to be made, and if the request is to take some measure from the calendar out of order, I suggest that we first finish the order of reports of committees.

Mr. KNOX. My motion was merely to postpone indefinitely Senate resolution 47, now on the table, requesting the President to commandeer German vessels. That has been done under an act already passed by Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator merely wants to move to postpone indefinitely a measure on the calendar, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2859) to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CULBERSON:

A bill (S. 2860) transferring Hardeman County to the Wichita Falls division of the northern judicial district of Texas; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 2861) granting an increase of pension to Stephen F. Baker (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2862) granting an increase of pension to James Muzzy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 2863) providing pensions for officers and enlisted men incurring disabilities in the war with Germany and certain dependent relatives; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 2864) granting a pension to Charles M. Kuhn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2865) for the suspension of payments on public lands by entrymen in the military or naval service of the United States; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2866) to reimburse the heirs of Chief Heavy Runner on account of his death and for property taken from him at the time of the Baker massacre; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2867) providing for the enlargement of the Federal building at Missoula, Mont.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the protection of land involved in the Oregon & California Railroad forfeiture suit and the Coos Bay Wagon Road suit, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1786) to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 40) to appropriate $500,000 for the encouragement of the production of foodstuffs; the bill (S. 2344) to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and the bill (S. 2463) to provide for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel be indefinitely postponed. The subject matter contained in these bills and joint resolution have been made a part of the food-control bill and have been disposed of in connection with that measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills and joint resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I find on the calendar, under the head of "Subjects on the table," Senate bill 2481, encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel. It was introduced by me as a substitute for the food-control bill and ordered to lie on the table. The subject having been disposed of, I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move to indefinitely postpone Senate bill 315, to punish the storing of foodstuffs for the purpose of cornering the market, and for other purposes. That bill was adopted verbatim by the Senate as an amendment to the food-control bill as section 26, and is now in the law. There is no reason, therefore, why it should further encumber the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

PRODUCTION OF GRAINS AND CEREALS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 129), which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That for the purpose of increasing the production of grains and cereals within the United States during the period of the present war with Germany the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make an inquiry into the feasibility and practicability of the Government of the United States putting in a state of cultivation such parts of the uncultivated areas of the public domain and unpatented Indian lands situated therein as he may deem most suitable for growing food crops, and to report thereon to Congress on the first day of the next regular session thereof.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, I submit an article prepared by Theodore H. Thiesing, of the Legislative Reference Bureau, Library of Congress, on the subject of trading with the enemy. It is a short compilation of the measures adopted by Germany during the war on the subject of trading with the enemy, and it occurred to me it might be of some use to Senators in the discussion of the bill that is about to come up for consideration. I offer it that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document or in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS BY HON. CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] secured the printing in the RECORD of an address delivered by former Justice Hughes. It is an exceedingly able and interesting discussion of a very important matter which I think would be very helpful if it could have the circulation of the country. Although it has been printed in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed as a Senate document in order that it may be given a circulation that will be helpful and educational on very important matters concerning the present emergency.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if he will not allow it to go to the Committee on Printing? Then we will take it up with the House committee, as there is virtually an agreement, as the Senator knows, that there shall not be anything of this kind printed without the consent of the joint committee, both in the RECORD and as a public document.

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing to let it go to the committee, but I must confess I am absolutely unwilling to be a party to any arrangement by which the Senate can not print what it desires to print without getting the consent of the House or anybody else. If the committee has made such an arrangement as that with the House committee I utterly repudiate it, as far as I am concerned as an individual Senator. I think the Senate should reserve to itself the right to print matters when it is deemed that they are important and of a nature that should be printed; but, of course, the committee can take any course it sees fit. I merely wish to enter that disclaimer of being at all acquiescent in any idea that we can not do matters of this sort without the consent of the House. I am perfectly willing that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing, if that is the usage of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not want to enter into any discussion—

Mr. MARTIN. It is entirely unnecessary to go into any discussion. I was simply expressing my individual opinion, an opinion which, I think, will appeal to most Senators on this floor. I am perfectly willing to have it go to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESSES OF SECRETARY DANIELS AND VISCOUNT ISHII (S. DOC. NO. 85).

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on the 26th day of August the Japanese mission, who are now the guests of the Nation, visited Mount Vernon as the guests of the Navy Department. On that occasion at the tomb of Washington an address was delivered by the Secretary of the Navy and a response made thereto by Viscount Ishii, the head of the Japanese mission. It was a memorable occasion in the long years of friendship marking the relations between the United States and Japan. I have before me the address of the Secretary of the Navy and the response of Viscount Ishii, and I ask that they may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

LIEUT. JOHN T. MELVIN.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2617) authorizing the restoration of John T. Melvin, a lieutenant (junior grade), to the active list of the Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 6, to strike out the words "take rank next after Lieut. (Junior Grade) Lee C. Carey, United States Navy," and insert "take rank next after Lieut. (Junior Grade) Gordon Hutchins, United States Navy," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to restore John T. Melvin, a lieutenant (junior grade) on the active list of the Navy, to take rank next after Lieut. (Junior Grade) Gordon Hutchins, United States Navy, subject to the usual examinations for such grade.

Sec. 2. That the said John T. Melvin shall be additional to the number of officers prescribed by the law for the grade of lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy and to any grade to which he may hereafter be promoted, and that for the purpose of computing his pay the time of his former service as an officer in the United States Navy, from July, 1907, to August, 1915, namely, the period of eight years and one month, and the time of his active service as a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Fleet Naval Reserve, United States Naval Reserve Force, shall be allowed in the longevity estimates.

Mr. LODGE. That is a bill which was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has the unanimous report of that committee. This gentleman was in the Navy for a number of years, and just before the war came on he resigned. He has again offered his services, and is at sea now. He merely wants to be restored.

Mr. LODGE. I think I remember the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will not allow us to take up the calendar and go through with it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we are going to do that, very well. I was just going to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill on the calendar, but I am willing to take up the calendar and pass the bills that are not objected to.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, I think, the proper course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is in order, and will be proceeded with.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

The bill (S. 634) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may explain it to the Senate, the bill, with one or two minor exceptions, is the same bill as that reported favorably by the Interstate Commerce Committee at the last session of Congress. The bill as reported then differed substantially from the bill as it passed the House at the last session. At the present session of Congress the House passed Order of Business 113, being House bill 2316, and it is the same as Senate bill 634. I move that the Senate take up House bill 2316 instead of Senate bill 634.

Mr. SMOOT. We might continue with the calendar, and then when we reach House bill 2316 we can take it up at that time.

Mr. POMERENE. It is on the same subject matter, and I do not know that it will make any material difference. I think we can expedite the legislation by passing the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is right.

Mr. POMERENE. There are only one or two minor amendments to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of House bill 2316?

Mr. KENYON. I was out of the Chamber. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if his proposition is to take up Senate bill 634 on the calendar?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; we are on the calendar now.

Mr. POMERENE. My proposition was to substitute House bill 2316 for Senate bill 634, which is the same bill, in fact, and which has passed the House.

Mr. KENYON. There are some Senators I know who have some objections to the bill, but who are not present. I think it ought to go over for that reason.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator makes objection—

Mr. KENYON. I will make objection.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course it will have to go over. I shall ask at the very earliest day, possibly to-morrow, that the bill may be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1786) to amend certain sections of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1797) to authorize the President, in time of war or of national emergency, to requisition or take over ships, boats, and other water craft for the use of the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that same subject matter has not already been included in the shipping bill and also in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. LODGE. Those powers were given in the naval appropriation bill at the last session. I do not recall this bill at the moment. It is well enough to let it lie over. I think it has been covered, and I think it had better go over for the present. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1867) to authorize the President in time of war to give direction to exports from the United States, so as to insure their wise, economical, and profitable distribution to other countries was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. All that is provided for in the present law, but I do not like in the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Therefore I will ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (S. 291) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the town of Murfreesboro, Tenn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and suitable outfit of cannon balls was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I take it that will be passed as a matter of course.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, all three.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 1420) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of Tennessee two brass cannon, with carriages, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 1767) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Lewisburg, Marshall County, Tenn., three brass cannon, with carriages, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUES AND LIABILITIES OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 52, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to furnish the Senate a statement of the gross and net revenue of the railroad companies for certain periods; the bonded and other liabilities of the railroads, together with other information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That resolution may be indefinitely postponed now. I have obtained the information. The Senate amended the bill so as to make the necessary provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2134) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a deed to the persons hereinafter named for part of a lot in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Ohio just explain the bill briefly? I have not had time to look at it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not the full facts before me; I did not expect the bill to be called up; but it is simply a bill correcting a title.

Mr. LODGE. It is simply to correct a title.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute the work of eradicating the southern cattle tick.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 40) to appropriate $500,000 for the encouragement of the production of foodstuffs.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 53) authorizing the President to appoint two additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 70) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia subsequently said: Senate bill 70, providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana, was passed over. I do not think there is any objection to that bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that it go over.

The bill (S. 1484) ratifying the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that bill was one to which my late colleague, Senator Lane, very seriously objected. I think it ought to have been enacted, and I will introduce it again at the next session and insist upon its enactment, but I feel that, out of regard to the memory of my late colleague, I should not press it at this session of Congress. I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed for the reason I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

PODIATRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2123) to regulate the practice of podiatry in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, for compensation, to practice podiatry in the District of Columbia without successfully having passed such examination concerning his fitness as the health officer of the District of Columbia may prescribe. The health officer aforesaid shall conduct the examination.

No person shall be permitted to take the examination without first paying a fee of $10 to the District of Columbia. None of the provisions of this act shall apply to regular practicing physicians or surgeons. Neither shall they apply to podiatrists who have been practicing podiatry in the District of Columbia for one year next preceding the approval of this act.

Podiatry (or chiropody) is hereby defined to be the surgical, medical, or mechanical treatment of any ailment of the human foot, except the amputation of the foot or any of the toes; and also except the use of an anesthetic other than a local one.

Whoever violates any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $100 or imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than 100 days, or both so fined and imprisoned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2180) to approve mutual cessions of territory by the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota and the consequent changes in the boundary line between said States was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUSTING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2116) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

The bill (S. 1836) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHIELDS. The same bill was passed in the last Congress. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be a district judge of the United States for the middle district of the State of Tennessee, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation prescribed by law in respect to district judges of the United States: Provided, That the judge now acting for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee shall continue to act in both said districts until a judge is appointed and qualified for the middle district as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the district judge now holding office and acting for both said districts and his successors shall be assigned to and hereafter be the district judge for the eastern district in said State.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint the district judge for the southern district in said State, who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said middle judicial district, possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said middle judicial district as are now possessed and performed by the district judge acting for both said districts in said State.

SEC. 4. That terms of court may be held at the places and in the manner now prescribed by law in the eastern judicial district by the judge of the middle district or in the middle judicial district by the judge of the eastern district, provided it is mutually agreed by and between the judges of each of said districts that the public interest demands it.

SEC. 5. That all laws and parts of laws so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 77, providing for the printing of petitions and memorials in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is a very important matter. I think it would save the Government a great deal of money by letting—

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made and the resolution goes over.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that it will take considerable discussion before the resolution is passed, and I think we had better hurry along.

The next business on the calendar was House concurrent resolution No. 9, authorizing the printing in one document the act to increase temporarily the Military Establishment, the registration regulations, and the proclamation of the President fixing June 5, 1917, as date of registration.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. Let it go over. That is all gone by.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2447) to prohibit the use of foods and feeds in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and authorizing and directing the President to commandeer existing stocks of distilled spirits for the manufacture of munitions, and for other military and hospital supplies, if the public interest requires it, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It might be indefinitely postponed, if no one has any objection, because it was practically disposed of in the food-control bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the indefinite postponement of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1004) to provide for the retirement of officers and employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Lighthouse Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1005) to regulate the salaries of keepers of lighthouses was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 993) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I think that bill might as well go over. It carries a good many items.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

INSPECTION OF STEAM VESSELS.

The bill (S. 1544) to provide for appeals from decisions of boards of local inspectors of steam vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That is quite a lengthy bill. I see the report is a very short one, but there is no explanation in the report. I should like the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who reported the bill and who, I believe, also introduced it, to explain what changes of existing law are provided in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no provision in the existing law for appeals from the decision of the local inspectors. The object is to provide an appeal from their decision. It grows out of the accident in Chicago some time ago. I think it is a desirable provision to make. It seems to be particularly wanted by all those who favor promoting the safety of these vessels and proper inspection.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any person peculiarly interested in any decision or action of any board of local inspectors of steam vessels shall feel himself aggrieved by such decision or action, he may appeal therefrom to the supervising inspector of the district, and a like appeal shall be allowed from any decision or action of a supervising inspector to the Supervising Inspector General, whose decision, when approved by the Secretary of Commerce, shall be final: Provided, however, That application for such reexamination of the case by a supervising inspector or by the Supervising Inspector General shall be made within 30 days after the decision or action appealed from shall have been rendered or taken: And provided further, That in all cases reviewed under the provisions of this act where the issue is the suspension or revocation of the license of a licensed officer, such officer shall be allowed to be represented by counsel and to testify in his own behalf.

SEC. 2. That whenever there shall be a disagreement between the local inspectors in regard to any matter before them for decision, they shall report the case to the supervising inspector of the district, who shall investigate and decide the same, and any supervising inspector may, upon his own motion, review any decision or action of any board of local inspectors within his district, and in like manner the Supervising Inspector General may review any decision or action of any supervising inspector or board of local inspectors, and the decision of the Supervising Inspector General in such case shall, when approved by the Secretary of Commerce, be final.

SEC. 3. That any decision or action reviewed by the Supervising Inspector General or by any supervising inspector, as provided in section 1 of this act, may be revoked, changed, or modified by such reviewing officer, who shall have power to administer oaths and to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses by a similar process as in the district courts of the United States; and the disbursing clerk, Department of Commerce, shall pay, on properly certified vouchers, such fees to any witness, so summoned, for his actual travel and attendance, as shall be officially certified to by the officer reviewing the case, not exceeding the rate allowed for fees to witnesses for travel and attendance in the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such regulations as may be necessary to secure a proper enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That section 4452 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 6 of the act of March 3, 1905, is hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERING AND MANNING OF VESSELS.

The bill (S. 1545) to amend the act of March 3, 1913, entitled "An act to regulate the offcoring and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4463. Any vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated unless she shall have in her service and on board such complement of licensed officers and crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, as may, in the judgment of the local inspectors who inspect the vessel, be necessary for her safe navigation. The local inspectors shall make in the certificate of inspection of the vessel an entry of such complement of officers and crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, which may be changed from time to time by indorsement on such certificate by local inspectors by reason of change of conditions or employment. Such entry or indorsement shall be subject to a right of appeal, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of Commerce, to the supervising inspector and from him to the Supervising Inspector General, who shall have the power to revise, set aside, or affirm the said determination of the local inspectors.

"If any such vessel is deprived of the services of any number of the crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage if, in the judgment of the master, she is sufficiently manned for such voyage: Provided, That the master shall ship, if obtainable, a number equal to the number of those whose services he has been deprived of by desertion or casualty, who must be of the same grade or of a higher rating with those whose places they fill. If the master shall fail to explain in writing the cause of such deficiency in the crew, including certificated lifeboat men, separately stated, to the local inspectors within 12 hours of the time of the arrival of the vessel at her destination, he shall be liable to a penalty of $50. If the vessel shall not be manned as provided in this act, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of $100, or in case of an insufficient number of licensed officers to a penalty of $500."

SEC. 2. That the board of local inspectors shall make an entry in the certificate of inspection of every ocean and coastwise seagoing merchant vessel of the United States propelled by machinery, and every ocean-going vessel carrying passengers, the minimum number of licensed deck officers required for her safe navigation according to the following scale:

That no such vessel shall be navigated unless she shall have on board and in her service one duly licensed master.

That every such vessel of 1,000 gross tons and over, propelled by machinery, shall have in her service and on board three licensed mates, who shall stand in three watches while such vessel is being navigated, unless such vessel is engaged in a run of less than 400 miles from the port of departure to the port of final destination, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates; and every vessel of 200 gross tons and less than 1,000 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have two licensed mates.

That every such vessel of 100 gross tons and under 200 gross tons, propelled by machinery, shall have on board and in her service one licensed mate, but if such vessel is engaged in a trade in which the time required to make the passage from the port of departure to the port of destination exceeds 24 hours, then such vessel shall have two licensed mates.

That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent local inspectors from increasing the number of licensed officers on any vessel subject to the inspection laws of the United States if, in their judgment, such vessel is not sufficiently manned for her safe navigation: Provided, That this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, yachts, or motor boats as defined in the act of June 9, 1910, or to wrecking vessels.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for the master, owner, agent, or other person having authority to permit an officer of any vessel to take charge of the deck watch of the vessel upon leaving or immediately after leaving port, unless such officers shall have had at least 6 hours off duty within the 12 hours immediately preceding the time of sailing, and no licensed officer on any ocean or coastwise vessel shall be required to do duty to exceed 9 hours of any 24 while in port, including the date of arrival, or more than 12 hours of any 24 at sea, except in a case of emergency when life or property is endangered. Any violation of this section shall subject the person or persons guilty thereof to a penalty of $100.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he had not just as lief have the bill changed so as to read that—

No vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall be navigated—

Instead of saying that—

Any vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that change.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I suggest that the bill be amended in the way I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 6, before the word "vessel," it is proposed to strike out the word "Any," and to insert the word "No"; and in line 8, after the word "shall," to strike out the word "not," so as to read:

No vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall be navigated—

And so forth.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state that the language of the bill follows the language of the original act. That is the reason for it. I think, however, the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut is an improvement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the bill follows the language of the original act, but later on in the bill, on page 3, line 13, the language is:

That no such vessel shall be navigated—

And so forth. I suggest the amendment in order to make the language uniform.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator's suggestion is a very good one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR MONTANA.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the bill (S. 70) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana. Montana is a very large State, as everyone knows, and it has only one judge. I make my statement from what occurred in the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] introduced the bill, and, as I remember, the Senate passed it at the last session of Congress, but the bill failed to be reached in the other House. The Senator from Montana made a very strong statement in committee showing the necessity for this additional judge for his State; and, in his absence, I thought the matter ought to be presented to the Senate. The bill is a very meritorious measure, and from the statement of the Senator from Montana, in which I have entire confidence, this additional judge is badly needed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was going to state that fact, but the Senator from North Dakota has withdrawn his objection, and has authorized me to so state.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply calling that matter to the attention of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge for the district of Montana, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That in case of disagreement in relation thereto between the judges of said district court the senior circuit judge of the ninth circuit shall make all rules for the transaction of the business of said court and all necessary orders for the division of the work and the assignment of cases for trial.

SEC. 3. That the clerk of the district court for the district of Montana and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFINED PRODUCTS OF PETROLEUM.

The bill (S. 1546) to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes by adding thereto the following provision:

Provided, however, That kerosene and lubricating oils made from refined products of petroleum which will stand a fire test of not less than 300° F. may be used as stores on board steamers carrying passengers, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. After the hour of 1 o'clock is it in order to move to take up any bill on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PITTMAN. I therefore move—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the bill the Senator desires to have considered, but I hope he will allow the next two bills on the calendar to be acted upon. They are of very great importance to the public interest.

Mr. PITTMAN. In view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will delay making the motion until after the bills to which he has referred have been passed and then will make the motion. The bill which I desire to have considered is one that the Council of National Defense has urged the Committee on Mines and Mining to bring to the attention of the Senate. It deals with the question of explosives and is designed to prevent explosives from being unlawfully in the possession of anyone.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are now operating, as I understand, under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think unanimous consent was given to proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. I asked the parliamentary question as to whether I could move to take up the bill I have in mind. Of course, if the Senate is operating under a unanimous-consent agreement I can not make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no unanimous agreement regularly entered into by the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then, after the two bills referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts are acted upon, I will move to take up the bill to which I refer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not do that this morning. This is the first chance we have had to sound the calendar. We will reach the bill to which the Senator refers, as well as the other bills, if we go right along. Of course if we waste time, we will not reach them.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will withdraw the motion and the notice.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to make a request for unanimous consent. I do not know whether or not he did so.

Mr. PITTMAN. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar has been taken up in regular order. The Chair is not aware of any unanimous-consent agreement.

REQUISITIONING OF ENEMY VESSELS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senate has passed over the bill (S. 1797) to authorize the President, in time of war or of national emergency, to requisition or take over ships, boats, and other water craft for the use of the Government. The legislation designed to be covered by that bill has been enacted in another measure. I therefore move that Senate bill 1797 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVIGATION OF MOTOR BOATS.

The bill (S. 1547) to amend section 5 of the motor-boat law approved June 9, 1910, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 5 of the motor-boat law passed June 9, 1910, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That every motor boat subject to any of the provisions of this act, and also all vessels propelled by machinery, other than by steam, more than 65 feet in length, shall carry either life preservers, life belts, or buoyant cushions or ring buoys or other device, to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, sufficient to sustain every person on board and so placed as to be readily accessible. All motor boats, whether propelled by steam, gasoline, fluid of any nature, or otherwise, and whether engaged in the business of carrying passengers for hire, towing for hire, fishing for hire, or carrying freight for hire, or motor boats owned and operated by any person, firm, or corporation in the conducting and carrying on of any commercial business or pursuit, shall carry one life preserver of the sort prescribed by the regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors for every passenger carried, and no such motor boat, whether engaged in the business of carrying passengers for hire, towing for hire, fishing for hire, or carrying freight for hire, or owned and operated by any person, firm, or corporation in the conducting and carrying forward of any commercial business or pursuit, shall be operated or navigated except in charge of a person duly licensed for such service by the local board of inspectors. Whenever any person claiming to be competent to operate a motor boat offers himself for a license the board of local inspectors shall make diligent inquiry as to his character and merits, and said board of local inspectors shall, by written examination, determine whether or not said applicant possesses the required knowledge and skill to carry out the services for which said applicant seeks license, within the district and under such limitations as are set forth in the application. If said board of inspectors from its inquiry and written examination determines that said applicant is of such trustworthy character and merit, and possesses such requisite knowledge and skill as to warrant the granting of a license, said board shall grant said applicant a license for such a term and within such limits as said board of local inspectors may prescribe in said license; but any such license may be revoked or suspended by said board upon such terms or conditions as said board may prescribe for misconduct, gross negligence, intemperance, recklessness in navigation, or violation of law on the part of holder: Provided That motor boats shall not be required to carry licensed officers except as required in this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NUMBERING AND RECORDING OF UNDOCUMENTED VESSELS.

The bill (S. 1549) to require numbering and recording of undocumented vessels was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every undocumented vessel, operated in whole or in part by machinery, owned in the United States and found on the navigable waters thereof, except public vessels, and vessels not exceeding 16 feet in length measured from end to end over the deck excluding sheer, temporarily equipped with detachable motors, shall be numbered. Such numbers shall be not less in size than 3 inches and painted or attached to each bow of the vessel in such manner and color as to be distinctly visible and legible.

SEC. 2. That the said numbers, on application of the owner or master, shall be awarded by the collector of customs of the district in which the vessel is owned and a record thereof kept in the customhouse of the district in which the owner or managing owner resides. No numbers not so awarded shall be carried on the bows of such vessels.

SEC. 3. That notice of destruction or abandonment of such vessels or change in their ownership shall be furnished within 10 days by the owners to the collectors of customs of the districts where such numbers were awarded. Such vessel sold into another customs district may be numbered anew in the latter district.

SEC. 4. That the penalty for violation of any provision of this act shall be $10, for which the vessel shall be liable and may be seized and proceeded against in the district court of the United States in any district in which such vessel may be found. Such penalty, on application, may be mitigated or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Commerce shall make such regulations as may be necessary to secure proper execution of this act by collectors of customs and other officers of the Government.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect six months after its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSERVATION OF FOOD.

The bill (S. 2463) to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That bill has been disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill should be stricken from the calendar, as it has already been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Chair is advised that it has been indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That bill was reported from the Agricultural Committee and has been disposed of. It should be stricken from the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that that action has been taken.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

NAVY RATION.

The bill (S. 2495) to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes so as to read as follows:

Forty cents shall in all cases be deemed the commutation price of the Navy ration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

"CONSTITUTIONAL SOURCES OF THE LAWS OF WAR" (S. DOC. NO. 86).

The resolution (S. Res. 100) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on June 9, 1917, entitled "Constitutional sources of the laws of war," by Horace L. B. Atkinson, of the Washington (D. C.) bar, be printed as a Senate document.

DISTRICT JUDGES, STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

The bill (S. 746) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the northern and southern judicial districts in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be for each of the two judicial districts in the State of Mississippi a district judge of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation prescribed by law in respect to district judges of the United States: Provided, That the judge now acting in both said districts shall continue to act in both said districts until a judge is appointed and qualified for the southern district as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the district judge now holding office and acting for both said districts shall be assigned to and hereafter be the district judge for the northern district in said State.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint the district judge for the southern district in said State, who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said southern judicial district, possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said southern judicial district as are now possessed and performed by the district judge acting for both said districts in said State.

Sec. 4. That terms of court may be held at the places and in the manner now prescribed by law in the southern judicial district by the judge of the northern district or in the northern judicial district by the judge of the southern district, provided it is mutually agreed by and between the judges of each of said districts that the public interest demands it.

Sec. 5. That all laws and parts of laws so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1419) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1766) to authorize the President to appoint Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have some explanation of this bill. It is quite unusual for Congress to direct the President to take this course.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MANUFACTURE, STORAGE, ETC., OF EXPLOSIVES.

The bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the words "public safety," to insert "except as in this act provided," so as to make the section read:

That when the United States is at war it shall be unlawful to manufacture, distribute, store, use, or possess powder, explosives, blasting supplies, or ingredients thereof, in such manner as to be detrimental to the public safety, except as in this act provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 in the following words:

Sec. 2. That upon the passage of this act the President of the United States is authorized, empowered, and directed to prepare, make, and promulgate by public proclamation such rules and regulations in the interest of public safety as he may deem necessary governing the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, or possession for necessary and proper purposes when the United States is at war, all such powder, explosives, blasting supplies, and the ingredients thereof: Provided, The President may by proclamation from time to time make such alterations, modifications, and amendments to such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and which the public safety may permit or require: Provided further, That it shall not be deemed to be detrimental to the public safety and shall not be unlawful within the meaning of this act to manufacture, distribute, store, use, or possess powder, explosives, blasting supplies, or the ingredients thereof, when the same shall be done in compliance with such rules and regulations.

Sec. 3. That in order to carry out the provisions of this act and the directions contained therein, the Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to employ such persons, without regard to civil-service requirements, and to utilize such agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States, Territories, subdivisions, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States, Territories, subdivisions, and municipalities thereof shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act when acting by the direction of the Bureau of Mines: Provided, That the employment of any person under the provisions of this act shall not exempt any such person from military service under the provisions of the selective-draft law approved May 18, 1917.

Sec. 4. That any person or corporation who violates the provisions of this act, or any of the rules and regulations made, established, and promulgated under the provisions of this act, shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than three years, or both.

Sec. 5. That section 1 of this act shall take effect 30 days after the proclamation of the President promulgating such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary.

And to insert:

Sec. 2. That the words "explosive" and "explosives" when used herein shall mean gunpowders, powders used for blasting, all forms of high explosives, blasting materials, fuses, detonators, and other detonating agents, smokeless powders, and any chemical compound or mechanical mixture that contains any oxidizing and combustible units, or other ingredients, in such proportions, quantities, or packing that ignition by fire, by friction, by concussion, by percussion, or by detonation of, or any part of the compound or mixture may cause such a sudden generation of highly heated gases that the resultant gaseous pressures are capable of producing destructive effects on contiguous objects, or of destroying life or limb, but shall not include small arms or shotgun cartridges: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the manufacture, under the authority of the Government, of explosives for their sale to or their possession by, the military or naval service of the United States of America.

Sec. 3. That the word "ingredients" when used herein shall mean the materials and substances capable by combination of producing one or more of the explosives mentioned in section 1 hereof.

Sec. 4. That the words "person" or "citizen of the United States of America," and the personal pronouns, when used herein, shall include States and other governmental entities and the municipal subdivisions thereof, individuals, firms, associations, societies, corporations, and all other bodies carrying on business in the United States, its Territories, and dependencies.

Sec. 5. That from and after 30 days after the passage and approval of this act no person shall have in his possession or purchase, accept, receive, sell, give, barter, or otherwise dispose of or procure explosives or ingredients, except as provided in this act: Provided, That the superintendent, foreman, or other duly authorized employee at a mine, quarry, or other work may, when licensed so to do, sell or issue, at the beginning of a shift, to any workman under him, such an amount of explosives or ingredients as may be required by that workman in the performance of his duties for that shift only, and the workman may purchase or accept the explosives or ingredients so sold or issued, but the person so selling or issuing same shall see that any unused explosives or ingredients are returned at the end of the shift, and that no explosives or ingredients are taken by the workman to any point not necessary to the carrying on of his duties for that shift.

Sec. 6. That nothing contained herein shall apply to explosives or ingredients while being transported upon vessels or railroad cars in conformity with statutory law or Interstate Commerce Commission rules.

Sec. 7. That from and after 60 days after the passage of this act no person shall manufacture explosives unless licensed so to do, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 8. That any licensee or applicant for license hereunder shall furnish such information regarding himself and his business, so far as such business relates to or is connected with explosives or ingredients at such time and in such manner as the Director of the Bureau of Mines or his authorized representative may request, excepting that those who have been or are at the time of the passage of this act regularly engaged in the manufacture of explosives shall not be compelled to disclose secret processes, costs, or other data unrelated to the distribution of explosives.

Sec. 9. That from and after 60 days after the passage and approval of this act every person authorized to sell, issue, or dispose of explosives shall keep a complete itemized and accurate record, showing each person to whom explosives are sold, given, bartered, or to whom or how otherwise disposed of, and the quantity and kind of explosives, and the date of each such sale, gift, barter, or other disposition, and this record shall be sworn to and furnished to the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representatives, whenever requested.

Sec. 10. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to issue licenses as follows:

(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

(b) Vendor's license, authorizing the purchase, possession, and sale of explosives or ingredients.

(c) Purchaser's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients.

(d) Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients, and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 4 above.

(e) Exporter's license, authorizing the licensee to export explosives, but no such license shall authorize exportation in violation of any proclamation of the President issued under any act of Congress.

(f) Importer's license, authorizing the licensee to import explosives.

(g) Analyst's, educator's, inventor's, and investigator's licenses authorizing the purchase, manufacture, possession, testing, and disposal of explosives and ingredients.

Sec. 11. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines shall issue licenses, upon application duly made, but only to citizens of the United States of America and to the nations that are at peace with them, and the citizens, corporations, firms, and associations thereof, and he may, in his discretion, refuse to issue a license when he has reason to believe, from facts of which he has knowledge or reliable information, that the applicant is disloyal or hostile to the United States of America, or that, if the applicant is a firm, association, society, or corporation, its controlling stockholders or members are disloyal or hostile to the United States of America. The director may, when he has reason to believe on like grounds that any licensee is so disloyal or hostile, revoke any license issued to him. Any applicant to whom a license is refused or any licensee whose license is revoked by the said director may, at any time within 30 days after notification of the rejection of his application or revocation of his license, apply for such license or the cancellation of such revocation to the Council of National Defense, which shall make its order upon the director either to grant or to withhold the license.

Sec. 12. That any person desiring to manufacture, sell, export, import, store, or purchase explosives or ingredients, or to keep explosives or ingredients in his possession, shall make application for a license, which application shall state, under oath, the name of the applicant; the place of birth or organization; whether native born or naturalized citizen of the United States of America; if a naturalized citizen, the date and place of naturalization; business in which engaged; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients which during the past six months have been purchased, disposed of, or used by him; the amount and kind of explosives or ingredients now on hand; whether sales, if any, have been made to jobbers, wholesalers, retailers, or consumers; the kind of license to be issued, and the kind and amount of explosives or ingredients to be authorized by the license; and such further information as the Director of the Bureau of Mines may, by rule, from time to time require.

Applications for vendor's, purchaser's, or foreman's licenses shall be made to such officers of the State, Territory, or dependency having jurisdiction in the district within which the explosives or ingredients are to be sold or used, having the power to administer oaths as may be designated by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, who shall issue the same in the name of such director. Such officers shall be entitled to receive from the applicant a fee of 50 cents for each license issued. They shall keep an accurate record of all licenses issued in manner and form to be prescribed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to whom they shall make reports from time to time as may be by rule issued by the director required. The necessary blanks and blank records shall be furnished to such officers by the said director. Licensing officers shall be subject to removal for cause by the Director of the Bureau of Mines, and all licenses issued by them shall be subject to revocation by the director as provided in section 11.

SEC. 13. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint in each State and in Alaska an explosives inspector, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to see that this act is faithfully executed and observed. Each such inspector shall receive a salary of $2,400 per annum. He may at any time be detailed for service by said director in the District of Columbia or in any State, Territory, or dependency of the United States. All additional employees required in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be appointed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

SEC. 14. That it shall be unlawful for any person to represent himself as having a license issued under this act, when he has not such a license, or as having a license different in form or in conditions from the one which he in fact has, or without proper authority make, cause to be made, issue or exhibit anything purporting or pretending to be such license, or intended to mislead any person into believing it is such a license, or to refuse to exhibit his license to any peace officer, Federal or State, or representative of the Bureau of Mines.

SEC. 15. That no inspector or other employee of the Bureau of Mines shall divulge any information obtained in the course of his duties under this act regulating the business of any licensee, or applicant for license, without authority from the applicant for license or from the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

SEC. 16. That every person authorized under this act to manufacture or store explosives or ingredients shall clearly mark and define the premises on which his plant or magazine may be and shall conspicuously display thereon the words "Explosives—keep off."

SEC. 17. That no person, without the consent of the owner or his authorized agents, except peace officers, the Director of the Bureau of Mines and designated employees thereof, shall be in or upon any plant or premises on which explosives are manufactured or stored, or be in or upon any magazine premises on which explosives are stored; nor shall any person discharge any firearms or throw or place any explosives or inflammable bombs at, on, or against any such plant or magazine premises, or cause the same to be done.

SEC. 18. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying into effect this act.

SEC. 19. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act, or any rules or regulations made thereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 20. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to investigate all explosions and fires which may occur or which since the commencement of the present war have occurred in mines, quarries, factories, warehouses, magazines, houses, cars, boats, conveyances, and all places in which explosives or the ingredients thereof are manufactured, transported, stored, or used, and shall, in his discretion, report his findings, in such manner as he may deem fit, to the proper Federal or State authorities, to the end that if such explosion has been brought about by a willful act the person or persons causing such act may be proceeded against and brought to justice; or, if said explosion has been brought about by accidental means, that precautions may be taken to prevent similar accidents from occurring. In the prosecution of such investigations the employees of the Bureau of Mines are hereby granted the authority to enter the premises where such explosion or fire has occurred, to examine plans, books, and papers, to administer oaths to, and to examine all witnesses and persons concerned, without let or hindrance on the part of the owner, lessee, operator, or agent thereof.

SEC. 21. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to utilize such agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States, Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof and the District of Columbia, in the execution of this act, and all agents, agencies, and all officers of the United States and of the several States and Territories, dependencies, and municipalities thereof, and the District of Columbia, shall hereby have full authority for all acts done by them in the execution of this act when acting by the direction of the Bureau of Mines.

SEC. 22. That for the enforcement of the provisions of this act, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and including supplies, equipment, expenses of traveling and subsistence, and for the purchase and hire of animal-drawn or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and boats and upkeep of same, and for every other expense incident to the enforcement of the provisions of this act, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 shall be expended in the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that this is a very important bill, and that it is completely changed from the provisions of the bill as it passed the House. I notice that it carries an appropriation of $400,000. The House bill carried nothing. I have not had time to study the bill at all. It seems to me there ought to be some discussion on this bill and some little attention given to it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. The bill as it came from the House was recommended by the department, but I can not see that there is any recommendation here in the report as to the amendments that have been offered by the Senate committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the only distinction between this bill and the House bill is this: The House bill delegated authority to the Bureau of Mines to make any rules and regulations it saw fit to make in the matter. The Senate committee was not willing to delegate that authority. Therefore, in conjunction with the Bureau of Mines and the agents of the various powder companies, the committee worked out a definite set of laws as embraced in this amended bill.

While the report does not say anything about their being approved, the hearings do say that. For instance, in the hearings we had before the committee on this particular bill Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn, president of the War College at that time; Mr. Francis S. Peabody, of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense; Prof. Charles E. Munroe, dean of the George Washington University, of the consulting explosives department; Mr. Van H. Manning, director of the Bureau of Mines; Mr. William Coyne, chief chemist of the Du Pont Powder Co.; Mr. G. G. Rhenby, manager of the Hercules Powder Co.; and Mr. G. S. Rice, of the Bureau of Mines. While the report does not so state, each and all of these witnesses read this bill, as is shown by the hearings, and approved it.

The real objection by the business interests of the country to the House bill was that it simply delegated the authority to make any rules and regulations that the bureau might see fit to make. This bill does not delegate any authority. It simply states that the institutions must have a license to carry on their business; and it is simply a method of preventing powder from getting into the hands of those who might use it for unlawful purposes by having a license check upon those who are entitled to use it. That is practically all that the bill amounts to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state also that the committee carefully considered this bill, and referred it to a subcommittee. That subcommittee reported it to the full committee, and the full committee went over it for several days. It is modeled somewhat after the English act concerning explosives. It seems to me that it is a mighty good measure, and that it ought to pass as soon as possible.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this money is to be expended, I suppose, under the direction of the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. The House thought that the allotment of the appropriation to the Bureau of Mines was sufficient to take care of what they intended to do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. Manning said that that was not the case.

Mr. SMOOT. In the committee amendment to the House bill there is an appropriation of $400,000. Evidently the director of the bureau, if he has recommended this, intends to do a great deal more work along this line than the House intended should be done under the House bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that is undoubtedly true, because a condition arose in this country between the time of the preparation of the House bill and the preparation of the Senate bill which required immediate action by the Government, and very strenuous action. The Industrial Workers of the World conditions broke out in this country between those dates, and brought to the notice of the Government the very strenuous immediate action which should be taken. The Council of National Defense, represented in this hearing by Gen. Kuhn, were exceedingly urgent that this power be put in their hands immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the object of the bill. I think it is a good one. The only thing I was asking about was the large appropriation that is asked for here, and whether or not it is really necessary.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was the reason of it. They wanted to have the power to send out these agents and seek this unlawful powder.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole thing will go into conference, of course.

Mr. PITTMAN. It will all go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the House conferees will have their idea of it, and the Senate conferees theirs, and then it can be thrashed out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment just stated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but some of its provisions are very objectionable to me. I do not think that any exigency exists at the present time sufficient to warrant the passage of the bill.

I have had no opportunity to examine the bill, and know of its terms only from just having heard it read. As I understand its terms, it commits to the Federal Government the power to license small dealers in any form of explosives in the smallest cities or precincts of the United States. It superimposes the Federal authority upon the States and establishes a licensing system that certainly must be obnoxious to any person who has any idea as to the powers of the States to regulate their own internal affairs. No person can sell or purchase powder or any explosive without obtaining a Federal license. This will prove burdensome and oppressive.

I do not think, as I said a moment ago, that there has anything developed, notwithstanding the statements of my friend with reference to the activities of the Industrial Workers of the World, to warrant the passage of a measure so drastic as this one, which so interferes with the rights of the States and the rights of local communities to control their own domestic affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator remember whether the operation of the bill is confined to the duration of the war, particularly the licensing system?

Mr. KING. I was going to ask the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is.

Mr. KING. It seems to me it is a bill to create a number of offices, to enlarge the powers of another bureau of the Government, and to give places to a multitude of officials. I think the States will be sufficiently active in the suppression of violence, sedition, and the acts of the Industrial Workers of the World and others who plot against the peace of their communities and will deal with the acts and omissions herein denominated crimes.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the passage of this bill will lead to conflicts between the domestic authorities, the State authorities, and the Federal officials.

I shall not oppose its passage. I shall vote against it. I think it is unwise, unnecessary, and very improvident legislation. The evils sought to be corrected can be dealt with in other forms, and the obnoxious system of Federal license being imposed upon the people with respect to matters wholly local and domestic thus avoided.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say that the difficulty really with the States in this matter is that some States have laws relating to it and other States have none whatever, and on that account there being no system, as it is now, there ought to be some national authority connected with the direction of the war that will control these things. It is limited to the duration of the war. It seems to me that it is a most excellent measure.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not believe the bill should pass. It seems to be an unwarranted restriction on the ordinary conduct of business of certain kinds well established and generally needed throughout the country.

As I understand the provisions of the bill, no one can sell these explosives without a license. If a man keeps dynamite and explosives of that kind, a most necessary article used in the ordinary industrial affairs of the community and the country, he can not sell this stuff, as I understand it, without a license. I do not believe that ought to be done. I am opposed to the measure on that account, and I hope the bill will not pass. I see no necessity for it. Certainly in my State it is not needed. We have a mine inspector who looks after the safety of the miners both in the examination of the explosives and the places where the miners work. The State officials will do this under proper regulation. All dealers in ammunition and explosives are regulated to any extent that has been thought necessary by the local authorities. It seems to me that this measure is unnecessary and will be an undue and unwarranted restriction, and I do not think it ought to be passed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word with reference to the bill. I was one of the subcommittee that gave the subject considerable consideration. We went into the matter quite thoroughly. The subcommittee found that there were a great number of States that had no efficient laws governing the sale and disposition of explosives. We thought that under present exigencies some Federal legislation was necessary to govern the handling, the dealing in, and the sale of explosives; that it was necessary really for the safety and welfare of the Nation that there be a Federal law at this time upon the subject, and hence this bill, and the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mention has been made of the fact that a great number of officers are provided for in the bill. I think it is a mistake to suppose that any unwarranted expense to the Government will be incurred on that account. One Federal inspector, and one only, is provided for each State in the Union. That will provide for as few inspectors as will be needed for the proper administration of the law. If additional employees are found necessary, they may be appointed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

I believe, among the many measures that we have considered pertaining to the national security and defense, this measure ranks among the most important, and I think the Senate would be a little derelict perhaps in its duty unless it passed some legislation of this kind at this time. I do not believe that any study of the subject will result in bringing forward a better and more wholesome bill than the one now under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. There is this provision in the bill:

That not to exceed $10,000 shall be expended in the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Where are they to be used? Here in the District?

Mr. STERLING. No; not alone here in the District. I will say to the Senator, without now having examined that provision particularly, they were meant to be used by inspectors in the several States for the purpose of visiting places where explosives are kept and inspecting conditions there. That is the idea.

Mr. SMOOT. There could not be very many of them. There could not be one for very many States, because only $10,000 is provided for the purchase of them.

Mr. STERLING. I know; but it is not supposed that they will be needed generally in all States. The object is to provide for some means of conveyance when necessary, and we put this limitation upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think of course that the $10,000 will be spent, and I think more than likely it will be spent for the purchase of these automobiles in the District of Columbia. I was wondering whether that was really necessary.

Mr. STERLING. The committee concluded that some provision was necessary for an expenditure of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I will admit that there is a limitation, because if this proviso was not in the bill they could spend any part of the $400,000 that they desired for that very purpose. So I am not complaining of the limitation, but I wanted to know where they were going to use the motors.

Mr. STERLING. It seems to me that for a work so important, $10,000 to be expended for the purchase of motors for the purpose of inspection and otherwise is a very small amount. The limitation will prevent a very general use.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question before he takes his seat. I notice that there is a provision in the bill which says it shall not include small arms. The Senator is familiar with the fact that there is a law against carrying concealed weapons, I think, in every State in the Union. Under those circumstances, why are small arms and cartridges excepted from the terms of the bill? It seems to me that it would promote the peace and happiness of this country about as much as any other one thing almost to have the control of small arms and cartridges in the hands of licensed dealers only, and that the plan of keeping the peace in the various States would be better upheld. Can the Senator state why they were excepted?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, now, it simply occurs to me that the States generally have regulated the buying and the handling of small arms, and that perhaps it would serve no particularly useful purpose to incorporate a provision in the bill with regard to small arms.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator accept an amendment to strike out the words "but shall not include small arms," on page 4 of the bill, in line 5?

If I may be permitted to make this further statement about it at such a time as we are now having, when our country is at war, it seems to me the use of small arms and small-arms ammunition is a very serious matter which the Government should control, especially if we undertake to control other things of like character. They are under the ban of the law in every State. It is against the law of each and every State for a citizen to carry concealed weapons. I do not think there is an exception to that rule.

Surely if we are legislating on the matter we ought to take steps that will carry out the full intent and purpose of this act, which I think is a very worthy one. I see no objection to the bill, and I shall vote for it. At the same time, I think we ought to include this very important matter. We know from actual experience and from every-day statements in the papers that one of the principal causes of the riots and killings that occur daily in the country is the use of small arms in violation of law, and now that we have an opportunity to correct this abuse and this great trouble it seems to me it would be very wise to strike that provision out. If I have the opportunity, I desire to amend that part of the bill so as to strike out "small arms or." That would be all that would be necessary.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to enable me to ask a question of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the floor. I would be delighted to answer the question, however.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator from Tennessee to advocate the turning over to the Federal Government of the police power that clearly belongs to the State to control the use of firearms and the use of powder and things of that character? It seems to me, Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee takes that position he would deprive the States of all police powers and consolidate in the Federal Government all the power and authority to manage the minutest thing that comes within the purview of the State.

Mr. McKELLAR. The management of pistols and cartridges might be a very minute thing, but it is a very serious thing when riots and killings occur. I want to say to the Senator that I had nothing in the world to do with this bill. I am not on the committee. I am not advocating it especially, but when a committee of the Senate has reported out a bill making it "unlawful to manufacture, distribute, store, use, or possess powder, explosives, blasting supplies, or ingredients thereof, in such manner as to be detrimental to the public safety" during the war I imagine that that is a matter of Federal concern. I imagine that the gentlemen who are on the committee have carefully examined the constitutional questions and settled that matter for themselves before they reported the bill out of the committee.

I am rather inclined to think just from casual observation and from the very casual thought that I have given it since I came into the Chamber a few moments ago that if it is constitutional for larger quantities of powder or larger cartridges or larger sticks of dynamite it is certainly constitutional in the management and control during the war of smaller cartridges, which I think are infinitely more important to the peace and welfare and good order of the country than the control of the larger portions of powder or dynamite or other explosives.

Mr. STERLING. I will simply say in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee as to whether an amendment would be acceptable and not striking out the provision in regard to small arms or shotguns—

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not care to strike out shotguns. I think that is all right. My motion is to strike out "small arms or," just three words.

Mr. BRADY. On what line and page?

Mr. McKELLAR. Page 4, line 5; just the three words "small arms or" in the middle of the line.

Mr. STERLING. I feel that I have no authority to accept that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit another interruption, it must be remembered that these small arms are not used in warfare, they are not used in sport to any extent, and, virtually and substantially, they are used only in the assassination or killing of human beings. They are rarely used for the killing of any animal other than a man or a woman. They are used for police purposes, and under circumstances where they have a legitimate use there is no reason in the world why they can not get such cartridges as they may desire. As a Senator has just suggested to me, the only kind of use these small arms is put to is for social purposes. That is a peculiar use of the word "social," but I believe it is fairly accurate. I think it ought to be stopped as far as possible, and I should like very much if the Senator would accept an amendment striking out the three words.

Mr. STERLING. I would not feel authorized to accept for the committee the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, and I do not know whether I would want to accept it on my own account or not. One problem, of course, which confronted the committee was to deal with this subject effectively from the national standpoint and yet not at the same time have provisions in the bill which would seem to interfere with the proper State authorities and the right of the States and of citizens of the States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me once more?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not the amendment directly in line with the intention of the Senator and with the intention of the committee? These small arms are used only for the purpose of violating the law, and of feloniously violating the law, if I may use the term. Would it not be directly in line with the purpose of the committee?

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the problem was, and the controlling thought of the committee I think was, to regulate and control the purchase and the use of explosives in such quantities and in such ways as might be detrimental to the national welfare, for example, the blowing up of public works, as bridges, munition plants, and matters of that kind. It was not thought that the use of small arms and the purchase of cartridges for use in small arms would be an evil that we need to particularly seek to remedy.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator this question: Do not the reports in the daily papers show that there are a hundred men killed by the use of small arms in this country where there is one killed by reason of the larger explosives? I have just been informed that I am a little mistaken about the ratio being 100 to 1, but 70 per cent come from the use of pistols carried in violation of the law.

Mr. STERLING. That perhaps may be true, but that happens whether in peace or in war and is a matter, under ordinary conditions, solely for State control and State regulation. If there is no national danger to be feared from the use of small arms or the purchase of cartridges for such arms, I do not believe we are quite authorized in providing here a prohibition against their use or their purchase.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move to strike out the three words "small arms or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been agreed to. A motion to amend the amendment is not in order. A motion to reconsider would be in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I reserve the right to offer it in the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not had the opportunity to study this bill as I would like. Ordinarily I would have some sympathy with the Senators who are suggesting the fact that the police power should be left to the States, but under present conditions I have no sympathy at all with their attitude. Senators only need to remember the terror with which the public was stricken some years ago when a gang of cutthroats went throughout the length and breadth of the land blowing up bridge shops and other manufacturing plants and extending from New Jersey through Ohio and Illinois to the Pacific slope. They were only able to do that because they had access to large quantities of explosives everywhere. Senators can not now visit any section of the country where any war supplies are being manufactured that they will not find at each particular plant officers representing the War Department, either State or National, on guard. Go to the bridges along our railroads, and you will find the guards there. Why? Because the public officials are fearing that some explosive may be used that would cause untold damage to those plants and to the public at this particular time.

I know of no sound reason why every bit of explosive in the country should not be under guard. I think the committee has done a real service in requiring every man who is handling explosives to take out a license of some kind or other so that he will be subject the more closely to the surveillance of the officials. I hope the bill may pass for the reasons I have given.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining. I was opposed to some of the sections in the pending bill. I attended one or two meetings at which the bill was considered, but at the meeting when final consideration was given to it I was compelled to be absent owing to a meeting of the Military Affairs Committee.

There are some very good features in the bill and there are some features that I think are very vicious. The statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] relative to what has been done in the past in blowing up bridges and other kinds of property, both public and private, is quite true, but I think that the control of explosives of this character, especially in a time of war, should not be vested in the chief of a bureau. It is a subject of enough importance to require action that should be taken by men who have had experience in large affairs.

The Bureau of Mines has certain functions to perform, but they are not war functions; they are functions that could be used, and will be used and properly used, in time of peace. After the bill becomes a law, if it is enacted, anyone desiring to purchase a little bit of powder or an explosive of any kind will have to have a license to do it. The proposed law says in section 5:

That from and after 30 days after the passage and approval of this act no person shall have in his possession or purchase, accept, receive, sell, give, barter, or otherwise dispose of or procure explosives, or ingredients, except as provided in this act.

The provisions of this act, among other things, are the following:

That from and after 60 days after the passage and approval of this act every person authorized to sell, issue, or dispose of explosives shall keep a complete itemized and accurate record, showing each person to whom explosives are sold, given, bartered, or to whom or how otherwise disposed of, and the quantity and kind of explosives, and the date of each such sale, gift, barter, or other disposition; and this record shall be sworn to and furnished to the Director of the Bureau of Mines, or his authorized representatives, whenever requested.

That is to say, if a farmer needs to buy a little powder to blow out a stump, it will be necessary for him to secure a license and a permit to buy that powder. I believe it is an unnecessary hardship placed upon the people of this country. But who is given authority to handle this great question?

Sec. 10. That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to issue licenses as follows:

(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

During these war times, while we are manufacturing munitions and war supplies of all kinds that should be directly under the supervision of the Secretary of War, we find that the man manufacturing must go not to the Secretary of War but to the Director of the Bureau of Mines to secure a license.

(a) Manufacturer's license, authorizing the manufacture, possession, and sale of explosives and ingredients.

(b) Vendor's license, authorizing the purchase, possession, and sale of explosives or ingredients.

How many millions of people in the United States during the coming year will have to go to some agent or representative to secure a license to buy a little powder?

It seems to me that we have gone entirely too far in this matter, and that we are placing restrictions in the bill which will harass and annoy almost every citizen of the United States who does business which requires the use of powder in any way. The bill reads:

(d) Foreman's license, authorizing the purchase and possession of explosives and ingredients and the sale and issuance of explosives and ingredients to workmen under the proviso to section 4 above.

That is a clause as to the subject matter of which there would be no objection to having the Director of the Bureau of Mines take charge; but let us look at subdivision (e), which is as follows:

(e) Exporter's license, authorizing the licensee to export explosives, but no such license shall authorize exportation in violation of any proclamation of the President issued under any act of Congress.

If a man desires to export explosives at this particular juncture, in a time of war who should have charge of such an important matter as that, the Secretary of War or the Director of the Bureau of Mines? For the Director of the Bureau of Mines to take charge of all the explosives and the licensing of the men who sell explosives to foreign countries, it seems to me, would be unfair and unjust.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to interruption?

Mr. BRADY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. From the Senator's remarks I think one might be led to infer that it would be a great hardship for the purchaser of explosives or anyone else to secure a license. I ask the Senator if he has given attention to the provision found on page 5 as to the application for licenses and to whom those applications shall be made? The Director of the Bureau of Mines, as the officer under whose general supervision all of this will come, will appoint an officer in each "State, Territory, or dependency having jurisdiction in the district within which the explosives or ingredients are to be sold or used, having the power to administer oaths," to whom the application for license may be made.

So in every county and possibly in every city of any considerable size there will probably be a person appointed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines to whom application for license may be made. So when the farmer who wants dynamite with which to blow out stumps goes to town, it will be an easy thing for him to step over to the officer who has charge of that matter and make application for his license. The committee had in mind the matter of convenience to those who wish to purchase explosives; they gave it considerable attention and came to the conclusion that that was the best way in which to provide for the issuing of such licenses, so that nobody would be particularly inconvenienced in making application for a license.

Mr. BRADY. That may be quite true; but after making the application the Senator will find, on page 9, that the bill reads:

Such officers shall be entitled to receive from the applicant a fee of 50 cents for each license issued.

If a farmer wants to buy a quarter of a dollar's worth of powder, he must first go and pay his 50 cents for a license for the privilege of buying it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BRADY. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. That license continues, however, during the war or during the full time that this bill is in effect. The farmer would not have to pay 50 cents every time he went out to buy powder?

Mr. BRADY. No; but he might want to buy powder for one occasion only.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would the Senator from Idaho feel that there was any safeguard whatever to keep that powder in any quantity whatever out of the hands of anarchists if the man who should claim to be a farmer could get powder without there being any trace of his having got it?

Mr. BRADY. I fully agree with the Senator from Nevada in that statement; but, on the other hand, if men are going to commit a crime in which they need to use explosives, such as dynamite or powder, they can very easily procure them under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but the officer will know they got them.

Mr. BRADY. Of course the officer would know they got them, but what good would that do after a man should have been killed?

Mr. PITTMAN. The officers of this country have the anarchists very well located.

Mr. BRADY. But the Director of the Bureau of Mines has not.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Director of the Bureau of Mines has his officers out in the States, and he will have agents there under this bill who are acquainted with such people. The license officers in each community are men who are acquainted with such people. If a man who is suspected of being an anarchist comes in for a license to buy powder, the sheriff's office being across the hall, that man is followed; he is detected. It must, however, be evident to the Senator that either we must stop the unlawful possession of powder or we must throw the doors open entirely. It is absolutely useless to build a gate and have no fence, or to build a fence and have no gate. If you are not going to require everyone who uses powder to be under the rule during the war, then you might just as well require no one to be under it, because the very one that you do not require to be under it would probably be the criminal.

If the Senator from Idaho can think of any way of which he approves, by which he can carry out the effect of this proposed act and at the same time excuse certain persons from obedience to it, I should like to hear it.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the whole matter could be controlled very easily and just as effectively as it will be controlled under this bill if you would license the wholesaler and the men who sell explosives in large quantities. It will be found by the reading of this bill that it simply creates another bureau; that it creates another unnecessary expense at this time. I am perfectly willing that this matter shall be properly controlled. I live in a section of country that has suffered from the effects of crimes committed by means of just such explosives as we are trying to control; but, at the same time, I think when we try to control them in the manner provided in this bill, we are going to annoy thousands of people and not accomplish the purpose which we desire to accomplish.

If the bill is a war measure, the subject matter with which it deals should be under the Secretary of War. Let the Secretary of War appoint the Director of the Bureau of Mines to do certain specific work, if he feels that he is capable of doing it and should do it; but during the time of war let us be big enough and broad enough to place authority where it can be used directly without consulting some one else. Wherever power is given in this bill to the Director of the Bureau of Mines, it should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of War; and that would be a wonderful improvement. The Secretary of War is the man who is responsible, in a way, for the explosives in this country.

When we come to the question of exporting explosives, I ask, whoever heard of the Bureau of Mines in this country or in any other country on earth having control of the exportation of all explosives during a time of war? I say it is ridiculous, and that, if you are going to pass this bill, before you do so you should change section 10 so as to give the authority to be granted to the Secretary of War, and not to the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think possibly we have got down to one question now, and that is as to whether or not this power should be vested in the Secretary of War or in the Director of the Bureau of Mines. The duties performed by the Director of the Bureau of Mines are much broader than the Senator from Idaho at present seems to realize. The War Department was in consultation with the Bureau of Mines with regard to this very bill. The Secretary of War has certainly duties enough on his shoulders now without assuming any more, and I do not think he desires to assume any additional duties. As a matter of fact, the Bureau of Mines today, by direction of the Council of National Defense, of which the Secretary of War is chairman, has had delegated to it the function of making a study of explosives. The Bureau of Mines to-day is experimenting in large explosives. It is the function of the Bureau of Mines to know all about explosives.

Mr. BRADY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. BRADY. The Bureau of Mines is doing that under the authority and direction of the Secretary of War—the man who should have the authority under this bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not under the Secretary of War entirely, but under the Council of National Defense, which includes several department chiefs besides the Secretary of War; as a matter of fact, it has been studying explosives ever since it was created. The Council of National Defense, when it wants statistics as to the location of explosives in this country or the ingredients of explosives, sends to the Bureau of Mines. The Bureau of Mines is the statistical department of explosives. The Bureau of Mines is prepared to go on with this work now.

Leaving the other questions just for a moment, the Senator from Idaho said that it is an inconvenience to the farmer coming into town who wants to blow out a stump to procure this license. The bill is only limited to the war. There are a thousand inconveniences during war. How, in the name of heaven, we can stand here and talk about personal inconvenience when we are deliberately voting that it is necessary to sacrifice human life at this time I can not see. It is not a question of inconvenience at all; that has no business being considered in this argument. It is a question of necessity. The necessity for controlling the explosives in this country and preventing those explosives getting into the hands of anarchists can not be denied by anyone, and is not denied by the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho thinks this a good bill in that particular, and yet, because it is an inconvenience to a certain class of people, he would like to exempt that class of people. If you exempt one class of people, then the anarchists become that class.

The committee has considered this bill in connection with the Director of the Bureau of Mines, in connection with the representatives of all of the great manufacturers of explosives in this country, in connection with the dean of the university here at Washington, who has a direct supervision over the experiments in explosives in that university. It has considered the bill with the business men, with the experts, and I have never yet heard one of those men complain of the inconvenience of it. The first time that I have heard that argument used is when it was used by a Senator on this floor.

I want to say that the mine operators, who use thousands of tons of explosives in my State, approve this bill; I want to say that this bill has been sent out to my State and not one complaint have I heard against it. I tell you that the great powder manufacturers of this country are not complaining about the inconvenience of being licensed. Everyone in this country who is opposed to anarchy and realizes the necessity of crushing it out is in favor of this bill and is willing to stand for the temporary inconvenience it may cause.

Mr. BRADY. It is not a question of personal inconvenience; it is a question of delegating this vast power to a bureau and involving the Treasury in unnecessary expense when the purpose can be accomplished by the machinery which we have already working.

Mr. PITTMAN. What machinery is that?

Mr. BRADY. No one is talking about inconvenience; I am talking about unnecessarily annoying people. No one is talking about not controlling the use of explosives; no man on this floor is more in favor of that than I am. I say it is a matter that should be controlled, and I want it controlled; but I also say that at the meetings of the committee which I attended the discussion was in regard to who should control the matter and how it should be controlled rather than on the real merits of the bill. I do not believe to this day that the Secretary of War has given his sanction to this measure in this particular respect. If he has done so, it has been since the meeting that I attended.

I am perfectly willing to intrust these matters to the Secretary of War, but I am not willing to intrust them to some bureau that will have an army of assistants all over the United States not cooperating or coordinating with other departments and involving large additional expenditures.

We have now in the War Department what might be called machinery for the purpose of detecting just such criminals as the Senator from Nevada suggests are at large in this land. No men are better prepared than the secret-service officers of the War Department to discover the criminals who desire to perpetrate crimes by the use of high explosives; they are in touch with the situation.

This is a war measure. The director of the Bureau of Mines is a peace officer. The Bureau of Mines is a splendid bureau; it has done excellent work, and I am willing at all times to give it additional powers when it is necessary for the development of our mineral resources, but when in time of war the question arises of licensing the exporters, manufacturers, vendors, and purchasers of high explosives and licensing foremen of manufacturing industries who use such explosives I say that the licensing authority should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of War and not in the hands of the Director of the Bureau of Mines.

We appropriate in this bill some $400,000 merely to start this measure on its way. The fees which will be collected will amount to three times as much during the fiscal year. It seems to me that the proper thing to do would be to place the matter directly in charge of the man who is responsible for all of the explosives used in this war, namely, the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee—

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I do not wish the suggestion I am about to make to apply to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] at all, but I want to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the fact that we are operating now under Rule VIII, and under that rule no Senator can speak more than once nor longer than five minutes. I hope the rule will be applied. I am very anxious to take up a bill which every Senator supposed would come up this morning at 2 o'clock. I hope this matter can be soon disposed of, and in the meantime I hope that the rule under which we are operating will be recognized and put into effect if we are to continue this debate. I hope we can get a vote soon, however, on the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not think I will take more than five minutes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the limitation of debate under the five-minute rule applies after 2 o'clock?

Mr. FLETCHER. It does in this instance, because we took up the calendar under Rule VIII, and we have been proceeding under that rule.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will not occupy more than five minutes, in any event.

Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I will state that we were confronted with certain conditions concerning which information was being spread broadcast. A great amount of inventive genius is being exercised in producing high explosives. Recently there was published a statement that an explosive had been discovered, a small quantity of which, only a grain or two, would blow up the Woolworth Building in New York City; and there was another statement to the effect that a dram of a certain explosive would blow up the Palisades of the Hudson River. Experiments in the production of high explosives are constantly being made, and it is now more important than ever before that there should be some control as to the sale and as to those who may buy such explosives.

Heretofore these high explosives have been used in mining more than in any other line of industry, and, naturally, the control of such a matter would come under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Mines. To the director of that bureau naturally applications would be made for information in regard to these matters and for suggestions as to what it would be best to do to prevent what might be frightful catastrophes. We know that the conditions are such in this country that enemies run at large, and unless some curb is placed upon the sale of explosives some terrible catastrophe may happen. There is no doubt in my mind of that.

Senators seem even to forget the fact that we are at war, and refer to conditions as if we were at peace. Mr. President, we must not forget that we are at war, and that the precautions necessary to be taken now would never be dreamed of in time of peace. We found that some of the States had laws regulating the sale of powder, dynamite, and explosives of that nature; but that is not true as to all the States. In the western section of the country usually the States have laws relating to these matters, but inasmuch as such small amounts of these high explosives can produce such fearful results, something in the nature of a regulation by the National Government in the sale of those explosives is necessary, in my judgment, in time of war, and this bill is limited to the time of war.

It is said that we are going to create an expensive bureau. That will not prove to be the case, because the operation of the bill is limited to the duration of the war. It is impossible to build up a bureau and have it become a permanent institution when it is limited only to war time, which is necessarily comparatively brief, and at all other times we are at peace.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRADY. Following the line of the Senator's argument, why not insert the words "Secretary of War," instead of "Director of the Bureau of Mines," and let the Secretary of War control this matter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because, in the first place, the Bureau of Mines is not under the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRADY. But this war is being carried on under the Secretary of War, and the Senator says this is a war measure.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all true; but there are certain things that are necessary to be done in other bureaus and in other departments of the Government, which, although they bear a certain relation to the War Department, need not necessarily be under the Secretary of War. I have no doubt that any request from the Secretary of War would be attended to with immediate diligence by the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. BRADY. But does not the Senator from Colorado think the request should come from the Director of the Bureau of Mines to the Secretary of War, rather than from the Secretary of War to the Director of the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not, because of the fact that practically nine-tenths of the explosives that are purchased in the United States are purchased for use in connection with metalliferous mining, coal mining, and various other kinds of mining, all of which is under the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. BRADY. On the other hand, the one-tenth may be the particular tenth that is used for the criminal purposes which have been suggested.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the object of this bill is to provide precautions to make it difficult for a person to get explosives. Knowing that an exposure could be made in the event of a purchase for unlawful purposes, it is hoped that a person criminally inclined will be deterred from buying any at all. For that reason it is provided that there shall be a register kept; that licenses shall be issued; that the purchaser shall sign his name; that he shall swear to the facts contained in the license as to what his occupation is, where he works, and all of those things, for the purpose of preventing a man of evil intentions making an attempt to buy high explosives.

We would not enact such a measure as this in time of peace; it would not be necessary in time of peace; but in time of war, unless we enact some such precautionary measure, a disaster may occur that will shock the entire United States because of our laxity in allowing the sale of high explosives. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to pass the bill.

Now, I want to say just a word in relation to small arms. It was to a large extent the purpose—at least it was my purpose—not to include anything in the bill that would inconvenience people more than was absolutely necessary; in other words, we wanted information as to sales; we wanted to place a curb on the unrestricted selling of explosives; but as to shot-gun and small-arms ammunition we felt that great catastrophes could not happen from such sources, and on that account we thought best not to include them, and thus to make the inconvenience to the public as light as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I want to reserve the right to offer in the Senate an amendment, in line 14, page 6, striking out the words "Director of the Bureau of Mines" and inserting the words "Secretary of War," and the same amendment to section 10, line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Johnson, Cal.	Lodge
Beckham	Fletcher	Johnson, S. Dak.	McCumber
Brady	France	Jones, N. Mex.	McKellar
Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	McNary
Calder	Gerry	Kenyon	Martin
Chamberlain	Gore	King	New
Curtis	Harding	Kirby	Norris
Dillingham	Husting	La Follette	Page

Pittman	Saulsbury	Smoot	Trammell
Polindexter	Shafroth	Sterling	Vardaman
Pomerene	Sheppard	Stone	Wadsworth
Ransdell	Smith, Ga.	Sutherland	Warren
Reed	Smith, Md.	Swanson	Watson

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on official business at the War Department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, the second amendment having been reserved.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the second amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What is the second amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment is to strike out and insert.

Mr. BRADY. Is it open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is open to amendment, the Senator from Idaho having reserved it.

Mr. BRADY. On line 14, page 6, I move to strike out the words "Director of the Bureau of Mines" and to insert the words "the Secretary of War." I do this for the reason, Mr. President, that I believe that when it comes to licensing manufacturers and exporters of munitions of war during the conflict the power should be vested in some officer higher than a bureau officer. I believe that the Secretary of War is entirely capable of administering this bill. I know that he has all the assistance that will be necessary to enforce the law, without creating a large additional army of salaried officers, and I believe that we can do no better at this time than to give this authority to the Secretary of War. For that reason I ask that my amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. BRADY. I ask for a division.

The amendment was rejected on a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the second amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move to strike out, in line 5, page 4, after the word "include," the words "small arms or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The bill seeks to control the sale and distribution of explosives. From the definition of explosives as contained in section 2 small-arms and shotgun cartridges are exempted by the provisions on line 5, page 4, which reads "but shall not include small-arms or shotgun cartridges." Those words the Senator from Tennessee seeks to strike out.

I think it is a wise provision to exempt small-arms and shotgun cartridges from the operation of this bill. I can not conceive why it should be contended that because this Nation is at war with the central European powers nobody should be allowed to go into a store and buy cartridges for a shotgun with which to shoot partridges without applying for a license to the Director of the Bureau of Mines here in Washington. It seems to me an absurdity to try to control small-arms ammunition and shotgun cartridges, which are not used for blowing up public structures in this country or for weakening our military defense or the Government's power of attack. I think the committee showed excellent judgment in excluding small-arms ammunition from the very drastic control which this bill seeks to impose upon the purchasers and the sellers of explosives. I trust that the amendment of the Senator will not prevail.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I fully agree with the statements made by the Senator from Connecticut. The committee very thoroughly discussed that particular provision of the bill, and I think it was practically unanimously agreed that it was much better to exempt small-arms and shotgun cartridges. The matter was not overlooked; it was, as I have said, very thoroughly discussed, and it was agreed by the committee that it was best to make the exemption as provided in the bill. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be defeated.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, before I vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee I should like to have some explanation as to his object in offering the amendment. From my standpoint I could not possibly vote for this bill if the amendment were adopted and the exemption were stricken out. It might be perfectly satisfactory in Tennessee, and in other States of the Union, and if the Senator from Tennessee is convinced that his amendment would operate for the safety of the country and would promote law and order and peace in the State of Tennessee I am perfectly willing to agree to the adoption of an amendment of this character applying to the State of Tennessee, but in the western portion of the country, with which I am somewhat familiar, such an amendment, if adopted, would operate very disastrously.

I do not care to go into the details as to the conditions along the border of the United States and in various Western States which are not upon the border. We have councils of defense co-operating with the national administration in practically every State in the West, and certainly in all the border States. We have councils of defense in every county in my State. They have so far done excellent work and are in thorough accord with the national administration.

Recently we had some little trouble in some portions of the Southwest. Any man who has had any experience at all knows that a law of this kind never deters the lawbreaker. The man who wants to break the law, the man who wants to commit murder is seldom deterred by any law against carrying concealed weapons. Certainly that is true in the western portion of the country, where there is a sparse population, and where it is hard for officers of the law to be reached at any moment.

There is now before the departments a proposal asking the assistance of Congress to a more material degree than it has ever been extended in eliminating predatory wild animals from the range and from the forest reserves in the West. One of the branches of the Council of National Defense and of the food administration, the cattlemen, who have just been here, have adopted a resolution asking for a large appropriation from Congress, and that the forest-reserve agents of the Government, and others, be supplied with additional arms and ammunition, traps, poison, etc., for the purpose of doing away with predatory animals. In my section of the country at times, as for instance last year, the jack rabbit devastated whole fields and successive crops of growing alfalfa. To prohibit the killing of animals of this kind—and this measure would practically prohibit it if its provisions are made to cover small-arms ammunition—to prohibit the use of small arms for purposes of this kind, for the purpose of ridding the country of mountain lions, bears, wolves, jack rabbits, and pests of that character, would cost us a good many thousand dollars in the western country.

It has been a good many years since I lived in Tennessee, but I know that during the time I lived there some of the citizens of that State might have opposed such a provision. However, it may be satisfactory to the people of Tennessee, and I am perfectly willing, if the Senator will confine it to the State of Tennessee, to have the amendment adopted. While I would not vote for it even then, I would not vote against the amendment; but, as applied to the United States, I will certainly oppose it, and hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not think this bill ought to pass. As I have already said, it will impose unnecessary restrictions on a legitimate and necessary business; but, however that may be, certainly this amendment ought not to be agreed to, even if the bill does pass. Under the amendment a man who wanted to go hunting could not buy a few cartridges for his rifle; he could not purchase cartridges for practice with a .22 caliber rifle or revolver unless he first procured a license.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has not examined the amendment and he has not examined the bill either probably, because the bill specifically permits shotguns to be used, and the amendment only applies to pistols.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand that. Of course that is plain enough now since the Senator who originated this wonderful amendment has explained it in detail; but, nevertheless, the fact is that no man could go out on an ordinary camp hunt and use a revolver or use a rifle or use cartridges of any kind or caliber without getting a license under this bill, if the proposed amendment should be adopted. Certainly there is no occasion and no necessity for a law of that kind. The Senator, I understand, says that small arms are bad things in some kinds of social intercourse—I believe he said—but probably they are accustomed to use razors in his State in certain circles. But, seriously, the amendment ought not to pass. We ought not to handicap people who have been accustomed to use small arms and who use them legitimately. They ought not to be prevented hereafter from the use of them by having to procure and pay for a permit to buy ammunition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BRADY. I simply want to say that, while I do not agree with some of the other members of the committee relative to the merits of the bill, I do not desire it to be presumed that simply because I can not have a proper man in charge of the execution of the law after it is passed, I am going to oppose the passage of the bill. I think this will be better than no law at all; but I do hope that before the bill finally becomes law, while it is in conference, that the members of the conference committee will see the error of their way, and designate the Secretary of War, instead of the Director of the Bureau of Mines, to have jurisdiction of the matter. Nevertheless, I feel that this is a needed measure, and so I shall give it my support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 2, page 2, line 7, after the word "territory," to strike out:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, or any amendment, modification, or revocation thereof, in relation to the branches of enemy or ally of enemy insurance companies in the United States, when such branches are under the management of citizens of the United States, and such branches, and the managers and trustees thereof, shall be subject to license by the Secretary of Commerce regulating the business thereof and the control and disposition of the funds thereof, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, with the approval of the President: Provided further, That the definition of "enemy" in this subdivision shall not include any person outside the United States residing outside of the territory of any nation, or ally of any nation, with which the United States is at war, in so far as such person does business with neutrals, allies of the United States, or with the Government or people of the United States, and such business is not connected directly or indirectly with any business done by such person within the territory of any nation or ally of any nation with which the United States is at war.

So as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. That the word "enemy," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean, for the purposes of such trading and of this act—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of any nation with which the United States is at war or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, after the words "may be," to strike out "citizens" and insert "natives, citizens"; and in line 9, after the word "war," to insert "other than citizens of the United States," so as to make the clause read:

(c) Such other individuals, or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "enemy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 25, after the word "territory," to strike out:

Provided, That the definition of "ally of enemy" in this subdivision shall not include any person outside the United States residing outside of the territory of any nation or ally of any nation with which the United States is at war, in so far as such person does business with neutrals, allies of the United States, or with the Government or people of the United States, and such business is not connected directly or indirectly with any business done by such person within the territory of any nation or ally of any nation with which the United States is at war.

So as to make the clause read:

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of such ally nation, or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 16, after the words "may be," to strike out "citizens," and insert "natives, citizens"; and in line 18, after the word "war," to insert "other than citizens of the United States," so as to make the clause read:

(c) Such other individuals, or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "ally of enemy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "date," to insert "of proclamation," so as to make the clause read:

The words "end of the war," as used herein, shall be deemed to mean the date of proclamation of exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, unless the President shall, by proclamation, declare a prior date, in which case the date so proclaimed shall be deemed to be the "end of the war" within the meaning of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 14, to insert:

The words "bank or banks" as used herein, shall be deemed to mean and include national banks, State banks, trust companies, or other banks or banking associations doing business under the laws of the United States, or of any State of the United States, and private bankers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 3, after the word "sell," to insert "loan or extend credit," so as to make the clause read:

(d) Buy or sell, loan or extend credit, trade in, deal with, exchange, transmit, transfer, assign, or otherwise dispose of, or receive any form of property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to strike out:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person in the United States, except with the license of the Secretary of Commerce, as hereinafter provided in section 5—

(a) To trade, or attempt to trade, with an enemy, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy, either directly or indirectly, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person with or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of whom such trade is conducted, or attempted to be conducted, is an enemy.

(b) To trade, or attempt to trade, with an ally of enemy, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an ally of enemy, either directly or indirectly, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person with or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of whom such trade is conducted, or attempted to be conducted, is an ally of enemy.

(c) To transport, or attempt to transport, an enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported, or attempted to be transported, is an enemy.

(d) To transport, or attempt to transport, an ally of enemy, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported, or attempted to be transported, is an ally of enemy.

And insert:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful—

(a) For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, granted to such person, or to the enemy, or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, to trade, or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting or taking part in such trade, directly or indirectly, for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

(b) For any person, except with the license of the President, or of such person as he may direct, to transport or attempt to transport into or from the United States any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that the person transported or attempted to be transported is such subject or citizen.

(c) For any person (other than a person in the service of the United States Government or of the Government of any nation, except that of an enemy or ally of enemy nation, and other than such persons or classes of persons as may be exempted hereunder by the President or by such person as he may direct), to send, or take out of, or bring into, or to attempt to send, or take out of, or bring into, the United States, any letter or other writing or tangible form of communication, except in the regular course of the mail; and it shall be unlawful for any person to send, take, or transmit, or attempt to send, take, or transmit, out of the United States, any letter or other writing, book, map, plan, or other paper, picture, or any telegram, cablegram, or wireless message, or other form of communication intended for or to be delivered, directly or indirectly, to an enemy or ally of enemy: Provided, however, That any person may send, take, or transmit out of the United States anything hereinbefore forbidden if he shall first submit the same to the President, or to such officer as the President may direct, and shall obtain the license or consent of the President or of such other officer, under such rules and regulations, and with such exemptions, as shall be prescribed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee striking out section 3 of the bill and inserting section 3, as proposed by the committee as just read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before section 3 as reported by the committee is agreed to I desire to say that it seems to me that the language in lines 15 to 17, on page 7, may be too broad and sweeping. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to this language:

Any other person with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy—

The term "reasonable cause" is one that is pretty comprehensive; and, as this is to be a penal statute, I inquire whether or not we can not employ some phrase a little more conservative than that?

In times of great excitement, as we all know, it may be that a jury would take something as reasonable cause and send somebody to the penitentiary when a man had no evil purpose or intent. I suggest that that section be passed over and that a little further consideration be given to it.

Mr. RANDELL. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

Mr. REED. I wish to say, so that I will not be misunderstood, that no one can go further than I am willing to go—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that the section was agreed to without objection. If the Senator will move to reconsider it, that motion will be entertained.

Mr. RANDELL. I move that it be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the proposed amendment be reconsidered, and, without objection, it is reconsidered.

Mr. REED. I desire to say just this much, so that I will not be misunderstood: No one could go further than I am willing to go to make it impossible for information to be sent to the enemy, and no one will go further than I am willing to go to punish every act that is calculated to give aid or comfort to the enemy. It is, perhaps, for that reason more than any other that I desire that we shall be careful not to draw our statutes so loosely that they may work hardships and thus result in a failure to enforce them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is passed over. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9 the committee proposes to insert the following section:

SEC. 4. (a) Every enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, and every other enemy or ally of enemy, doing business within the United States through an agency or branch office, or otherwise, may, within 30 days after the passage of this act, apply to the President for a license to continue to do business; and, within 30 days after such application, the President may enter an order either granting or refusing to grant such license. The license, if granted, may be temporary or otherwise and for such period of time and may contain such provisions and conditions regulating the business, agencies, managers and trustees, and the control and disposition of the funds of the company or of such enemy or ally of enemy as the President shall deem necessary for the safety of the United States, and any license granted hereunder may be revoked or regranted or renewed in such manner and at such times as the President shall determine: Provided, however, That reasonable notice of his intent to refuse to grant a license or to revoke a license granted to any reinsurance company shall be given by him to all insurance companies incorporated within the United States and known to the President to be doing business with such reinsurance company.

For a period of 30 days after the passage of this act, and further pending the entry of such order by the President after application made by any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, within such 30 days as above provided, the provisions of the President's proclamation of April 6, 1917, relative to agencies in the United States of certain insurance companies, as modified by the provisions of the President's proclamation of July 13, 1917, relative to marine and war-risk insurance, shall remain in full force and effect so far as it applies to such German insurance companies; and the conditions of said proclamation of April 6, 1917, as modified by said proclamation of July 13, 1917, shall also during said period of 30 days after the passage of this act, and pending the order of the President as herein provided, apply to any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding. The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company or other person to do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917. It shall be unlawful for any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company to whom license is granted to transmit out of the United States any funds belonging to or held for the benefit of such company or to use any such funds as the basis for the establishment directly or indirectly of any credit within or outside of the United States.

For a period of 30 days after the passage of this act, and further pending the entry of such order by the President after application made within such 30 days by any enemy or ally of enemy, other than an insurance or reinsurance company as above provided, it shall be lawful for such enemy or ally of enemy to continue to do business in this country and for any person to trade with, to, from, for, on account of, on behalf of, or for the benefit of such enemy or ally of enemy, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, That the provisions of sections 3 and 15 hereof shall apply to any act or attempted act of transmission or transfer of money or other property out of the United States and to the use or attempted use of such money or property as the basis for the establishment of any credit within or outside of the United States to, or for the benefit of, or on behalf of, or on account of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

If no license is applied for within 30 days after the passage of this act, or if a license shall be refused to any enemy or ally of enemy, whether insurance or reinsurance company or other person, making application, or if any license granted shall be revoked by the President, the provisions of sections 3 and 15 hereof shall forthwith apply to all trade or attempt to trade with, to, from, for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of such company or other person: Provided, however, That after such refusal or revocation, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding, it shall be lawful for a policyholder or for an insurance company, not an enemy or ally of enemy, holding insurance or having effected reinsurance in or with such enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, to receive payment of and for such enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, to pay any premium, return premium, claim, money, security, or other property due or which may become due on or in respect to such insurance or reinsurance in force at the date of such refusal or revocation of license; and nothing in this act shall vitiate or nullify then existing policies or contracts of insurance or reinsurance or the conditions thereof; and any such policyholder or insurance company, not an enemy or ally of enemy, having any claim to or upon money or other property of the enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company in the custody or control of the alien property custodian or of the Treasurer of the United States, may make application for the payment thereof and may institute suit as provided in section 9 hereof.

After the first paragraph of the proposed section had been read.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the following amendment to the amendment and ask if the Senator in charge of the bill will not accept it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 2, after the period insert a colon and the following words:

And provided further, That no insurance company organized within the United States shall be obligated to continue any existing contract or treaty entered into prior to the beginning of the war with any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, but any such company may abrogate and cancel any such contract or treaty by serving 30 days' notice in writing upon the President of its election to abrogate such contract or treaty.

Mr. RANSDELL. In behalf of the committee I will state that I have no objection to that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

After the conclusion of the reading of the amendment,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. REED. Before that is done, I do not want to take time on the bill, but I notice a clause at the bottom of page 10 about which I want to get a little explanation. It reads:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, or other person, to do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917.

I have not had time to examine the proclamation; the Senator from Louisiana has just handed it to me; but the language, of course, absolutely prohibits the President under any and all circumstances from doing any of the things prohibited by this proclamation. I think we ought to know just what is in the proclamation. It may be prohibiting something we ought not to prohibit.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly I can enlighten the Senator.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad if the Senator will do so.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the proclamation prohibits the transaction of marine and war-risk insurance. It was found that the marine companies, many of them German companies, in insuring cargoes to Europe, were in the possession of information which, if transmitted to Germany or the enemy, would be of great benefit to them. The President prohibited in that proclamation the transacting of all marine and war-risk insurance. This bill makes an exception of the fire and life business, but continues the prohibition as in the President's proclamation of marine and war-risk insurance. I think that is what this section refers to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say that is the understanding of the subcommittee which had the matter in charge. We did not see that any circumstances could ever arise under which the President ought to issue a license to people to do marine and war-risk insurance. That is why we put it in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. As a matter of legal procedure, would it not be very much better to incorporate in the bill the things which are prohibited rather than to refer to some particular proclamation?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is a matter of taste. Perhaps it would be better.

Mr. POMERENE. Has the Senator that language with him?

Mr. RANSDELL. I have not framed it. I have the proclamation here, and I can read the proclamation to the Senator if he would like to hear it. It has been explained by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think there is a special prohibition in the bill prohibiting the transaction of marine and war-risk insurance.

Mr. POMERENE. If that be true, why not so express it here instead of referring to the proclamation?

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, the proclamation is just as much a law of the land as a statute.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is true; but a statute ought to be complete within itself. Here is the difficulty about this matter: If this statute is before an attorney who is being consulted about it, and he has not the full statute before him, he has got to refer not to the statute but to some proclamation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is not that true with reference to every law that amends a statute?

Mr. REED. No; they have the other law printed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is printed, too.

Mr. REED. But it is printed in the law, while the proclamation is not printed in the statute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been declared agreed to.

Mr. REED. I hope the Chair will not stand on that. We are proceeding here rapidly, nobody desiring to stop for a moment, and the Chair, naturally, in saying it is agreed to makes the announcement in a formal way.

Mr. RANSDELL. I move a reconsideration. I hope we will not hurry. We shall have plenty of time for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. REED. It is generally considered as open where a Senator rose immediately before the record is made up. That is the case in court, as every judge knows, and every place else.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would state that the committee would have no serious objection to putting those words in the bill, but we thought that it would encumber it. It is a rather long bill as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that this section be passed over for the present?

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like, if we can, to settle it as we go along. I should like to have it disposed of if possible.

Mr. REED. It strikes me in this way. When you put into a bill a power to the President to license and to regulate these things and then follow that with a statement that under no circumstances can the President license any company that is prohibited under a certain proclamation of given date, we ought to pretty carefully examine that proclamation. I agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that the language of the proclamation had better be put in the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to offer a suggestion, and may I have at the same time the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill? I understand it is intended here to prohibit the issuance of marine or war-risk insurance. If that be so, why would not this meet the situation:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of any enemy insurance or reinsurance company or other person to do any act or to carry on any marine or war-risk insurance.

Mr. REED. Strike out "to do any act."

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I strike that out and substitute the language I have read.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would be willing to accept that as an amendment if offered.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I move to strike out the following language, beginning in line 24, page 10: "to do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917," and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "to carry on any marine or war-risk insurance."

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that the language in the proclamation is "transaction of the business of marine and war-risk insurance." So the amendment might be drawn to carry on any business of marine and war-risk insurance.

Mr. POMERENE. That would meet my view, at least.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think that the words "to do any act" ought to be continued in this legislation, because while these war-risk companies and marine companies are prohibited from transacting business they still have records, and the transmission of those records to Germany might work hardship or injury to this country. Possibly the act would be improved by leaving in those words.

Mr. RANDELL. I believe it would be safer to leave those words in in view of what the Senator from New Jersey has said. If those words are kept in, it still embodies the thought which the Senator from Ohio has. I hope he will not insist on striking out the words "to do any act."

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I feel that we should be very sure in an amendment that we follow out the lines of the proclamation issued by the President. Is the Senator in charge of the bill quite sure of the words proposed to be inserted by the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio—that they will cover that point?

Mr. RANDELL. That is what we had in mind, to prevent any marine or war-risk insurance; but I think the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is very pertinent. If we simply prohibit them from doing any business, that might not cover the whole case. We should also say, "to do any act"—to do something in connection with the business that would not be business itself. That is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 1, after the word "business," strike out "prohibited by his proclamation of July 30, 1917," and insert the words "of marine or war-risk insurance," so as to read "to do any act or to carry on any business of marine or war-risk insurance."

Mr. RANDELL. That will be all right.

Mr. BRADY. Will that be satisfactory to the Senator in charge of the bill?

Mr. RANDELL. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I confess I think we are getting into a position that may possibly result in embarrassment. I have not given the bill careful study, but it will be observed that section 4, paragraph (a) provides that—

Every enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, and every other enemy or ally of enemy doing business within the United States through an agency or branch office, or otherwise, may, within 30 days after the passage of this act, apply to the President for a license to continue to do business; and, within 30 days after such application, the President may enter an order either granting or refusing to grant such license. The license, if granted, may be temporary or otherwise and for such period of time and may contain such provisions and conditions regulating the business, agencies, managers, and trustees and the control and disposition of the funds of the company or of such enemy or ally of enemy as the President shall deem necessary for the safety of the United States.

Mr. President, that language puts it in the power of the President to absolutely prohibit any company, it puts it in the power of the President to license any company but in the licensing to state the terms and conditions which he may deem necessary for the protection of our Government. That far and no further need the section go.

There are certain matters subject to legislation that ought always to be specifically defined in the legislative act, but there are certain other matters that are executive in their nature and a large discretion must be vested in the Executive because the conditions change from time to time, and because no mind can anticipate what those conditions may be, we find it necessary to vest a wide discretion in the Executive.

Mr. President, this is of that class. We are dealing with the question of insurance by foreign companies, in this case German companies. I can readily see why it is not desirable to drive out of business these concerns that have for so many years been engaged in carrying American risks, but at the same time to say that under no circumstances shall the President of the United States license any company to carry on marine insurance or to do any act with reference to marine insurance may tie the hands of the Executive and may seriously interfere with business the ramifications and complete relations of which are not before the Senate.

I am perfectly willing to leave this matter to the President. It is a matter of detail. It is a matter of regulation. It is a matter that changes from day to day. I can see no reason for reposing in the President a wide authority with reference to ordinary classes of insurance and then drawing a hard and fast line and saying when you come to marine insurance under no circumstances and no conditions shall you permit any act whatsoever to be done with relation to that business. I fully understand—

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Just let me finish the sentence. I fully understand the force of the statement that is made here, that the writing of marine insurance may involve the gaining of information which might be of service to the enemy, but I also know that it is somewhat dangerous for us to say to the President that under no circumstances can you permit a single act to be done with reference to that kind of business. I think we had better strike out all these agencies and leave this to the President. I am perfectly willing to do it. Of course, the President will not execute it, but it is fair to assume that he will get some patriotic man who is familiar with the business of insurance to execute it. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The construction of this bill has been somewhat changed since the committee finished the details, in this that where the word "President" appears formerly it was "Secretary of Commerce." The committee went over this question very carefully, with the assistance of the heads of the departments who are to administer the law and the attorneys of those departments, and it was thought that it would not be prudent to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to permit marine insurance to be written or carried by a German company. I do not think it is limiting the power of the President in a way that will in any manner hinder or prevent the proper enforcement, execution, or administration of the law. The bill as it now stands may be a little awkward in construction, but it will do no harm to leave it as it is. I think if a change is made according to the line suggested by the Senator from Missouri it may destroy somewhat the symmetry or order of construction of the measure which the committee endeavored to preserve. But after second thought I am of the opinion that if the Senator's amendment shall be agreed to it will do no special harm.

I can, however, understand and all Senators will readily see that these German insurance companies should not be permitted to write marine insurance.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President—

Mr. VARDAMAN. I yield to the Senator, but I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Very well; I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The prohibition of the transaction of marine insurance is in the proclamation of the President. It was ascertained that Germany was receiving a great deal of information by wireless of the sailing of vessels which were insured by many of these marine companies. At least that was the supposition. The German insurance companies doing business in this country naturally knew of the dates of the sailings and also knew what the cargoes were. Consequently it was thought wise to prohibit the transaction of marine insurance by the German companies in this country. Therefore the President issued a proclamation prohibiting the further transaction of any business by the German marine insurance companies in this country. I think at the same time he prohibited the transaction of fire business, but it was found that that worked great hardships to the American companies which had been reinsured in many of the German companies, inasmuch as the contracts were term contracts and had been taken prior to the war, and that very little information injurious to this country could be transmitted to Germany through a fire insurance contract on any property having its situs in this country.

Therefore, in view of the fact that these were all contractual relations, known as treaties, where the German companies came here and deposited their funds, maintained branch offices in the States under the supervision of the insurance commissioners, and made their treaties for a term with the American companies, to impound the assets, as the House bill did, and compel the American companies to bring a suit to recover their losses from these German companies was unjust. Therefore the Senate committee amended the act, providing that the President should have supervision and control of these companies through a licensing power, and further providing that the assets now in this country—the reserves and the surplus—should be used to liquidate the liabilities of these German companies with the American companies.

There are about 11 German reinsurance companies writing reinsurance business, taking contracts from American companies, and there are 4 German companies issuing their policies directly. The total amount of liability which they have assumed amounts to $3,500,000,000. The amount of premium which they receive each year is $37,000,000. These contracts are reinforcing the contracts of American companies. They were in existence prior to the war. They are all contracts which can be canceled on six months' notice upon the payment of the return premium by the German companies. But this liability carried by the German companies is under term contract—one, three, and five years—and is held as security for many mortgages and warehouse receipts throughout the country. To impound those assets suddenly, and prevent the American companies from receiving relief from these German companies with which they had contracts before the war, would be unfair and unjust, and it would seriously embarrass the American companies. Therefore this act provides that the President shall license those companies; but if he fails to license them, if he believes that for the safety of the country it is better that they should be deprived of the right of transacting business in this country, those German companies must liquidate their contracts with the American companies before they are entirely put out of business.

Mr. REED. Very well. That, however, does not answer the proposition that is under discussion. The statement made by the Senator is this: That there is a certain condition with reference to ordinary fire insurance or life insurance that is of such a nature that it should not be suddenly broken up. There is also marine insurance, which the Senator states must be broken up.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not state it. The President states it.

Mr. REED. Well, the bill states it must be broken up. The bill proposes to say that under no circumstances may the President license that kind of insurance, and under no circumstances can any act be done with reference to that insurance. Now, I think it would be very much better for us to strike out that proviso, and leave it so that the whole matter is in the hands of the President, because, as I said awhile ago—and I will be pardoned for repeating it, for one or two Senators have come in since—the subject matter we are dealing with relates to certain business concerns and to their business relations with each other and with the country. We propose to allow the President to license these companies, and to fix in his license the terms upon which they shall do business. We also give him full authority to decline to allow them to do business at all. That having been provided, and I think wisely, we proceed then to say that under no circumstances shall he license them to conduct marine insurance.

We are dealing here with a matter with which we are unfamiliar. It is a matter of business and of detail, and the details are not before us, and I think we ought to leave the whole question to the President.

I remarked a few moments ago that there are two classes of legislation. When you come to pass general laws governing the country they ought to be specific, but when you come to giving a power to an executive department you must generally leave a wide discretion, because the department is dealing with a question that has many angles and many details. So I think the whole proviso could be well stricken out and let the President settle this matter.

I am fearful that if we shall provide that under no circumstances can the President license marine insurance or any act with reference to marine insurance we may find that we will seriously interfere with some business and in a manner that could be easily avoided without any danger to the country if it were left to the executive department. So I am going to move as a substitute, if I may do so under the parliamentary situation, to strike out the language on lines 22 to 24, page 10, and lines 1 and 2, on page 11, as follows:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company or other person to do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from Missouri will not prevail.

I should like to assure the Senate that the committee having this matter in charge studied it very carefully and spent about a month over this bill. It is an exceedingly intricate and difficult one. I agree with the Senator from Missouri in saying that it is very well to give the President a great deal of power in war times, and we are giving him a great deal of power in this bill. In this very section we are authorizing him absolutely to say whether or not any German insurance company or any company controlled by an ally of Germany shall do business in this country, not merely fire insurance, but casualty insurance. There is a very large business done in this country by German casualty insurance companies. It is going on now, and I for one hope that it will continue to go on.

There is a very large fire insurance business done by these companies. But while we are conferring very great power upon the President and reposing the greatest confidence in him in the exercise of this large power, it does not follow that we ought not to exercise a little discretion ourselves; and when we reach the conclusion that under no circumstances should the President or anybody else authorize the continuance of business by an enemy, or an ally of an enemy, in marine or war-risk insurance, why not say so? Why put it up to the President to determine whether or not he will issue that license? That is a matter as to which there is no need to vest any discretion in him. We all know, just as well as we know anything in this world, that while the war lasts there ought not to be any license issued to any enemy, or any ally of an enemy, to carry on marine insurance or war-risk insurance.

For that reason the words were included in the bill; and, as I stated before, I hope that they will be kept in there, and that the motion of the Senator from Missouri will be voted down.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. VARDAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him if I understand him to say that he is willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. RANSDELL. As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. No; it was not agreed to. It was presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am entirely willing to accept that amendment, because, as I understand, that is what the President's proclamation means; and it seems to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio is perhaps in the line of simplicity and making the matter a little bit clearer. For that reason I am entirely willing to accept it.

Mr. POMERENE. While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I might say that out of deference to a suggestion made, perhaps, by the Senator from Florida, I have redrafted that amendment so as to strike out everything beginning in line 24, beginning with the words "to do any act" and following that, and then to substitute therefor this—

Mr. BRADY. Where does the Senator commence to strike out?

Mr. POMERENE. Beginning with the words "to do any act," in line 24.

Mr. VARDAMAN. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. POMERENE. Beginning at the bottom of page 10. The matter which I propose to insert is as follows: "to transact the business of marine or war-risk insurance or reinsurance, or to do any act in connection therewith."

Mr. BRADY. Is the Senator from Ohio satisfied that that covers the ground?

Mr. POMERENE. That does cover the ground, so far as marine or war-risk insurance is concerned, unquestionably.

Mr. BRADY. And it will not be necessary to refer to the President's proclamation at all?

Mr. POMERENE. It certainly will not be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator propose to insert those words?

Mr. POMERENE. On page 10, beginning in line 24 with the words "to do any act," I propose to strike out those words, "to do any act," and the following words to the period, and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "to transact the business of marine or war-risk insurance or reinsurance, or to do any act in connection therewith."

Mr. RANSDELL. That conveys the idea.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I simply want to say that it is needless to limit the authority of the President in this matter. This power was first conferred upon the Secretary of Commerce. The purpose of the committee, however, was to vest the Secretary of Commerce with the power to carry out the will of the President as expressed in his proclamation of July 13, 1917. I read an extract from that proclamation:

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the powers vested in me as such, hereby declare and proclaim that such branch establishments of German insurance companies now engaged in the transaction of business in the United States pursuant to the laws of the several States are hereby prohibited from continuing the transaction of the business of marine and war-risk insurance either as direct insurers or reinsurers; and all individuals, firms, and insurance companies incorporated under the laws of any of the States or Territories of the United States, or of any foreign country, and established pursuant to the laws of such States and now engaged in the United States in the business of marine and war-risk insurance either as direct insurers or reinsurers are hereby prohibited from reinsuring with companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire, no matter where located; and all persons in the United States are prohibited from insuring against marine or war risks with insurance companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire or with individuals, firms, and insurance companies incorporated under the laws of any of the States or Territories of the United States or of any for-elg country and now engaged in the business of marine or war-risk insurance in the United States, which reinsurance business originating in the United States with companies incorporated under the laws of the German Empire, no matter where located.

Since all power has been conferred upon the President to carry out the terms of this law, I see no reason for the language which the Senator from Missouri proposes to strike out being incorporated in the bill. It was intended to confer upon the Secretary of Commerce power to carry out the proclamation of the President, and to limit him in the performance of the functions conferred by this bill to the terms of the President's proclamation. It strikes me as manifestly wise to prohibit German insurance companies from writing marine risks. There is every reason why it should not be done, and I have not heard a single suggestion as to why it should be done; and the President sets forth that fact very clearly and cogently in his proclamation.

As I said a moment ago, in constructing this bill the committee have endeavored to carry out the purpose the President had in mind when he issued his proclamation of July 13, which to me is manifestly proper.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, granting that the statements of the Senator from Mississippi are entirely true—and I fully agree with him—it seems to me that the words that have been placed in this bill by the members of the committee simply emphasize the fact that they desire that the proclamation of the President shall in no manner be changed. We all agree that it is a good proclamation, and that its terms should be enforced. It seems to me it is very pertinent and very proper that the language as now amended, or as it will be amended if the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is adopted, should be inserted in the bill. It certainly does not do any harm. It states a fact that we know should be in the law. If, by putting in this amendment, we can avoid referring to a proclamation that is not printed in the law, it seems to me that it is a very good plan to insert it; and I can not help but think that it would be wise to adopt the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate. When I have said what I am about to say, in very brief words, I shall be content with whatever the Senate may do.

I have had enough experience in law matters, as well as enough experience here, to know that when you put in a broad, sweeping proposition saying that certain things can not be done under any circumstances, you ought to be very sure that you know all about the matter that you thus propose to prohibit. I am utterly unfamiliar with the question of marine insurance. Of course, it is a very large business in some of the States; notably, I take it, in the State of New Jersey, the State of New York, and so forth. Now, I am perfectly willing to give the President of the United States absolute authority to say that there shall never be another policy written in any kind of a German insurance company while this war lasts, whether it is fire, casualty, life, or marine insurance; but we do propose to give the President the authority to license and regulate the doing of all classes of business except marine insurance; and as to that, without any great familiarity with the subject, we say that under no circumstances shall he license them.

In view of the fact that the President has already prohibited that kind of business, and in view of the fact that we can trust the President of the United States not to do anything that is going to be favorable to Germany under the present circumstances, it simply seems to me that we can trust marine insurance to him the same as we can other classes of insurance, particularly in view of the fact that he has already issued this proclamation.

If the amendment I suggest is adopted, it will leave the matter so that if peculiar conditions should arise in the future—something that we do not anticipate, something that we can not now think of—the President might meet that by an exception to his ordinary rule; but if we pass this law as it is proposed, no matter what the hardship might be, nor what the necessity might be, the President would be powerless. Now, is that wise or is it necessary?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I really think that it is not necessary to keep it there, since the power has been vested in the President. The original purpose of this bill was to prevent the Secretary of Commerce from doing the thing prohibited and to carry out the President's proclamation of July 13. That is all that provision intended to accomplish. But now, since the President has been given the power, I agree with the Senator from Missouri, I repeat, that it is not necessary to leave it in there at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I simply want to make this suggestion: I agree with the Senator from Missouri that when we use broad language we ought to know what we are doing; but I think it is a sufficient answer to his suggestion to say that no doubt when the President framed this proclamation he had the advice of the department and framed the proclamation accordingly. Now, the Committee on Commerce had this matter in charge; and while it is true that the proclamation is broad enough to meet the situation, I can understand why your committee may have thought that this was such a wise and prudent thing to do that it ought to become a part of the law of the land in statutory form rather than to leave it to proclamation alone. It perhaps adds nothing to the strength of it; but if we adopt the legislation as amended, we have a declaration by the Congress which is confirmatory of what the President has already done.

My objection to this in the first instance was due to this fact: I think it is very unwise legislative drafting to refer to some proclamation or to some document that may be in existence somewhere. If you have the phraseology complete in itself in the section of the statute that you are passing, it saves untold trouble to everybody.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator let me make one suggestion before he concludes the debate?

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The amount of all this argument is this: The President has issued a proclamation which it is thought is very wise. Now, it is proposed to say by law that he never can change that proclamation; that is all—that he never can change that proclamation. I am willing to repose enough confidence in him to let him have the power to change it in the future, as he has now, if he sees fit to do it, fully confident of the fact that he will see to it that our rights are protected.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I quite agree with the argument made by the Senator from Ohio that statutes are perhaps simpler and more easily understood when they state in themselves exactly what is meant, and I will say that as soon as he made the suggestion of this amendment it appealed to me strongly and I was entirely willing to accept it. It simplifies the matter. When amended by him, the provision means exactly what the committee intended it to mean. Instead of using the word "proclamation," he uses words which convey the same idea that the proclamation conveys, and I think the amendment simplifies and perfects the provision.

So much on that point. The Senator from Missouri intimates that he would have not any objection at all to prohibiting any insurance being done pending the war by enemy insurance companies, or ally of enemy insurance companies—not only the war-risk insurance and marine insurance, but any insurance, casualty, fire, or anything else. Mr. President, I intend to take that up later, but I will say just a word or two about it at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

Mr. REED. The Senator misapprehended me. I made no statement of that kind.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am sorry if I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator certainly did misunderstand me. I stated that in this bill we had given the President the authority to permit that kind of insurance—that is, casualty, fire, and life insurance—but we were undertaking now to prohibit him from changing his proclamation which has heretofore absolutely prohibited marine insurance.

While the Senator is on the floor, with his courtesy, if I may ask it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield further?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Missouri take all the time he wants.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that this language, providing that the President's proclamation of date of July 13, 1917, should not be changed, was put in this bill under these circumstances?

As the bill was drawn, the power to license was given to the Secretary of Commerce. The committee thought it necessary to write in the bill a provision prohibiting the Secretary of Commerce from changing the effect of the proclamation the President had already made with reference to marine insurance, and that is the reason why that language is in the bill now. Afterwards the committee substituted the word "President."

for "Secretary of Commerce," and still left the language in language that never would have appeared there if the bill in the first instance had employed the name of the President instead of the name of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. RANDELL. The Senator correctly states the circumstances under which this section was framed; but when the committee subsequently took it up and substituted the word "President" for "Secretary of Commerce," it went carefully over the bill and made all the changes which it thought were necessary to be made in order to comport with the idea that it was the President who was to enforce these rules, and not the Secretary of Commerce.

I am willing to give the President all the power that he ought to have, all the power that it is necessary for him to have; but in Heaven's name, Mr. President, is there a man on this globe more burdened to-day, more overburdened, than the President of the United States? Why do you wish to impose upon him duties which there is no necessity of imposing upon him? When you are giving him certain powers, why give him other powers that are not necessary?

It is necessary that somebody exercise powers in regard to these insurance companies doing fire insurance and casualty insurance. I wish to read here just a line from a letter addressed to the Secretary of State on April 5 by Mr. Jesse Phillips, superintendent of insurance of New York, Mr. Frank Harrison, insurance commissioner of the State of Massachusetts, and Mr. Burton Mansfield, insurance commissioner of the State of Connecticut. It is addressed to the Secretary of State, Washington, D. C., and reads as follows:

The undersigned, insurance supervisors of our respective States, again desire to emphasize the importance, and, to us, the necessity, of the Federal Government protecting by announcement the interests of the American people holding insurance in German companies, and particularly permitting the continuance of business by such companies.

The total amount of this insurance in force to-day is not less than $3,500,000,000, representing premiums of over $37,000,000, paid by over two million policyholders.

In addition to all of this, there are over 8,000 agents of these companies actively engaged in transacting and promoting this business, and several thousand office employees who are not strictly agents. Practically all of these, both agents and employees, are American citizens.

We also wish to call your attention to the fact that a very large part of this insurance, if canceled, can not be satisfactorily absorbed by other companies now transacting insurance business in this country.

The insurance interests involved, taken by themselves, are very large, as you will see, and, when taken in connection with other interests similarly involved, would seem to require some favorable action by the Federal Government such as we desire and recommend.

That was on the 5th day of April. On the next day, the 6th of April, the President issued a proclamation authorizing and permitting these enemy insurance companies to continue to do business in this country, coupled with the proviso that in no event should any funds belonging to or held for the benefit of such companies be transmitted outside of the United States nor be used as the basis for the establishment, directly or indirectly, of any credit, within or outside of the United States, to or for the benefit or use of the enemy or enemy's allies without the permission of this Government.

Under that proclamation these companies have been doing business, and they are doing a very necessary business for the American people. The policies amount to over $3,500,000,000 and the premiums to over $37,000,000. There are between eight and ten thousand agents in this country. It is said that they employ fully thirty to forty thousand people, and nearly every man, woman, and child connected with the industry—if there are any children—is a good, loyal American citizen. If this insurance business were stopped, some agency would be required to carry it on.

Your committee felt that it was necessary to give some one in this country the authority to license enemy insurance companies and ally-of-enemy insurance companies. We finally concluded that the President was the best agency to carry on that essential business in fire insurance, in casualty insurance, in things that are to be conducted solely and wholly within this country, in matters relating to affairs which can not possibly help the enemy. But when it comes to marine insurance or to war-risk insurance it goes without saying that if an enemy insurance company is permitted to write marine insurance or war-risk insurance it can not write that insurance intelligently without ascertaining a great many facts which may be quite beneficial to the enemy.

Any kind of insurance is coupled with full knowledge in regard to all the details of the transaction. You can not ask a man to insure your house unless you describe the house to him. You can not ask him to insure your life unless you have a careful examination made by a good doctor. He can not insure a ship unless he knows all about the ship—when it is to sail, what it is to carry, and everything connected with it. The same would be true in regard to any kind of war-risk insurance. Now, why do you wish to impose on the President the power to do something which none of us imagines it will ever be necessary for him or anyone else to do?

I think this is a proper limitation in the bill. Your committee thought it was a proper limitation, and I hope the motion will be voted down.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to submit to the Senate a statement in regard to this matter.

I am a little surprised at the course of the Senator's argument. He discusses here the whole question of the necessity of having the power vested in the President or somebody else to regulate insurance. Nobody is disputing that. Nobody is asking to have that stricken out of this bill. But after this bill confers upon the President the power to license and to regulate, it has this language stuck into it:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, or other person, to do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917.

That is to say, you can trust the President to look after the whole field of insurance in this country, and you impose upon him the great burden of looking after it; but at this particular point, with relation to marine insurance, you say to him: "You shall not change the proclamation you have already voluntarily issued."

Why is that language there? I am on this committee. I was not on the subcommittee. But it dawned on me, from suggestions of other Senators and from my own recollection, how it happens to be there.

As this bill was drawn, the powers contained in it were reposed in the Secretary of Commerce. When the bill was being framed somebody evidently thought that the Secretary of Commerce should not be given power to revoke or change the proclamation that the President had already issued, and so that language was written in there. Afterwards the name "President" was substituted for the name "Secretary of Commerce," and the language was left in there limiting the President so that he can not change his own proclamation—a manifest absurdity in the bill, a ridiculous thing in the bill. And yet we are so tenacious of the things we have done, of the language we have employed, that although this is a manifest solecism and an absurdity in this bill, to limit the President so that he can not change his own proclamation, it is proposed to leave it in because it once got in there for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. President. I do not know just what the parliamentary situation is. I should like to know what the question is that is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will first arise upon the perfection of the committee amendment by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. REED. And I move as a substitute for that to strike out—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If this amendment is adopted, then the motion of the Senator from Missouri to strike out that whole clause, as amended, will be in order.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "do any act or to carry on any business prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917," and to insert: "transact the business of marine or war-risk insurance or reinsurance, or to do any act in connection therewith," so that, if amended, it will read:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, or other person, to transact the business of marine or war-risk insurance or reinsurance, or to do any act in connection therewith.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to strike out this clause, because I do not think it is necessary, but I do not think it would be prudent for Congress to declare that under any circumstances these German insurance companies should assume marine risks. That is in violation of the policy of the Government. It is in violation of the position taken by the President in his proclamation of July 13. It seems to me entirely improper and imprudent to think of permitting an alien enemy company to write insurance upon ships and cargoes which would necessarily give to them information which ought not to be given to an enemy.

If it is to be amended, let the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri be adopted, striking it out. That will leave the President complete and full plenary power to do whatever his judgment and discretion may dictate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to strike out the clause commencing on line 22 of page 10 and ending on line 2 of page 11, as now amended.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, just a word before that motion is put.

We are all trying to reach the same goal, and I think the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that the matter at least should be discussed has resulted in much good, but I do not believe these lines should be stricken out.

It has been stated here that we were not thoroughly conversant with this bill. That is quite true; but, at the same time, the committee spent 60 days in the study of this bill, and after 60 days of hard and faithful work decided that the language they suggest should be in here. They are perfectly satisfied to have it modified, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], which has been done. Now that that motion has been carried and the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio has been adopted, it seems to me that instead of questioning what the President has done we are simply emphasizing his proclamation—

Mr. REED. By saying he never shall change it.

Mr. BRADY (continuing). And continuing it in force. We have a right to do so—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRADY. I will.

Mr. REED. Does not the President's proclamation continue in force without our legislating it in force?

Mr. BRADY. It continues in force; but he could issue another proclamation, could he not?

Mr. REED. And change it?

Mr. BRADY. And change it.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator afraid he will change it and let these Germans have this information?

Mr. BRADY. I am not the least bit afraid of it.

Mr. REED. Neither am I. Therefore I say it is not necessary to pass a law saying that he shall not do it.

Mr. BRADY. But we are merely adding our word of approval to what the President has done, in my judgment.

This is a very complicated bill, with many intricacies. We can not expect the committee to have made it entirely perfect, but it seems to me they have made an honest effort and have accomplished something worth while. I do not believe it will injure the bill in any way to have these words remain in it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Can not the Senator conceive of many instances in which, because of changes in the conditions, particularly of the allies, it might be wise to license some ally of Germany to do marine insurance?

Mr. BRADY. I can conceive that such a condition might arise; but, at the same time, we can change the law as soon as we can change a proclamation.

Mr. KING. But you have a statute then that you have to change by act of Congress, whereas if the exigency arose and the President saw that it would be wise to permit Germany or some ally of Germany to write marine insurance, he could, by simple abrogation of one clause of his proclamation, effectuate the desired object.

Mr. BRADY. And, on the other hand, by passing a law, which could be passed in a very short while, we could accomplish the same object.

Before the Senator from Utah takes his seat, I want to ask him whether he does not think the question of trading with the enemy and of insuring enemy vessels on the sea is a question of sufficient importance to justify the action of the entire Congress?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is difficult to answer that question categorically, "yes" or "no." When you have authorized the President by proclamation to determine under what circumstances we may trade with foreign nations and under what circumstances exports may be prohibited, it seems to me that you have done all that is necessary. The President of the United States knows under what circumstances we might trade with foreign nations to our advantage and to our disadvantage; and, obviously, standing as he does as the Commander in Chief of our Army and of our Navy and as the head of the executive department, the department that has in charge our international and foreign affairs, his knowledge of these questions would be infinitely greater than ours. The State Department would have information that we do not possess, which, of course, would be available to the President.

I would very much prefer to trust the President to make a proclamation, and to decide upon the terms of the proclamation, with respect to our dealings with foreign nations, than to trust Congress, because our information would have to come filtered through the State Department, or come from the executive department of the Government.

It seems to me the position of the Senator from Missouri is impregnable. It is an act of folly, it seems to me, to tie the hands of the President in this matter. We have authorized him to make a proclamation, and now we sort of sanctify the proclamation by an act of Congress.

Mr. BRADY. No; we emphasize it and continue it.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the position of the Senator from Missouri is correct, and that we ought to support his amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, with the courtesy of the Senator who has the floor—

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Utah, who is something of a lawyer, the danger that is found in this peculiar language:

The President, however, shall have no power to license any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company, or other person—to do any act * * * prohibited by his proclamation of July 13, 1917.

Now, notice—

To do any act!

Mr. KING. That is very dangerous legislation.

Mr. REED. Yes. Now, if you will notice the proclamation of July 13, 1917, it is very broad and sweeping. It affects all the policies that have been issued. It affects the question of reinsurance. It might transpire to-morrow that it would be necessary to reinsure some of these risks for the purpose of saving American investors, and that, the facts being laid before the President, he would see that necessity and would desire to change the condition; but if we adopt this section in this form he would be confronted by a legislative embargo which would have made his proclamation—which he made with the idea that he might change it at any time, for, of course, a proclamation of this character can always be withdrawn—like the laws of the Medes and Persians, unalterable.

Mr. BRADY. Until changed by Congress.

Mr. REED. Until Congress should see fit to change it.

Now, what I am appealing for is this: I am appealing for the common sense of this body and not for its stubbornness. We will grant that we can not at the present time see any reason in the world why an enemy insurance company should write marine insurance; but we have the situation that these companies have written many millions of dollars of that kind of insurance, and that there has been a reinsurance of those risks, and that the President, under authority of law, has issued a proclamation ending all of them. Now, we propose to pass a law saying that he shall never in any way withdraw or change that proclamation, although the necessity might arise to-morrow for some modification, in some respects, of the terms of the proclamation. When you say that no act whatsoever can be done that is prohibited by that proclamation you have tied the President's hands perhaps in some matter that may be of great business importance.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator let me call his attention to the fact that the proclamation portion of this provision has been amended by adopting the motion of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. We adopted that amendment.

Mr. REED. But you left in the language "any act."

Mr. RANDELL. In relation to marine or war-risk insurance.

Mr. REED. Exactly; any act in relation to marine or war-risk insurance. Now, let me have the Senator's attention, for he is a fair man.

Suppose that there was a lot of this insurance reinsured in American companies. Suppose that one of those American companies were to find it necessary now, in order to save itself from some great loss, to do some act, to make some business deal with one of these German companies which was perfectly proper and which the President would sanction. They would start in to do that thing and they would find themselves confronted with the statement that not a single act can be done. Now, certainly that is not wise.

Mr. RANDELL. The law simply prevents the President from licensing any of these enemy companies to do any act—

Mr. REED. No, sir; it says, "The President, however, shall have no power to license."

Mr. RANDELL. Certainly; that is what it means—no power to license an enemy insurance company or an ally of an enemy insurance company to do anything in connection with war-risk or marine insurance.

Mr. REED. No; "to do any act."

Mr. RANDELL. In connection with war-risk insurance.

Mr. REED. No; to do any act which is prohibited by this proclamation.

Mr. RANDELL. But that has been amended. It has been amended so as to limit it to doing any act in connection with marine or war-risk insurance.

Mr. REED. Very well; that is just as good.

Mr. RANDELL. Now, I can not conceive that it is possible for an enemy insurance company to do anything wisely in connection with war-risk insurance or marine insurance. If it is an enemy insurance company, it ought not to be allowed to put its hand on marine insurance or war-risk insurance, and this simply says that it can not do it. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to finish my remarks, I will do so in just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed.

Mr. BRADY. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that this proclamation was issued on the 13th day of July, 1917. If there are any enemy insurance companies that are owned or controlled by our citizens, they have had time to make complaint ere this; and it seems to me that the committee would not have placed this section in the bill if there had not been some reason for it.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator—

Mr. BRADY. The Senator from Missouri says he wants to test the common sense of the Senate. It seems to me that we are testing the common sense of the committee, of which the Senator from Missouri is a distinguished member. They studied this matter out and they have brought in here this bill in this form, and I am frank to say that I believe that it is one of the most important bills that we have had to consider.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Is the Senator a member of the Commerce Committee? I have forgotten.

Mr. BRADY. No.

Mr. REED. I happen to be.

Mr. BRADY. I just mentioned the fact that the Senator was.

Mr. REED. And I know, as we all know, that in writing bills and changing them frequently we overlook the necessity of making some change that has become necessary because of a change already made.

Now, here is the situation in regard to this bill: At first, as has already been said—and I repeat it for the sake of clarity—this bill proposed to confer upon the Secretary of Commerce the authority to issue these licenses; and, being in that shape, somebody wrote into the bill a provision that the Secretary of Commerce could not annul the proclamation the President had already made. That was very proper, for we might have preferred the act of the President, which was already before us, to something which the Secretary of Commerce might thereafter do. We might very well prefer not to give the Secretary of Commerce the authority to overrule the President of the United States, and hence write it in a statute. But, in the course of legislative development, the name of the Secretary of Commerce was stricken out and the name of the President was written in, so that we find ourselves now not prohibiting the Secretary of Commerce from changing a proclamation of the President, but we find ourselves prohibiting the President from changing his own proclamation; and, because it is here and because it happened to go through the committee in that way, Senators cling to it!

I frankly say that all of this probably is not worth the time we have taken in talking about it, but it seemed to me so plain when I suggested it that I thought everybody would accept it.

I do not care to take any more time with it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the language as it is expressed in the latter part of this section is ambiguous. However, one statement has been made upon which I want to enlighten the Senate, and that is that there might occur a time in our relations with the German insurance companies when we might wish to reestablish marine business.

The President has made a proclamation that business with German marine insurance companies shall cease, because it is dangerous to the interests of this country. There is no chance that we will reestablish those relations during the present war. Now, marine transactions are different from fire insurance transactions, because they are of short term. The cargo is insured by trip. The war-risk insurance is by trip, not by term. Consequently, after this proclamation has been in existence for several months, those risks have expired and ceased; and the only risks that remain, carried by these marine insurance companies, are the annual policies, which are written upon the hull of the vessel. Those contracts are being readjusted and liquidated, and to-day there is a very small liability carried by the German reinsurance companies in American business.

Consequently that business is stopped for the period of the war. There is no chance of its recurrence.

With fire insurance it is different. It is written for a term. Consequently those contracts will have to be readjusted through the years. No hardship is imposed upon the marine insurance companies by the President's proclamation, but to stop fire insurance business would impose a hardship. The time may come when it will be necessary to stop all business with German companies, but this simply affords a means whereby a readjustment of the contractual relations can be made.

Mr. BRADY. This section simply refers to marine insurance.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The section refers to the prohibition by the President of marine insurance. There is no chance of its ever being reestablished, and I hope for the safety of this country it never will be during the war.

Mr. BRADY. I fully agree with the Senator. It seems to me, as the Senator in charge of the bill and other members of the committee feel that the language should remain, it is our duty to support the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to strike out the clause as proposed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. Can we not finish the section? I see no objection to our concluding the section. If I move to reconsider—I ask the Chair what would be the effect of the motion to reconsider upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] that was agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. Then if I move to reconsider it would still remain in, I presume?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Absolutely so. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, before the word "That," to strike out "Sec. 4" and insert "(b)," and in line 11, after the words "from the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to make the clause read:

(b) That no enemy, or ally of enemy, and no partnership of which he is a member or was a member at the beginning of the war, shall for any purpose assume or use any name other than that by which such enemy or partnership was ordinarily known at the beginning of the war, except under license from the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 13, before the word "That," to insert "(a)"; in line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "the Secretary of Commerce may, under the direction of"; in line 19, before the word "grant," to insert "may"; and in line 20, after the word "general," to strike out "to any person or class of persons, to perform any act made unlawful in section 3 of this act without such license, if he shall be of opinion that such grant shall be compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war, and he may, with the approval of the President, make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act," and insert:

temporary or otherwise, and for such period of time and containing such provisions and conditions as he shall prescribe, to any person or class of persons to do business as provided in subsection (a) of section 4 hereof, and to perform any act made unlawful without such license in section 3 hereof; and he may revoke or renew such licenses from time to time, if he shall be of opinion that such grant or revocation or renewal shall be compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war; and he may make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this act; and such other officer, or officers, as the President shall direct, shall have similar powers to grant licenses under subsections (b) and (c) of section 3 hereof and to make rules and regulations thereunder, with the approval of the President.

If the President shall have reasonable cause to believe that any act is about to be performed in violation of section 3 hereof, he shall have authority to order the suspension of the performance of such act for a period not exceeding 90 days, pending investigation of the facts by him.

(b) No investigation or examination of any bank shall be made, except through the Secretary of the Treasury or the Federal Reserve Board.

(c) That the President may investigate, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, any transaction in foreign exchange, export of gold or silver coin or bullion, and transfer of credit in any form (other than credits relating solely to transactions to be executed wholly within the United States) by any bank; and he may require any person engaged in such transaction to furnish complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books of account, contracts, letters, or other papers in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed. Whenever it shall appear to the President that the export of any gold or silver coin or bullion or of any moneys of the United States may result in violation of the provisions of this act, he may cause notice to be served on the parties in interest to withhold such export for a period not exceeding 90 days pending investigation of the facts by him.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. (a) That the President, if he shall find it compatible with the safety of the United States and with the successful prosecution of the war, may, by proclamation, suspend the provisions of this act so far as they apply to an ally of enemy, and he may revoke or renew such suspension from time to time; and the President may grant licenses, special or general, temporary or otherwise, and for such period of time and containing such provisions and conditions as he shall prescribe, to any person or class of persons to do business as provided in subsection (a) of section 4 hereof, and to perform any act made unlawful without such license in section 3 hereof, and to file and prosecute applications under subsection (b) of section 10 hereof, etc.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 14, line 15, I move to strike out, after the word "at" and the semicolon down to and inclusive of the word "President," on line 19, in the following words: "and such other officer, or officers, as the President shall direct, shall have similar powers to grant licenses under subsections (b) and (c) of section 3 hereof and to make rules and regulations thereunder, with the approval of the President," and to insert in lieu thereof, beginning after the word "act," in line 15, and after the semicolon, the following: "and the President may exercise any power or authority conferred by this act through such officer, or officers, as he shall direct."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. I suggest that we suspend at this time. I understand that there is a desire for an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, September 12, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 11, 1917.

CONSULS.

CLASS 6.

Walter H. Sholes.

CLASS 8.

Arthur H. Leavitt.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Thomas Snowden to be a rear admiral.

The following-named captains to be rear admirals:

Albert P. Niblack,

John A. Hoogewerff,

William B. Fletcher,

Marbury Johnston, and

Edwin A. Anderson (additional number).

The following-named commanders to be captains:

Frank H. Schofield,

George W. Laws,

George C. Day,

John F. Hines,

George B. Bradshaw,

Philip Williams,

Douglas E. Dismukes,

Blon B. Bierer,

Powers Symington,

Raymond DeL. Hasbrouck,

Joel R. P. Pringle,

Edward S. Kellogg,

Frank H. Clark,

Edward H. Campbell,

Walter S. Crosley (additional number),

Martin E. Trench,

Orton P. Jackson,

Percy N. Olmsted,

Frank B. Upham,

Andre M. Procter (additional number),

Chester Wells,

Ridley McLean,

David F. Sellers,

John T. Tompkins,

Alfred W. Hinds, and

Ernest L. Bennett.

Commander Yates Stirling, jr., to be a captain.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders:

Paul B. Dungan (additional number),

Franck T. Evans,

Hayne Ellis, and

Paul Foley.

Lieut. Commander Alfred G. Howe to be a commander.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders for temporary service:

William R. White (additional number),

John S. Graham,

Lloyd S. Shapley,

William K. Riddle,

John G. Church,

James H. Comfort,

George B. Landenberger,

Clarence L. Arnold,

William Norris (additional number),

Raymond S. Keyes,

Adolphus Andrews,

Frederick L. Oliver,

Thomas R. Kurtz,

Harold E. Cook,

John M. Enochs,

John P. Jackson,

Benyaurd B. Wygant,

Manley H. Simonds,

Roger Williams,

Ivan E. Bass (additional number),

William S. Pye,

Burrell C. Allen,

Arthur P. Fairfield,

John C. Fremont,

Walter N. Vernou,

Frank R. McCrary,

Percy W. Foote,

George F. Neal,

William H. Allen,

John Downes,

Joseph L. Hileman,

Charles T. Hutchins, jr.,

John J. Hannigan,

Guy W. S. Castle,

William W. Galbraith,

John V. Babcock,

Rufus F. Zogbaum, jr.,

Henry G. S. Wallace,

Roe R. Adams,

Harry A. Baldrige,

William L. Pryor,

George J. Meyers,

Edward J. Marquart,

Donald C. Bingham,

Ralph M. Griswold,

Lewis B. Porterfield,

Gilbert J. Rowcliff,

James P. Lannon, and

Ralph P. Craft.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Francis J. Comerford to be a lieutenant.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Martin J. Peterson to be a lieutenant.

Ensign Arthur E. Wills to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Medical Inspector Leckinski W. Spratling to be a medical director.

Surg. Frank L. Pleadwell to be a medical inspector.

The following-named surgeons to be medical inspectors:

John B. Dennis,

Eugene J. Grow,

Frank E. McCullough,

Ralph T. Orvis,

William H. Bell,

Holton C. Curl, and

Richmond C. Holcomb.

Passed Asst. Surg. William A. Angwin to be a surgeon.

Passed Asst. Surg. David C. Cather to be a surgeon.

Passed Asst. Paymaster Thom Williamson, jr., to be a paymaster.

Pay Clerk Verne Van M. Boggs to be an assistant paymaster.

Boatswain Francis A. Pippo to be a chief boatswain.

The following-named pharmacists to be chief pharmacists:

Alphonsus A. O'Donoghue, and

Henry A. Harris.

The following-named chief carpenters to be assistant naval constructors with rank of lieutenant (junior grade) for temporary service:

Ellis W. Craig,

George Helms,

William J. Wren,

John P. Yates,

Edward W. Smith,

Francis J. Harte,

Charles S. Taylor,

Allen D. Moseley, and

Patrick Sarsfield.

The following-named chief pay clerks to be assistant paymasters with rank of ensign for temporary service:

Edward F. Delaney,

Robert L. Gressitt,

Benjamin L. Lankford,

John J. Gering,

Eugene Dann, and

Thomas A. Henry.

The following-named noncommissioned officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for temporary service:

Raymond F. Dirksen,

Joseph Watson,

William Borghart,

Albert J. Grimes,

Edward G. Huefe,

Austin G. Rome,

Joseph Jackson,

Martin Canavan,

Leslie G. Wayt,

Charles A. Smith, and

Thomas L. Edwards.

Second Lieut. (Provisional) William H. Taylor, jr., Marine Corps Reserve, to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps for a probationary period of two years.

The following-named noncommissioned officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for temporary service:

Louie W. Putnam, and

Harry T. Rodenhoffer.

The following-named second lieutenants, Naval Militia, Marine Corps Branch, and National Naval Volunteers, Marine Corps Branch, to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for temporary service:

Second Lieut. Robert L. Duane, and Second Lieut. Stewart B. O'Neill.

The following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps for temporary service:

Frederick I. Hicks,

Phillips B. Robinson,

Thomas W. Scott,

Leo F. S. Horan,

Felix Beauchamp,

Maurice Brulay,

James B. McCormick,

Walter R. Macatee,

Philip A. Murray, jr.,

John H. Craige,

Kortright Church,

Pere Wilmer,

John N. Popham, jr.,

Reginald C. M. Peirce,

Theodore C. Johnson,

Claude M. Bain,

Bernard R. LeRoy, jr.,

Thomas A. Tighe,

Thomas W. Bowers,

John R. Foster,

Russell W. Duck,

David Bellamy,

Robert W. Claiborne,

Robert P. Jeter,

Lawrence B. Smith,

Richard O. Sanderson,

Louis S. Davis,

Archie W. French,

Jonathan Lucas, jr.,

William L. York,

Harry D. Gibbons,

John F. Williams,

Howard B. Freeman,

Bruce J. Mansfield,

Edward B. Kalbfleisch,

Chaplain G. Hicks,

Gustav H. Kaemmerling,

Colis Mitchum,

Leo D. Hermle,

Frank R. Armstead,

Lee H. Brown,

Carl J. Jessup,

Vernon R. Buxton,

Donald B. Creedy,

George R. Jackson,

Clinton I. Smallman,

Robert E. Mills,

Stewart W. Chaffee,

William F. Brown, jr.,

Roswell G. Ham,

Antonio Moschella,

Earle F. Swett,

George L. Cherry,

Walter S. Poague,

Carleton Burr,

Paul S. Hanway,

William W. Nottingham,

Charles J. Churchman,

Allan C. Perkinson,

Everett R. Brewer,

Blythe G. Jones,

Robert D. Evans,

Melvin H. Hass,

Henry Gund, jr.,

Philander B. Briscoe,

Herman R. Anderson,

Clarence M. Ruffner,

Phillip B. Blake,

Albert C. Simonds,

Horace L. Hirschler,

Kenneth K. Boynton,

Frederick L. Kolb,

George R. Coxe,

Paul E. Cheney,

Samuel J. Melick,

Darrell J. Bogardus,

Walter M. Brewer,

Garrison P. Anthes,

Chester L. Fordney,

William J. J. Elger,

King H. Young,

Hu H. Phipps,

Harold P. Nachtrieb,

Roy E. Bledsoe,

Thomas A. Langford,

Lucius Q. C. L. Lyle,

Alexander P. Brown,

Walter E. Lawson,

Neil F. Dougherty,

Evans Spalding,

Carman B. Smith,

Donald U. Bathrick,

Norman E. Burbidge,

Leland I. Tolman,

Ulva L. Ettinger,

Gerald J. Pyle,

Frederick C. Lusk,

Matson C. Terry,

Willis F. Ostrander,

Frank J. Haight,

Roy A. Stoner,

Thomas G. MacCarthy,

James H. Williamson,

David A. Redford,

George G. Munce,

Carroll F. Byrd,

Frederick S. Manter,

Ralph W. Marshall,

Samuel F. Hollins,

Raymond J. Kirwan,

Clifton B. Cates,

George T. Hall,

Hans H. Harders,

Paul E. Corriveau,
 Milton W. Vedder,
 Harold R. Ballin,
 Darius T. Wool,
 William W. Ashurst,
 Frank C. Young,
 Willard P. Leutze,
 George C. Dickey,
 Herbert S. Summers,
 Allan MacRossie, jr.,
 John W. McIver,
 Walter B. Allen,
 James R. Stockton,
 James J. Bettes,
 Phillip G. Stiles,
 Richard F. Boyd,
 Edward J. Winters,
 Hal N. Potter,
 Ralph McN. Wilcox,
 Clement A. Berghoff,
 Bernard W. Bierman,
 Walter S. Hallenberg,
 Max D. Gilfillan,
 Charles A. Etheridge,
 Carlton Hill,
 Cecil L. Eaton,
 Herman A. Zischke,
 William O. Lowe,
 Richard W. Murphy,
 Samuel E. Lawrence,
 Thomas R. Brailsford,
 Wallace A. Bell,
 Kenneth D. Ransom,
 Spencer E. Burroughs,
 George W. Renwick,
 Willis Brodhead,
 James B. Riley,
 Harry W. Le Gore,
 John I. Conroy,
 Morgan R. Mills, jr.,
 Harold Moore,
 James M. Garvey,
 John W. Overton,
 Donald T. Winder,
 Loui C. Beauman,
 Victor A. Barraco,
 Thomas O. Tate,
 James G. Somerville,
 Jack H. Tandy,
 Augustine Healy,
 Thomas H. Miles, jr.,
 Eric A. Johnston,
 William N. Wallace,
 Fred W. Maack,
 Kenneth O. Cuttle,
 Scott M. Johnston,
 Alton A. Gladden,
 William P. T. Hill,
 Robert A. Bowen, jr.,
 Henry T. Dunn,
 William E. Embry,
 Philbrick W. Jackson,
 John D. Bowling, jr.,
 Walter S. Weeks,
 William W. Carson,
 Carl G. James,
 Norman R. Jensen,
 Albert V. Williams,
 Holcomb York,
 George A. Percy,
 William B. Moore,
 Harold B. Hoskins,
 Benjamin T. Reidy,
 Paul S. Taylor,
 Marshall P. Madison,
 Lucian H. Vandoren,
 Stanley W. Burke,
 Carroll J. Single,
 John L. Gregson, jr.,
 Donald B. Cowles,
 Thornton Wilson,
 Daniel W. Bender,
 Clyde N. Bates,
 Kenneth P. Culbert,

Richard V. Hood,
 Frederick M. Bock, jr.,
 Samuel W. Meek, jr.,
 George H. Whisenhunt, jr.,
 Carl D. Brorein,
 John McHenry, jr.,
 Vincent Fitzgerald,
 Anthony W. Durell, jr.,
 William R. Brown,
 Moore M. Peregrine,
 Dunlevy C. Downs,
 James M. Wallace,
 John G. Vowell,
 Lewis R. Stickles,
 William A. Eddy,
 Lucius L. Moore,
 Oliver T. Francis,
 Carlos H. McCullough,
 Francis J. Campbell, jr.,
 Cornelius H. Reece,
 John A. West,
 Robert R. Dickey, jr.,
 Lemuel A. Haslup,
 James P. Adams,
 William A. Morrison,
 Haskin U. Deeley,
 Frederick B. Davy,
 Clarence A. Dennis,
 Sparling B. Anderson,
 Henry W. Paret, jr.,
 Louis F. Timmerman, jr.,
 Gordon M. F. Chance,
 George K. Campbell,
 Maco Stewart, jr.,
 Harry H. Barber,
 Henry R. Heebner,
 Fred C. Eastin, jr.,
 Robert C. Kilmartin, jr.,
 Edward A. Craig,
 Cameron Winslow,
 Joseph Wickes,
 James E. Hunter, jr.,
 Walter D. Frazier,
 William O. Rogers, 3d,
 Julian P. Brown,
 William E. Riley,
 John R. Hardin, jr.,
 Albert G. Skelton,
 Walter S. Fant, jr.,
 Andrew L. W. Gordon,
 Percival L. Wilson,
 Victor Romaine,
 Bernard Dubel,
 John G. Schneider, jr.,
 Caldwell C. Robinson,
 George C. Medary,
 Charles C. Simmons, jr.,
 Maurice P. King,
 George M. Williamson,
 James H. B. Brashears,
 Thomas G. Letchworth,
 Edwin C. McDonald,
 Charles H. Ulmer, and John M. McClellan.

First Lieut. Henry P. Torrey to be a captain in the Marine Corps.

Marine Gunner Charles G. Haas to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps for temporary service.

Sergt. Charles E. Rice to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps for temporary service.

Edward A. Fellowes to be a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps for temporary service.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

Henry Gilbert, Ashley.
 W. H. Chapman, Clifton.
 David B. Troxel, De Land.
 J. P. McPherran, Homer.
 James E. Caley, Mackinaw.
 William McNeill, Prophetstown.
 George A. Griffith, sr., Rankin.
 George B. Howison, Waterman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, September 11, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Jehovah, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, we thank Thee that Thou hast not left us alone to grope our way in darkness, but that Thou art ever with us, reminding us when we are forgetful, upbraiding us when we are wrong, encouraging us when we are right, imparting strength to us when we are weak. Continue, we beseech Thee, to uphold and sustain us now in the great crisis through which we are passing, that we may follow the traditions of our past and be firm in the power of truth, and leave the world a better place to live in for those who shall come after us, in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinite leave of absence for Gov. SANDERS, of Louisiana, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana] be granted indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BROWNING indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

CONDITIONS IN ILLINOIS AND MISSOURI (H. REPT. NO. 142).

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 128.

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and make report as to whether conditions existing in the State of Illinois and the State of Missouri at any time during the year 1917, or in either of said States, obstruct or interfere with interstate commerce or render unsafe to person or property, travel from other States into or out of either of said States, and particularly as to whether there is or has been danger of violence to persons traveling from or into either of the States named.

Said committee shall also investigate and report whether travel from or into either of said States is, or has been, obstructed or rendered dangerous by reason of riots, strikes, mob violence, or failure of State authorities to enforce the law during the year 1917; and if said committee shall conclude that commerce between said States is, or has been, interfered with, or that travel of citizens into and out of the States aforesaid is, or has been, obstructed or rendered unsafe, it shall fully investigate and report the causes of such conditions, particularly the riots, murders, arsons, and other violations of law, strikes, and disturbances, alleged to have occurred in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., during the months of May, June, and July of the year aforesaid, and the causes thereof.

Said committee shall also inquire and ascertain whether obstruction of or interference with travel or interstate commerce between the two States aforesaid affects or has affected in any way contracts made by persons or corporations with the Government of the United States for the manufacture or delivery of war supplies; and for the purposes aforesaid the committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and enforce their appearance and to administer oaths.

Said committee also is hereby authorized and empowered to require witnesses to answer all questions propounded by any member thereof touching the investigation ordered and to require any witness called before it to testify fully as to any information in his possession, whether in the nature of hearsay testimony or otherwise, relative to the inquiry ordered; and it may hold hearings at any place in the States of Illinois or Missouri, as well as in the city of Washington, and shall have power to report at any time.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. I do not think any discussion is necessary. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield before he demands the previous question?

Mr. POU. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether any provision has been made in this resolution for paying the expenses of this committee?

Mr. POU. The resolution would not be privileged if that was done. We left that to the Committee on Accounts. That was purposely left out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it would still be privileged if provision for paying the expenses of the committee were incorporated in the resolution, in my opinion.

Mr. POU. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wished to make certain that some provision would be made, so as to make effective the work of this committee. That is the reason I rose.

Mr. POU. I think the gentleman can be assured that that will be done, and that such action as is necessary will be taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as such committee Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Mr. RAKER, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, and Mr. FOSS.

CHAPLAINS AT LARGE.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5271) authorizing the appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 5271, which provides for the appointment of additional chaplains at large. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the purpose of the gentleman's bill, it is to provide these additional chaplains during the period of the war only.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; for the emergency only.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection, with the approval of the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, if unanimous consent is granted, to have an amendment inserted after the word "appoint" in line 3 "for service during the war," so that it will read—

That the President may appoint for service during the war not exceeding 20 chaplains at large?

Mr. SIEGEL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or during the present emergency.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will have no objection if that amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. How many chaplains can be appointed now?

Mr. SIEGEL. None of the Jewish, or any other faith, except the Catholic and Protestant faiths, the way the law is at the present time.

Mr. CANNON. There is a chaplain for each regiment now?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is a chaplain for each regiment now.

Mr. CANNON. Then this would give 20 regiments 2 chaplains each?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no. These chaplains will cover the various camps throughout the entire country. The situation is as follows: At the present time there is not a single chaplain of the Jewish faith in the Army of the United States. The number of men of the Jewish faith who will be called into the national army, as well as the Regular Army, will be at least 60,000 men, and the idea is to have these chaplains cover the 37 camps and the 20 base hospitals in the United States, and to cover the Army camps and base hospitals in France.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemen speak loud enough so that we can hear?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been trying for seven years to get them to do that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, why have no chaplains of the Jewish faith been appointed?

Mr. SIEGEL. For this reason: The people of the Jewish faith in this country have for a long number of years opposed the idea of the formation of regiments composed solely or principally of men of the Jewish faith. The prevalent idea with us—and I think a proper idea in a country like ours—is that men of the Jewish faith should go into any regiment throughout the United States and not attempt to get into regiments in numbers in order that a sufficient number of them may be in any particular regiment so that a chaplain of the Jewish faith might be appointed.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand that the rule has been that you select chaplains of the particular faith that has a majority of men in the regiment?

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the gentleman that the way chaplains are appointed at the present time, according to the information I have received, is as follows: You ascertain from a regiment as to whether there are more men of the Catholic or of the Protestant faith in that regiment. If there are more soldiers of the Protestant faith a Protestant chaplain is appointed. If there are more soldiers of the Catholic faith, then a Catholic chaplain is appointed for that regiment.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman means in the regiment.

Mr. SIEGEL. In each particular regiment.

Mr. WINGO. That does not answer my question. The gentleman intimated that there was a rule of segregation.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not mean a rule of segregation. Thirty-six per cent of all the chaplains in the Army are Catholic and 64 per cent are Protestants. That explains the percentages.

Mr. WINGO. That does not tell the story to me. I asked the gentleman why men of the Jewish faith have been excluded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can tell the gentleman. The number of Jews of the various regiments have been so insignificant, apparently, that no one would think of appointing a chaplain, a rabbi of the Jewish faith, to administer spiritual comfort to men of Christian denomination any more than they would appoint a Christian minister for religious purposes to Jews.

Mr. WINGO. If the conditions are not changed, how are you going to have a rabbi now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conditions have changed. As I understand, it is designed to have these chaplains a sort of roving chaplains, not attached to any particular organization, but stationed at places where large numbers of organizations would be stationed, so that the men in the various organizations would have available the services of a minister of their own faith.

Mr. WINGO. I have been led to believe that the selection of chaplains is governed on a basis of population of different faiths and not on the basis of the choice of the regiment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand in determining the number of chaplains of the various denominations they are allotted from the number authorized in the preparation of the religious statistics.

Mr. WINGO. I had the same idea, but the gentleman from New York says that they determine by the faith of the majority of the regiment.

Mr. SIEGEL. I understand that. They have allowed each regiment to select the religious faith of the chaplain.

Mr. WINGO. The rule that the gentleman states is contrary to the advice I have had from time to time.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have discussed the matter repeatedly. At first the Secretary of War thought he had the general power the same as the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WINGO. I think the Jewish faith should be represented, but if you let down the bars and have chaplains at large we all know what it is going to lead to.

Mr. SIEGEL. This has reference to such denominations as are not represented in the Army now.

Mr. WINGO. How many denominations does the gentleman understand there are in the United States?

Mr. SIEGEL. I might say that there are quite a few.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman give us any idea?

Mr. SIEGEL. Well, there are the Protestants and the Catholics and the Jews—

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman need not give us in detail, for it would take two or three hours.

Mr. SIEGEL. I suppose there might be 60, but these 30 chaplains are to be of other sects exclusive of the Catholic and the Protestant.

Mr. WINGO. Does the bill confine it to the Jewish faith?

Mr. SIEGEL. No.

Mr. WINGO. What other denominations are you asking for?

Mr. SIEGEL. I understand the Christian Scientists have made a request, and there are others that have made requests. I will read the language of the act:

That the President may appoint not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now recognized by law.

But it does not make it mandatory as far as the 20 chaplains are concerned.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did not the Secretary advise not more than 10?

Mr. WINGO. My objection does not go to the religious sect. I know that there is an extraordinary demand for many sects to be represented and I do not want to open a Pandora's box. I have no interest in the appointment of any chaplain, but if we break down the rule we may cause more trouble than we are in now.

Mr. SIEGEL. In France there are several thousand men of the Jewish faith and we have had to call on the British chaplains of the Jewish faith to attend to the work in that country.

Mr. WINGO. I think they ought to have some one of their own faith, but the gentleman recognizes what we are getting into if we open up this question.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand if chaplains are selected of the Jewish faith they will be used for the purpose of traveling around from camp to camp to administer spiritual welfare to members of the Jewish faith at the camps during the present war.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; and to cover the hospitals as well.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think it is entirely proper to recognize the Jewish religion; but my objection, if I have an objection to the measure, is that deliberately it has been undertaken to double the number of chaplains that the Secretary of War said would be required. I know the limitation that he may do it.

Mr. SIEGEL. We have reserve officers and reserve camps; and at the time that the Secretary wrote the original letter he did not have in mind, or it was not called to his attention, that the base hospitals would require chaplains, and that the base hospitals were located at some distance from the camp.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has he written another letter recanting?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; it is not necessary for him to recant. He is trying to do the best a man can in a trying position in a critical time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that my objection to the bill is the deliberate effort to provide authorization for the appointment of 20. My objection would run against a Catholic or Protestant or anybody else. I do not want to increase the frightful expense we are under now beyond reason.

Mr. SIEGEL. The chaplain gets $2,000 a year. The Secretary wrote two letters. In one he asked for chaplains for base hospitals, and then he wrote a second letter—the same as that written to me and to Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas. So there are two letters in existence, one asking for chaplains for the base hospitals and the other asking for chaplains to cover the camps. And the Senate Military Committee reported out a bill requiring 20; the House Military Committee unanimously reported out the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the gentleman run counter to the specific recommendation of the War Department as to the number?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; because two separate letters have been written at two separate times.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, did he suggest 20 in the second communication?

Mr. SIEGEL. One communication is confined to base hospitals and pays no attention to this part at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But has he made any recommendation as to the number, except in the first letter?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear; but can not we license these preachers and go on with the insurance bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is my objection—to increasing the number recommended.

Mr. SIEGEL. The committee had the matter under consideration and went into the whole matter thoroughly.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is satisfied that a portion of these chaplains, if they are authorized by law, would be of Jewish faith?

Mr. SIEGEL. I am.

Mr. CANNON. Then I venture the statement that the Christian Scientists and Unitarians many times exceed in the Army the number of the Jewish faith. Does the gentleman believe a portion of those appointed would be Christian Scientists?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. CANNON. And a proportion Unitarians?

Mr. SIEGEL. I presume so, if they have no representation now.

Mr. CANNON. Would the Mormons have representation?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not know anything about that part of it. It is up to the Secretary of War. All I know is the situation I have described.

Mr. CANNON. There are a great many Unitarians, and they and the Hebrews believe in one God. Does the gentleman believe one chaplain could administer to both?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will be frank to say that I read somewhere that President Taft seemed to think so at one time. He was a frequent visitor to Rabbi Wise's temple in the city of Cincinnati, and I think he stated he was brought up there practically and learned much that he knew about religion there. However, it is not a subject I am going to discuss at length. Each man has the absolute right to his own religious views.

Mr. CANNON. I am not going to object, but I wanted to call attention to the Christian Scientists, because that has gotten to be very large in number.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to know if any Member of the House has ever seen authoritative decision as to the proper interpretation of that clause of the Constitution which says Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion. For what religious purpose can Congress appropriate money? I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5271) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President may appoint not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now recognized by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "appoint," insert the words "for service during the present emergency."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. SIEGEL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the war-risk insurance bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may use such part of 15 minutes as I may need.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for not exceeding 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor in the time allotted to make some general remarks showing my conception of the character and purposes of this bill, without endeavoring to go into all the details, which have been thoroughly discussed by preceding speakers. I wish in the outset to assure those gentlemen who are sensitive about existing systems that we have no hostility to any pension system or any pension legislation, nor any criticism of the administration. The bureau does its best under the existing circumstances and unfavorable conditions. We think it is high time, in response to the demands of civilization, that we establish a scientific system covering the whole field more easily understood and administered, which is made necessary by modern occurrences. I believe if a bill like this had been enacted into law in the beginning of the Civil War we would have had a much more satisfactory experience in dealing with the soldiers, more satisfactory both to the soldiers and to the Government. Our Government did not have time then to do it. Nobody anticipated what was coming, and it was impossible to make such an arrangement then. This is in no sense a pension law. It is absolutely an insurance law from one end to the other. A pension is a voluntary contribution or allowance made by a government in recognition of the valor and services of those who have served the government when other arrangements and other specifications had not been made.

The pension system began when the barbarians were assaulting Rome, and it was necessary to hew down the bridge in order to prevent the invasion, and Horatius and two comrades stood at the bridge until the bridge was hewn down, slaying many of the assailants. And then Horatius swam the river and safely reached the other side of the Tiber. And pensions started there. They made no contract with him, but afterwards—

They gave him of the corn lands
Which were of common right
As much as two strong oxen
Could plow from morn till night.
And with laughing and with weeping
Until this day the story is told
How well Horatius kept the bridge
In the brave days of old.

When this world war began, before we became a party to it, it became necessary to insure our ships and cargoes in order to carry our commerce abroad, because marine insurance companies would not and could not assume the war risk. Insurance is a business and a science applicable to various lines of business which are classified, and rates and regulations apply according to the business; but you do not move the seat of insurance every time you deal with a different class of business. When we found it necessary that the Government should insure the cargoes and ships a bill was introduced for that purpose. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] had a notion that it should go to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, because it related to ships. But insurance may relate to all lines of business and all things, and it was not marine insurance, anyhow. It was war-risk insurance. The Committee on Military Affairs might have claimed it against us, if any committee could, but it went to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, because it related to the business of the country. I want to say now, by way of parentheses, that those gentlemen who are more expert than we are and those committees which claim superiority of wisdom and jurisdiction could have conferred a great favor on us by saying this two months ago, because we who stayed here and labored on this bill day and night had as much right as anybody to go home during the three weeks of recess by gentlemen's understanding. But that is over, and after we had stayed here and worked upon it, gathering information and furnishing it daily to the Members, and have reported to the House, gentlemen come in and say that we have not jurisdiction of it.

Another objection to it is that it was written outside of the committee. But our consideration is not limited to bills that members of the committee introduce. A great many bills are written outside or by Members of Congress and come in, but they become the property of the committee during their consideration, and then become the property of the House. I say here reverently, and do not reflect upon anybody, that sometimes bills come there, introduced by Members of Congress, that are not absolutely perfect. You can not expect that of everybody. We took this bill and worked on it, and believe it to be a good bill.

After the original war-risk law was enacted, we found that the sailors would not go on the merchant ships without insurance. So the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] introduced a bill to amend the law by providing to insure the sailors—the crews on the ships. It was an amendment to the act already establishing an insurance bureau in the Treasury Department. No other committee claimed jurisdiction of that. It went right straight to where it belonged, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; and if insurance is not commerce, I do not know what it is; and if the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is not authorized to handle insurance, I do not know what committee of this House is authorized to do so.

We reported that amendment and it went through the House all right. While that bill was under consideration in the House, gentlemen asked me, "Why do you not bring in a bill to insure the soldiers of this war?" I said, "Well, nobody has introduced a bill; it has not been brought to my attention. We have been busy with the other war measures at this session. Whenever a bill is introduced, if it is referred to our committee, we will consider it."

This bill was gotten up after two or three months of investigation and preparation by the experts of this country. In and out of Congress. And gentlemen say, "You did not get the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions, or the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy." They are mistaken. The gentleman from Missouri [Judge ALEXANDER] here has a letter showing the members of the Cabinet unanimously approve it. The President approves it, and it is all right. Be that as it may, it came in here and was referred, and was reported. It is the property of this House. If anybody here is able to improve it, the way is open. If he is willing to contribute his superior wisdom to correct the bill in any way, he can do so.

There are two sections of the bill. We have read one section. The second section is one amendment to the old act. There are four articles in it. The absolute refusal of the insurance companies to insure sailors and soldiers without a differential to the premium added of $50 a thousand made it absolutely necessary for us to amend this law so as to include them. Why? Insurance is not a matter of compulsion. When there is no war, men insure when they please. They do not insure when they do not please. We drafted the soldiers into this service. We have put them into the service. We destroyed their insurability. We caused them to encounter prohibitive rates. Our first duty was to remove that incubus, that handicap that we had put on them. By sending them to war we have added $50 per thousand to their cost of insurance, and we said we would commence by taking that off. We do not force them to take insurance. We simply restore what we deprived them of, their insurability. Now, we say, "Now, go on, and if the companies will not insure you, we will insure you at the normal rate of cost. We will bear the $50 additional. That is all." We simply make restitution, which is the first step in religion, or patriotism, or anything that is honest and good.

The first article in the bill provides for the administration of the bureau. It makes the appropriation. It makes all the definition. It makes provisions touching the subsequent sections about insurance. If you strike out the first section, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] says he is going to move to do, you have cut off the head of the bill. You leave it necessary to invent something new or reconstruct this draft from one end to the other.

Well, Mr. Chairman, ought it to be done? The second article provides, not for the pay of soldiers. We have not interfered with that. That is for the Committee on Military Affairs. There is no doubt about it. But as a part of the insurance bill we deal with his property—his salary. We are going to insure him both as to accidents and life, if he wants it. So we provide for his family, the unit to which this bill gives consideration, and affection, and protection. We say that soldier shall make a contribution to his family, for we say that in order to protect him against himself and make him a better and more efficient soldier we insure him by guarding a part of the salary that he draws, all of which is a method of insurance. It takes care of his family and it takes care of him. We then give his family as much as he gives his family.

The next section is accident insurance, pure and simple. Gentlemen say it is a pension. It is the opposite of a pension. It is as far from a pension as is the east from the west. If you take your accident policy and read it you will see that it is an accident policy, pure and simple. They call it "compensation." Well, we have precedents for it, one in the Panama law and one in the compensation law for Government employees, and if there is anything in any pension like it, it is in imitation of accident insurance.

The last section I have already talked about. It is to restore the insurability of the man. But before leaving article 111(3), I want to refer to one of the best things in it—that Dr. FESS, the gentleman from Ohio, is going to talk about—and that is, if a man, expert in one thing, becomes so disabled as to be disqualified for that, the Government will proceed to rehabilitate and reeducate him so as to make him a useful citizen for something else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its indulgence and kindness. I desired to make a connected statement concerning the bill without going into details.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not care to. The other gentlemen have yielded for three days. They have answered every possible question. They have answered enough questions to educate a university. I wanted to give you a connected statement of the true character of this bill and I think I have done it, and I thank you for your attention to me.

I hope that the Committee of the Whole House will disagree to the amendment of our committee reducing the amount of insurance from ten to five thousand; and in support of my wish in that respect, I submit the following telegram from a prominent insurance company:

Houston, Tex., September 11.

WILLIAM G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

The President, in his letter to Chairman ADAMSON, expressed regret that the maximum amount of extra insurance available to sailors, soldiers, etc., did not remain at the figure of $10,000 instead of having been reduced by one-half. The management of this company desires to be placed on record as indorsing the President's views on this question.

O. S. CARLTON,
President Great Southern Life Insurance Co.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STONE, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. PENROSE, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2785) to authorize and empower the Southwest Louisiana Waterways Association, of the State of Louisiana, to construct a lock and dam in Mermentau River, in the State of Louisiana.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee renew its sitting.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina want to pass on anything?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. We will pass it over; not now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the war-risk insurance bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is again in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 1, which begins on page 1, line 3. In striking out that section we leave the legislative section as it was, striking out the addition of lines 6 to 11 on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: "Page 1, line 3, strike out all of section 1 of this bill, so as to leave the original section 1 as it was, striking out the addition of lines 6 to 11 on page 2."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that part of the motion which is explanatory has no part in the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I was afraid it would strike out the whole section.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman would strike out the first section it would not repeal the law as it stands in the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I move simply to strike out The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves section 1 of this act, not in the original act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I will explain my motion, so that there will be no doubt about it. We had an act of which section 1 is as follows:

SECTION 1. That there is established in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, the director of which shall receive a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum.

Nobody wants to disturb that. Section 1 of this present act amends section 1 of the other act, so as to add to it the following words—

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to get on.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has made a misstatement when the gentleman says the present act places the salary of the director at $6,000. It is $5,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Well, $5,000. This act changes that to $6,000, and then adds a provision as follows:

That there be in such bureau a division of marine and seamen's insurance and a division of military and naval insurance in charge of a commissioner of marine and seamen's insurance and a commissioner of military and naval insurance, respectively, each of whom shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum.

Now, there is nobody in the House who has heard this debate who does not understand that this establishes a new bureau, which is called one of Military and Naval Insurance, or a new division of that kind, and that that division is to take into its hands three things. One is the allotment of soldiers' pay and family allowances to their families while they are in the service. In every army or navy in the world where that is done, that is done by the army or the navy itself. The recruiting officers find what family a man has got; the man is told that if he has a family he can not have any family allowance from the government unless he assigns part of his pay. He thereupon allots part of his pay and thereupon becomes entitled to a family allowance, which is paid directly by the war department or navy department to the man's family. This bill would put that into the hands of a bureau, an outside bureau, to whom application would have to be made by the family, with correspondence with the military and naval authorities and all the delay that occurs in pensions, and the poor soldier and his family would be left without any relief until millions of applications to this new bureau had been passed upon.

I do not believe in that. It ought to be done by the military and naval authorities, and the bureau has no functions there. In the second place, Mr. Chairman, we have a system of pensions. This bill calls those pensions compensation and gives the same thing, which is nothing but payment from year to year to old soldiers who are disabled or to the families of those who are dead. It may be the amounts are right, but these payments can best be made by the Bureau of Pensions, which knows all about this subject and has the machinery and the thousands of boards that can investigate; and to put it in a new bureau is to leave these people until the new bureau is organized and made as big as the present Pension Bureau, or bigger, without relief in the meantime. That relief ought to stay where it now is.

In the third place this bill puts in the hands of this new bureau what they call military and naval insurance. It is provided that the men shall pay for it. I do not think this House believes that certain men ought to get insurance and certain others not. If there is going to be the addition of what may be called insurance payable to the family of a man who is dead, or to the man himself if he is disabled, it is in the nature of a pension, and it ought to go to everybody alike and not to certain ones, as it is proposed to be done, at $25 a month provisionally. This new bureau would not administer them half as well as the Bureau of Pensions will do it, and it ought to remain with the Bureau of Pensions, even if the men pay anything for it. I want to strike out this section, for I want in the beginning to get rid of this new bureau, which will only confuse the administration of the law and postpone the relief of the soldier and the relief of his family. The way to get the question before the House now is to strike out the provision for any new bureau. We will talk more of these matters when we reach them, as the bill is read, and article 2, which has to do with the relief of the soldier's family while he is in the service, should go to the military and naval authorities and be administered directly, without delay. Article 3 should go to the Bureau of Pensions, and article 4 to the same bureau.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, may we have some understanding about how we will proceed on this motion, or shall we close debate now?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This is under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know, and we are entitled to one speech for the amendment and one speech against it, unless we change the rule by agreement.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I suppose that is so. I do not want to delay your bill. I have made my speech.

Mr. ADAMSON. How much time would you like to have on this motion?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not want any more time.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I should like five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will 10 minutes on that side be sufficient?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that will be sufficient.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] does not want his five minutes now on this specific amendment, does he? He can make his speech just as well on the remaining part of article 1.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to leave very soon, and I should like my five minutes now.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section close in 20 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of which five minutes shall be had by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. SIMS. I am not going to object to this request, but from this time on we will consider this bill under the rules of the House, unless there can be some agreement made by which a vote is to be taken at a particular time.

Mr. GILLETT. What does the gentleman mean by "under the rules of the House"?

Mr. SIMS. One speech for and one speech against each amendment, and every speech confined to the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. But you can move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and you can discuss striking it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to know who is in charge of the bill, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] or the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SIMS. I am as much in charge of the rules of the House as any other Member, and of that part of the rules which says that there shall be one speech for and one speech against each amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then you violate the gentlemen's agreement which was had when this bill was taken up.

Mr. SIMS. I said I would not object to this extension.

Mr. ADAMSON. Gentlemen on the other side want 15 minutes, and we want 10 minutes on this side, so I will ask that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 25 minutes—15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. ESCH. We would like 18 minutes on this side.

Mr. ADAMSON. Eighteen minutes on that side, which will make it 28 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 28 minutes—18 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to propound an inquiry as to what the Chair thinks section 1 includes.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 1 undoubtedly includes down to line 12 on page 2. The Chair is in some doubt as to what section 2 includes, but there is no doubt about what section 1 includes. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object I should like to inquire how many amendments are pending to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. One amendment is now pending.

Mr. WALSH. That is the motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is the motion to strike out.

Mr. WALSH. This agreement does not preclude offering other amendments during the 28 minutes, does it?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not. It would preclude debate upon them at the end of the 28 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. I believe we should keep the law as it is and create a new division in the war-risk insurance bureau to take care of the duties imposed by the passage of this bill. It is claimed that the Pension Bureau should take over the functions of this bill.

The Pension Bureau has had no experience in any of the important duties that would be devolved upon it by this bill. It has had no experience in the matter of family allotments. The family allotment under the act relating to the Mexican border was not sent to the Pension Bureau; it was kept in the War Department. It has had no experience in matters of compensation as provided in this bill. It has had no experience in the matter of life insurance. Therefore, the three functions that will devolve upon the agency to carry out this law are totally foreign to the Pension Bureau. For that reason I feel that a new division should be created upon which should devolve the duties created by this bill.

Another thing. The Pension Bureau, as known to all of us, is afflicted by superannuation more than any other bureau in the Government. The reason is plain. The old soldiers and their widows have been given employment in that bureau, and no one of us complains about that. They are doing the best they can. But a large number of these clerks have passed beyond the age of highest efficiency, and yet they are retained because we believe they should be retained.

Now, if you devolve upon the Pension Bureau the duties of this act you will be putting on a bureau already suffering from superannuation an additional burden in carrying out the provisions of this bill. That does not seem to be wise. The Bureau of Pensions has duties enough now. Officials are trying to be as efficient as they can be under the circumstances, but they have more than they can do. They are six months behind because of the widows' pension act of last year, which has added largely to their duties, and you would still more increase the congested condition in which this bureau now is. We need a new bureau to take care of the family allowances and the compensation and insurance. This new bureau has already had experience in the matter of compensation. We have given to it the duty of carrying out the provisions of the war-risk insurance in relation to seamen and vessels, and it has done efficient work. Some 10,000 seamen are insured. They are getting an experience that will be required in carrying out the provisions of this bill. We need merely to enlarge and extend the force of clerks and experts that they now have to take care of the additional work that this bill would require.

It is said by the gentleman from New Jersey that the Pension Bureau has the necessary boards throughout the country to take care of the work in the field. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the provision in section 15, which reads:

The director may obtain such information and such reports from employees of the departments of the Government of the United States and of the States as may be agreed upon by the heads of the respective departments.

This new bureau can therefore avail itself for the purposes of information and reports of the organization and machinery of the Pension Bureau. For these reasons I firmly believe that the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey should not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish first to ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. Generally speaking, however, I wish to express my approval of the purposes and objects of the bill. In the more than eight years that I have been a Member of this House there have been no bills for which I have voted with greater pleasure and delight than I have for the pension bills that have provided pensions for our soldiers who in various wars have protected the honor and preserved the life of this Nation. So I am heartily in sympathy with the objects and purposes of this bill.

At this session we have been voting for a number of very important measures, some of them, in fact all of them, of very far-reaching influence. Very naturally in voting on these measures we have realized how important they are. We may have had doubt at times as to how we should vote on some of these bills. But it seems to me that here is a bill upon which there should be no difference of opinion, a bill upon which there can be no doubt about how we should vote.

It appears to me, so far as I have been able to discuss this bill, that it is an improvement over the so-called pension system. It is more scientific, and it seems to me it will give greater satisfaction to the soldier. It is much broader in its scope, and has, in my opinion, many things about it that will make it superior to our pension laws.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In what way?

Mr. MORGAN. In the first place, the insurance provision.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Omit the insurance provision and take the pension feature of it.

Mr. MORGAN. In my judgment it is more liberal. It will afford larger pensions and allotments, and I do not think we can be too liberal.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This bill gives to a man who loses both of his eyes $40 a month; under the present pension laws he gets $100 a month.

Mr. MORGAN. It is possible that in that particular it may not be so liberal, but as to the widows and children of the soldiers I think it is much more liberal, and this provision with reference to the loss of both eyes can be easily amended. I do not mean that this bill can not be made better, that we should not try to perfect it, but I am talking about the general principle. As I say, we can not be too liberal. Sometimes people think that all of our pension laws are too liberal. People think that our expenditures for pensions for soldiers in the past have been too big. I do not think so. I think it would have been better if they had been more liberal. I will vote for any kind of a tax in order that we may give proper recognition to the men who go out and fight the battles of this Nation. That is a broad principle. There are many men who render service to the Nation that we do not pension, such as men who save life, and who in the professions, through some great discovery or some great invention, render almost incomprehensible service to our country. But we do not pension them, and why?

The soldier renders services when the Nation is imperiled, and it is a service which is very hazardous to his limbs, to his health, and to his life. He renders services which require great sacrifices upon his part, sacrifices upon the part of his dependents, sacrifices upon the part of his wife and children, and this distinguishes him from all others. He renders a service also which requires great bravery, heroism, courage, and patriotism—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN (continuing). Which can not be required in any other kind of service. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not article 3 of this bill place that service upon the same basis as service in a factory?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, possibly so; but that does not make any difference so far as the principle of this bill is concerned. I think that our compensation laws for injuries in factories are good laws. Does the gentleman oppose them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not at all; I am in favor of them; but I do not believe you can compensate a man for service rendered in the trenches.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand you can not fully compensate him.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is all I say—

Mr. MORGAN. You can not be too liberal; but what is a pension but compensation? You do not change the principle of the thing by changing the name. We can not compensate, we can not do justice, we can only in an insignificant and niggardly way in part compensate them for what they have done for their country.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then the gentleman will vote to strike out article 3?

Mr. MORGAN. I will decide that when I come to it. I believe that is all I want to say at this time, but I wish to give my approval to every attempt that is made to provide in some way a proper recognition to the men who in this great war shall fight our battles and win for us a great victory. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, there is not the slightest doubt about what we ought to do with this bill. We ought to take the family allotment section, which is good, out of the bill and enact it now, so as to let it go into effect as soon as possible. We ought to take it away from the controversial part of the bill which may hang it up in the Senate for a long time when it gets there. I think the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey to that end is wholly good. This family allotment and allowance matter has been taken care of in the War Department before. They know all about how to administer it, and they have the records to which constant reference must be made. If a separate bureau is created it will have to go to the War Department for information, and for that reason I am heartily in favor of the motion to strike out this section of the bill. Then if we can enact Title 2 we will give the relief which is immediately needed to the soldiers and their families who are dependent. In regard to the rest of the bill there is no particular reason for haste. The present pension system is in effect and nobody is complaining about it. The Regular Army and National Guard have been raised to war strength under its guarantees. Among others I resent the slur that is put upon the pension system by the Secretary of the Treasury, when he says that it is outworn and discredited. It seems to me the resentment that has been expressed here is warranted. It has been said that the Pension Bureau is now overcrowded with business on account of the administration of the widows' pension act of September 8, 1916, which we passed last fall, but that is nearly over with. Most of the widows are already on the rolls and the increases require no additional evidence, so the glut of business in the Pension Office will not last long. That bureau could much more easily take care of Title 3 of this bill, which is the pension section, than any new bureau could. I therefore heartily support the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey to strike out the section, for I believe it is in the interest of the soldiers to have Title 2 taken from the rest of the bill for early enactment into law. Its administration should be given to the War and Navy Departments, and not to a new bureau or a new division in the War Risk Bureau. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] has just well said the legislation now needed is the legislation contained in section 2 of this bill, providing for family allowances, and it should be placed upon our statute books at once and without the delay incident to the passage of an involved and complex statute like this. This is particularly true in view of the fact that while most of us understood that under the draft men with dependent families would not be drawn, yet they are being drawn and provision should be made for their families at once.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The duty of taking care of that class of people can be very well provided for, as it was during the presence of our troops on the Mexican border without a new and expensive bureau. I yield.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think the provisions of section 3 are in imminent need also?

Mr. MONDELL. As to the provisions of section 3—

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that one American officer, Lieut. Fitzsimmons, of Kansas City, has already been killed by a bomb from a German airman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the pension under the general law is more liberal than this.

Mr. BORLAND. And he leaves a dependent mother in Kansas City.

Mr. MONDELL. That officer's case will be cared for now under the present law. Now, as to the balance of the bill, it is a question in my mind whether the provisions of article 3 are more liberal and satisfactory than our present pension laws, particularly if our pension laws were slightly amended. The provisions of this bill are not very well understood by any of us. We propose to put them under the management and control of an entirely new bureau. It is said that they are more scientifically adjusted and will prove more satisfactory than our present pension laws. There is some doubt about that in my mind, a very serious doubt about it, but in any event if we are willing to accept the judgment of the committee as to these compensation provisions there is no reason why a new and expensive bureau should be organized for the execution of the law.

I have not had the opportunity to carefully examine the provisions of section 3 which contains the pension or as they are called, the compensation provisions, but from a rather hurried examination of them, I am inclined to the opinion that in quite a variety of cases the enlisted man is not nearly so fairly, equitably, or liberally provided for as under the present pension laws. On the other hand, I am of the opinion, in fact I am quite certain, that under certain circumstances and conditions officers would be much more liberally provided for than they are now. In fact, in certain cases, the officer and his family would be better provided for by the Government when suffering from disability than when he was well and in active service on full pay. Clearly the bill needs more careful consideration than the House has given it.

In any event and whatever the provision of the law as to pensions or compensation there is not any reason why the present Pension Bureau can not do the work and do it expeditiously and satisfactorily.

Now, as to the insurance portion of the bill, it seems to me we are embarking upon a doubtful enterprise in that portion of the bill. The well to do, the officer, the long-headed individual will avail himself of the insurance privilege. The ordinary soldier in many instances will not. If we are to add compensation to that provided in the other sections of the bill, the compensation should be without charge on the men, and the benefit should go to all alike.

The fact is that it is misleading to refer to the so-called insurance provisions as insurance, for the insured under any form of policy is supposed to pay a sum in the way of a premium which experience has proven is sufficient to carry and pay the losses. The rate proposed is about one-seventh or one-eighth of the estimated war risk, so that the Government would be carrying seventh-eighths of the risk.

If the compensation or pension provisions are not sufficient or as high as they should be, we should increase them without cost to the soldier and all should be treated alike; but this so-called insurance plan, optional as it is, is either altogether too liberal from the standpoint of the people who have to pay the bills to the few men, officers and others, well to do, who might take advantage of it, or else it is not liberal enough because it does not make provision under which all equally deserving shall have the same treatment. Pensions, compensation, whatever you may call them, from the Government to the men in military service should be uniform, corresponding with the need, the character of the service, and the injury or disability or loss. Without desiring to express any opinion as to a national insurance policy, the so-called insurance provisions of this bill are, in my opinion, unfair and unjust to the people who pay the taxes, and not uniformly just, fair, or equitable to the men who are called upon to serve their country.

Gentlemen assume that if we pass this bill we shall have no more special pension legislation. Why, we would have more special bills here under the insurance section alone than we have to-day under our pension laws, because men would insist that inasmuch as the Government was only getting a very small sum in the way of premiums, the failure to pay that small sum, the failure to provide the premium, the failure to take advantage of it, should not work disadvantageously with one man, possibly with a large family, as against another man with no one dependent upon him. We would be continually called upon to equalize the inequalities that would arise under that system. My opinion is that it is a very doubtful propriety in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks that I made a few minutes ago by printing the letter to which I referred, showing the approval of the Secretaries in the Cabinet, and also the telegram from the president of the Southern Life Insurance Co. indorsing the bill and asking that the insurance be increased from the amount written in the bill—$5,000—to $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by publishing the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I shall take but a very few minutes of the time I control, as I do not deem it necessary. Of course, the argument made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can be taken up when we reach the insurance provision, but his saying that Article II is the only part of this bill that ought to be passed, and indorsing that fully, is rather remarkable to me. To be candid with you, I have had more trouble with Article II than any other article in this bill, for the simple reason that in that article—and I indorse it fully—we are forcibly taking something away from somebody. All the rest of the articles in the bill are giving something to somebody.

Now, this amendment offered by my good friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] reminds me very much of an occurrence in the Texas Legislature at one time. I had an old friend there from over in east Texas who introduced a bill. He did not have very much experience in legislation or in the effect of amendment, and when he presented his pet bill one day somebody offered an amendment to strike out the enacting clause. And the old fellow pleaded with them as his friends not to adopt that amendment as he was afraid it would ruin his bill. [Applause.]

That is the attitude in which we will be put if the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is adopted. We will have a great, long bill here with four articles in it but with no head on it. And I do not think the committee will take seriously the proposition to strike from this bill section 1. And I think that the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] was so conclusive on this proposition that I will not take any more of my time on it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman controls the debate, as I understand, and has some time left.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been very liberal in yielding, and I want to expedite this bill.

Mr. CANNON. After all is said and done, you can not speak to an amendment after the gentleman sits down. And he has some time left. I will be very glad to call his attention to section 1, which creates a director at $6,000, whereas the Commissioner of Pensions gets now, and never has gotten more than, $5,000. There is a Deputy Commissioner of Pensions at $3,000, and only one. Here we have a director of a division of marine and seamen's insurance and a director of a division of military and naval insurance at $5,000 each. So at the very commencement you have gotten permanently $16,000 as against $8,000 in the Pension Office.

Mr. RUCKER. The deputy commissioner gets $3,600.

Mr. CANNON. It is $3,000. I suggest along with other provisions in this bill, where you can make an army of high-salaried employees, with power to adjust these matters, that you take them between the ages exempt from draft.

I do not know that I shall vote against this bill, but it seems to me that it ought to be better guarded. And right here, when the example is set in the very first section, of a director at $6,000, and then two, one at the head of the military and one at the head of the navy division, at $5,000 each, we had better set a good example by making salaries to conform with salaries of other employees in the Government heretofore administering similar legislation for the relief of the soldiers and sailors.

I would not interrupt the gentleman, but I can not debate the motion—

Mr. RAYBURN. I am glad the gentleman is making the statement, and I will be glad to reply to it.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; and I will be glad to make the amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have this to say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I value his judgment.

It is true perhaps that the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions does not get more than $3,600 a year, and I feel pretty certain that they have got a $3,600 man down there. It may be true that the Commissioner of Pensions gets only $5,000 a year, but I think it probably more than likely you can get a $5,000 man to attend to that job. But under this bill you can not get a man who can administer this law at $3,600 a year, in my opinion. Down there it is all routine, all laid out. The system is going along. Here we enter into a new thing. Here we have to handle family allowances; here we have to handle compensation; here we have to handle insurance. I say that under this bill we can not command the services of a man for $5,000 who is capable of doing this work who could not get $10,000 or $15,000 a year in other employments. That is my honest opinion about it. We must have men skilled and experienced along these lines here, to be directors of this great bureau that is going to be one—and I acknowledge it, when the gentleman says it is going to be one of the great bureaus of the Government. We intend it to become one of the great bureaus of this Government, and we will be very much disappointed if it does not become that. But when we have these allowances for all the soldiers and their families, this compensation for the soldiers and their families, this insurance that will pile into the millions and into the hundreds of millions, as I hope, we can not get $3,600 men to handle this business.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The Chief Justice of the United States, I believe, gets $15,000 and the associate justices get $14,000.

I have no doubt that each and every one of them could make $50,000. Yet they are connected with the Government in a great work. This salary will not get people at the head of this who are getting in many employments in civil life $25,000 or $50,000. If you are going to compensate all men that could make more, why you would immensely increase the cost of the personnel in the service of the Government all along the line, and it has not been the policy to pay extravagant salaries.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to say that the Supreme Court of the United States is the highest ambition of every real lawyer, if he has an ambition for any office. It is a life tenure; he has a chance to write his name in cases that will go down through all the ages of this Republic as long as it stands. You get a circuit judge for $7,000. But there is a glamor about public office. There is a hope for service, and "service" is the greatest word in all the language. There is not a circuit judge in America, in my opinion, who could not earn $15,000 to $20,000 a year, and more than that, according to locality. Of course, those who live in small towns can not do that. But I do not believe you can get a man who is capable of administering this legislation for less than $6,000 and pay him for what he is worth. [Applause.] But there are men who like to contribute something to their Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in line 5, page 2, I move to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON offers the following amendment: Page 2, line 5, strike out, after the word "of," the amount "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANNON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CANNON. In line 11, page 2, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000," so that it will read, "each of whom shall receive a salary of $4,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Line 11, page 2, after the word "of," strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RAYBURN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That such act of September 2, 1914, is hereby amended by adding new sections, as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I submit for the consideration of the Chair that the bill, beginning with line 12, page 2, and embracing the remainder of that title down to the end of page 10, is supposed to be amendatory of the act of which this act is an amendment. I wish to submit the inquiry whether this section 2, which we have just read, will be considered as a separate section for amendment, or whether the bill, going down to the bottom of page 10, which this section 2 refers to, will be considered as one section?

Now, Mr. Chairman, knowing that the Chair has given this matter some consideration, because yesterday I referred to it during the luncheon hour when I had the honor to be present with the gentleman who now occupies the Chair, I submit that in the decision which the Chair will render on it—because I believe it is a new one that has never been before presented to the House—the Chair should rule that these respective numbered sections should be considered separately.

There is no rule that holds that a revenue or appropriation bill shall be considered by paragraphs, and yet the reason why the precedents have established that procedure is because better consideration may be given by paragraphs. In the same way it is held that bills other than appropriation or revenue bills shall be considered by sections.

I wish to submit this phase of the question to the attention of the Chairman in rendering his decision: Suppose this bill had merely consisted of what is here known as section 2, with all the other amendatory sections? Under that supposition it would have read, "Be it enacted that this act shall be amended as follows, by adding the following sections," namely, section 12, section 13, and so forth. The Chair would then necessarily have to hold that each would be individually considered as a section. I submit for the orderly consideration of this bill that the Chair should hold that they should be considered separately as sections, because they relate to different substantive matters, and not merely to section 2 that is referred to in this preamble. This preamble is merely declaratory. Sections 12 and 13 and 14 relate to matters that are entirely opposite to one another.

Now, for well-considered parliamentary discussion the Chair should recognize that rule, and it has been recognized in the precedents in some matters. For instance, a Senate bill comes over to the House. It has numerous sections. It is referred to a committee in due course. The committee brings it back with one amendment striking out all the sections of the Senate bill. It is admissible under the rules of the House for any Member to offer a germane amendment to any section of the Senate bill, section by section, in order to perfect it before the vote is had on the amendment of the committee as a substitute for the Senate bill. I think the invariable rule, formulated in the decisions of Chairmen and Speakers has been to make it so that consideration of amendments may be intelligent, so that they may be logically considered in due course, to consider the bill by sections, even when they are grouped under one omnibus section including many distinct sections, as in the instant case.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair for a moment?

Of course, it is true that it has been held in order to offer amendments to any section of Senate amendments that are brought in; but is it not the uniform holding, even where a Senate amendment is brought in, that it must be read as a whole, no matter how many sections the amendment may have?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. I can cite a decision on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean read as a whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, there is no rule which provides that a House bill shall be read by sections for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it is the established practice; and why? Because it enables the House to consider the bill in its parliamentary procedure the more intelligently. In the case cited by the Chairman and referred to by me a few minutes ago, if a Senate bill consists of many sections and it is referred in due course to a House committee and the committee recommends it back to the House, striking out all the various sections of the Senate bill with one substitute amendment, nevertheless the rulings hold one way—that any Member may offer a germane amendment to any section, and that the bill will be considered by sections. When the amendments that have been offered are submitted and voted on section by section, then the vote is taken upon the substitute offered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. When he asked a question of the gentleman from Wisconsin the Chair was under the impression that the gentleman was referring to Senate amendments to a House bill. The Chair now understands that he was not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, this is one act relating to insurance, amending the law establishing a war-insurance or war-risk bureau. It consists of two sections. The first section amends section 1 of the act, beginning on page 1 and ending in line 11 on page 2.

The second section, beginning on line 12, page 2, amends the entire bill. It says:

SEC. 2. That such act of September 2, 1914, is hereby amended by adding new sections, as follows.

It does not say how many. It does not mean new sections of this bill. It means adding new sections to that act, and therefore it enumerates, from section 12 to the end of the bill on page 31, the sections which it adds by amendment to the original act. There need not be any trouble about this. All it means is that the Clerk would read it all through. It will not curtail in any respect the right of amendment. We are perfectly willing to have the Clerk go on and read section 2 through to the end of the bill on page 31, with the understanding that amendments may be offered to any part of the bill, and we will have no trouble about it. All it means is that the Clerk would read it clear through.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, and I will tell him why—

Mr. ADAMSON. I am merely stating my view of what the procedure should be.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. When you get to section 17, in line 9, page 5, if amendments are offered to that when it is read, people will understand what they are. If you have to read the whole thing through, 31 pages, and then go back, Members will not understand what the amendments refer to. I have only one amendment to section 12 and I hope the gentleman will not insist on the enforcement of the strict rule when you are going to add sections to the bill, each one of which is a separate section.

Mr. ADAMSON. They are not sections of this bill. It is proposed to add sections to the original act.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I understand that.

Mr. ADAMSON. And when you have read this bill through to its end on page 31, gentlemen can then offer amendments to any part of the bill. There is no trouble at all about that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I can understand it, but other Members may not understand it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose that a substitute were offered for this bill—offered by way of amendment. Then there would be one substitute that would be read through.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Taking the assumption that the gentleman has just stated, that the committee should report a substitute, if that substitute consisted of various sections, does the gentleman think that would have to be considered as one whole and not by separate sections?

Mr. ADAMSON. Our usual course has been to make an agreement that it be considered as though it were an original bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. By agreement; yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask for such an agreement on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Beginning on page 2, line 15, quotation marks are used, which indicate that that is a part of section 2. Now, that is continued down to the bottom of page 10, line 24.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is a matter of punctuation, but it has to yield to the language of the bill, which amends the original act by adding the following sections.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning on page 11, line 3, that is also additional, but there are no quotation marks. Is there any significance attached to that, other than an omission by the printer?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the punctuation must yield to the language of the bill. The language of the bill, line 12, page 2, section 2, is that the act is hereby amended by adding new sections as follows, and all down to page 31. They are not additional sections to this bill, but additional sections to the original act.

MR. CANNON. Will my friend yield to me?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Section 12 has three lines of section 2. Suppose we strike it out altogether. It is a proposition standing by itself. It means that sections 2 to 9, inclusive, shall be construed to refer only to the division of marine and seamen's insurance.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is a limitation on the original act.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; it is a proposition standing by itself, and it seems to me that under the rule a separate proposition, standing by itself, should be considered for amendment from another proposition. If you can not do it under the rule, it seems to me, for the expedition and intelligent consideration of this bill there ought to be an agreement.

Mr. ADAMSON. I concede that there are many propositions in section 2, but I also think that if you read section 2 to the end you can offer your amendment and discuss the different sections as much as you please.

Mr. CANNON. If you read clear through, the gentleman can then cut off at the end of five minutes and one amendment all debate by a majority vote, if it is to be read as a whole. It seems to me that, having regard for the general proceedings either under the rule or by agreement, that it is the better way to consider the bill and the most expeditious way and the fairest way.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to be entirely fair about it, and I want to be expeditious.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that while section 2, page 2, proposes sections 12 to 21, inclusive, for amendment to an act already in existence by adding these sections to that law, that you can not intelligently consider the matter contained in these sections unless each section is considered by itself, as if it was an original bill coming before the House. Here we are considering a law that involves hundreds of millions of dollars, and it is proposed by those in charge of the bill that the membership of the House shall consider 25 sections at once. That is to say, that they shall all be read before anybody has an opportunity to consider what amendment he has to offer. Now, everybody can realize that you can not comprehend the situation if that situation is permitted to exist. I do not believe that the people of the country, no matter what the rules and practices of the House or the procedure may be, would sanction any such statute as would involve forcing the membership of the House to consider a bill under the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia. I hope the membership of the House will be given the right to consider the bill as it ought to be considered, every section by itself, regardless of whether this is an amendment to some other law or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I merely stated my conception of the law as it is. I did not write the bill. The gentleman from Texas is willing to offer a suggestion for an agreement and save the Chair from ruling. He is willing to have it read by articles. There are four articles, and read each article as a whole.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I am objecting to. I do not think it ought to be done. I do not think the House is treated fairly if that is done. I do not believe you will get anywhere by that sort of tactics.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois has any argument to present, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. MADDEN. If the Chair will allow me for a moment, I was not speaking to the Chair; I was speaking to the gentleman from Georgia. I do not think the Chair was justified in making the statement that the Chair did.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman was arguing the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I asked the gentleman from Georgia to yield to me for a question, and I was making a statement to him giving my conception of what I thought the fair way was to consider the bill. I would not say a word to hurt the feelings of the Chair for anything in the world. I do not believe there is a man in the House that I have more respect for than I have for the gentleman who now occupies the chair.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the fair way to proceed is according to the rules of the House, unless we can make some agreement.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, section 2 is intended to embrace all after line 14 of page 2 as well as lines 12 and 13 to the end of page 10, because the act of September 2, 1914, is hereby amended by adding new sections, as follows; and then it goes on and provides the sections to be added to that law. But really in fact they are simply paragraphs of this section 2, and each paragraph may be amended; but after we reach page 10 there is no longer any quotation used, because a new section of this bill—200—comes in. They are part of this section 2, and although called sections are nothing but paragraphs of this bill. Therefore we are entitled to read as section 2 from line 12, page 2, to the bottom of page 10 in order to include section 2 of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair a moment? Why is there any difference down to the bottom of page 10 and all the rest of it?

Mr. SIMS. This is all adding sections to existing law and the rest of this bill is not, and therefore no quotations are used.

Mr. RUCKER. What is the purpose of quoting, if it is already existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. This is not repealing existing law; it is adding to existing law.

Mr. SIMS. I think the logical way to look at this section is to treat it as one section. I mean those sections of this bill following section 2 are really paragraphs of section 2, and although they are called sections in the bill they are not sections of this bill in serial numbers.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word right on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This section 2 says that there shall be an amendment by adding new sections. It is strictly, they say, one amendment to add a whole series of new sections. If such an amendment were offered in the House, any Member could demand that the amendments should be divided when it consisted of separate propositions of this sort and that they should be considered separately, should be divisible. It would be the right proceeding in the House. The practice of the House under the rules of the House says that separate propositions shall be considered separately. Each of those sections are separate propositions; they are not merely paragraphs of one proposition. Again, the reason for considering an appropriation bill by paragraphs is because every appropriation is a separate proposition and, therefore, has the dignity of a section. The principle on which you go, whether in dividing an amendment offered in a bill in the House or in dividing appropriations as separate propositions, is that there is something separate to be done on each of those various things. Now, the whole argument in this case shows there are separate things to be done all through, and these are separate sections to be added. If it were moved here in the House, I should ask, as I ask now, that each section which is added be read separately as a separate proposition. [Cries of "Rule!"] If the committee desires the Chair to rule, I shall argue no further.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I just wish one minute to appeal to the chairman of the committee to withdraw the point of order and let us get down to the consideration of the bill by sections as they are designated in the bill. There are some 50 of them. Some contain many paragraphs. I think it would be the orderly way to consider them in order, notwithstanding the fact that the Chair may deem it right—

Mr. RAYBURN. Would it please the gentleman from Wisconsin that we might read it by articles?

Mr. ESCH. That would cover 5 to 10 pages to the article, and it is utterly impossible to retain in mind the provisions of any article with reference to amendments. I think that if we can put amendments to the sections as they are read we will concentrate the mind of the committee upon the particular section and it will conduce to the orderly conduct of our business.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there would be anything unfair in reading it by articles.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. ESCH. No; I made a suggestion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair hear me one moment further?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to present one phase of the proposition which will not take over two minutes, if the Chair will hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York was on his feet.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, may I submit to the Chair for such consideration as it is worth the fact that section 2 is included in article 1 and that it might be considered that it was not intended to cover articles 2 and 3 for the purpose of offering amendments?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] anticipated what I was about to present to the attention of the Chair, that this bill is divided in a larger sense into four articles—articles 1, 2, 3, and 4. If the rules of the House were to the effect that we should consider bills by the larger proposition, not by sections or paragraphs but by the larger divisions, the Chair might hold we should consider them by articles and consider article 1 as an entire article because it is larger than a section. Each article includes a group of sections. When you reach article 2 we would have to consider that as an entirety; but there never has been a holding by any chairman that we should consider a bill by articles, but that we should consider them by sections or paragraphs. If you follow up logically the argument of the gentleman from Georgia, you would have to include in section 2 three articles, and it would compel the Chair to rule that we would have to consider before we can consider the smaller divisions, the section, the larger group, to wit, the article—

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair really does not think that the matter of articles—that is merely a grammatical expression—

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a division in which are grouped substantive matters specifically headed referring to something separate and distinct and does not refer to the succeeding article. It is a larger division, larger than a section which groups together all the matters that refer to one designated subject. Suppose the question was submitted when we read article 1.

Is this bill to be considered by articles or by sections? Will the Chair for one minute hold that we would consider article 1 as an article and then article 2 and article 3 and article 4? No. The technical rule is not going to overcome the obvious, apparent difficulty that we are not considering this by articles, but by sections. The Chair can not hold that instead of considering it by the small unit of sections, as we have up to this time, namely, the amendment to section 1, we are considering it by articles. I respectfully contend there is no logic in that conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that the matter of "articles" being mentioned in a bill has anything to do with the parliamentary question which is involved. But the Chair does think that there is a serious side to it. There is no provision in the rules of the House which requires the reading of any bill for amendment. There was such a provision from 1789 until the revision of the rules in 1880, as the Chair now remembers. In that revision that rule was dropped. Mr. Hinds, who has written the parliamentary history of the House, says, in his work, that it was undoubtedly eliminated by inadvertence. But, notwithstanding the fact that it was dropped from the rules of the House, it was retained in practice and has been followed since that time precisely the same as it was before.

Now, under the rule as it existed prior to that time, and under the practice which has since existed, appropriation bills and revenue bills were and are read for amendment by paragraphs. Other bills were and are read for amendment by sections. That rule was followed in practice, as I have said, after the dropping of it from the rules in 1880, both as to appropriation and revenue bills and as to other bills.

So far as the Chair was able to find in investigations made last evening, no such situation has arisen before the House as that which is presented in this particular bill. And the Chair has been greatly bothered as to just what the right ruling is to make.

Undoubtedly there was a reason underlying the rule which existed prior to the revision of 1880 and the practice which has been uniformly followed since as to having appropriation and revenue bills read by paragraphs. And undoubtedly there was a reason for having other bills read by section for amendment, because, as the Chair has said, after 1880 the rules did not require the reading at all. Now, it seems to the Chair that the reason for having these bills read by sections for amendment was in order to give the House in an orderly way the opportunity to consider every new proposition of law that was presented to it. That seems to the Chair to be the reason for the matter.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the Chair allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. In just a moment.

If that reason be true, what have we here? We have a bill here which, we will say, might be construed as being technically divided into two general sections. Nevertheless, it contains section after section of new law. And for the reason underlying the rule and practice that have been followed uniformly this bill ought to be read by the sections as they appear in the bill. In other words, answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], the Chair will hold that the bill be read by sections as they are numbered here.

The Clerk will now report section 12 as here numbered and at the end of the reading it will be open for amendment, and then report section 13 as here numbered, which will then be open for amendment, and so forth, to the end.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in section designated as No. 2. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there was an oversight by leaving out the words "as amended" in line 13?

Mr. ALEXANDER. They should be there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment to insert after the word "fourteen" the words "as amended" in line 13, page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "fourteen" insert the words "as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 12. That sections 2 to 9, inclusive, shall be construed to refer only to the division of marine and seamen's insurance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for 15 minutes in which to debate the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks to be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to be in a hurry about these things, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch] and I agreed last night to try to expedite the bill to-day. I think the five-minute rule ought to be adhered to.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have something to say which is applicable not to any particular section of the bill, and I think time will be saved by letting me say it now.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose the gentleman proceeds to the end of five minutes and then ask for an extension if he desires it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the contentions made by various members of the committee which reported this bill and most forcefully presented this morning by the chairman of that committee, that Article III of this bill is not a pension measure. It is, as he argues, a compensation measure, and for that very reason, for that fundamental reason, which applies throughout the entire bill, it seems to me that the author of the bill has fallen into a serious error.

Pension laws as they now stand on the statutes are not discriminatory. These laws recognize no difference in the rank of the beneficiary in case of disability. If a major general has heretofore lost a leg in action and applies for a pension he gets exactly the same amount that the humblest private in the ranks would receive for the same disability. It does not make any difference what the injury is or what the rank of the soldier is, when he comes to apply under the law as it now exists he stands upon exactly the same footing as every other soldier who has suffered the same injury.

To my mind, that is one of the very best features of the pension laws. It is particularly sound, as it applies to the soldiers of the Civil War. The soldiers who fought in the Union Armies were not professional soldiers. They were volunteers. Those armies were citizen armies. The ranks which they held in the field had no relation to their ranks or their qualifications in civil life, and that principle is recognized in the pension laws.

But here in this bill we have a different principle recognized. Men who are injured are compensated according to the pay which at the time of the injury they are drawing from the Government as soldiers. Some of them get several hundred dollars per month; others get only a trifling sum. It has remained for the authors of this bill to present the principle to the American Congress that an American soldier serving his country in an emergency such as now exists should be compensated exactly upon the same plane as a workman; that he should be paid for his injuries just exactly as he would be if he were a laborer in a sawmill or a brakeman on a railroad. He is paid in proportion to what he is drawing down in pay when he is injured. It has remained for this measure to put the honorable service of soldiers in defense of our flag upon the mean and sordid basis of commercial gain and the earning capacity of men in civil life.

That is the principle that runs throughout this bill. It is a thread, a discolored and inharmonious thread, that goes through the provision for allotments for the benefit of soldiers' families, where the families of privates who get $30 receive an allotment on a certain basis; but if the soldier happens to be a sergeant or enjoys some other petty distinction, his family is compensated upon an entirely different basis.

Mr. ADAMSON. I just wanted to ask the gentleman which one of the pension laws in the system for which this is a substitute recognizes an officer more highly than a private?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There are no allotments under the pension laws.

Mr. ADAMSON. This thing takes the place of pensions, and you pension officers more highly than you pension privates.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say this, but the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce forces me to say that it is extremely unfortunate that a measure of this importance should be presented through a committee and by authors who had not the slightest knowledge of the pension laws. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that this debate has not disclosed any Members of superior knowledge.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If the gentleman will open his mind to understand it, I hope he may yet learn something about the pension laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes' additional time.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask that he may have as much more time as I took up of his time. I took up about three minutes, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have just told the gentleman that, no matter what the rank of the soldier is, no matter what his pay as a soldier is, whether that of a major general or a private soldier, he is given exactly the same pension for the same disability under the existing pension law. Does the gentleman get that?

Mr. ADAMSON. I got that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hope the gentleman will hold it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I already knew it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman's argument has not disclosed that he knew it. I regret that a pension measure of this importance should have been offered, drawn, as I am informed, by a distinguished Chicago jurist, who knows a great deal about domestic relations laws and such things, but nothing whatever about pension legislation, in conjunction with a New York life insurance actuary. I am told that that was the authorship of the bill. I do not know. I have not yet found out who was the author, although I did ask yesterday most earnestly for this information.

These gentlemen, perhaps, were advised with by certain eminent doctrinaires and sociologists. Now, I love sociologists. They are good fellows. But usually they are not soldiers. They have not usually had experience in fighting for their country, and they have not usually been to Congress. But I would not like to take their handiwork without amendment. I regret that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has accepted and gulped down as a whole this bill, though coated over on the outside, and reported it without having digested it and without understanding just what it means.

I would not have had this bill referred to the Committee on Pensions, of which I happen to be a member. It is made up of the fag ends of Congress. [Laughter.] Only Members are put on that committee who can be satisfied with that sort of thing—fellows who are not on the inside, and who have not influence enough to get a real, sure-enough committee appointment. [Laughter.] Perhaps it was wise to draft this bill, as it appears it was drafted, with the deliberate purpose and intent to keep it away from the Pensions Committee, and that they did well in that. But the regret that I feel is that somebody did not draw the bill or that somebody did not consider the bill who knew something about the pension laws and had some little understanding of the purposes of pension legislation. [Applause.]

Now, as I was calling to the attention of the committee, the inharmonious thread runs throughout this bill from beginning to end of compensation on the basis of the amount of a soldier's pay, of discrimination between soldiers based on the amount of pay that they draw down from the Government.

It is in the allotment provision. It is in the compensation provision. It is in the insurance provision. It goes from one end of the bill to the other, and no amendment will effectually reach it. It is impossible to reach it by amendment. As I said, under this bill men are put upon the same plane in fighting for their country as though they were working in a sawmill or as brakemen on a railroad. They are simply paid in proportion to what they are drawing from the Government at the time of the injury.

The reputed authors of this bill are sociologists. They are accustomed to drawing workmen's compensation laws for injuries received in civilian pursuits. They have not comprehended for a moment the light that lies in the path of the man who fights for his country. They have not realized for a moment that every American soldier now in the ranks, with the exception of a few professionals who were in the service before this war came on, is a citizen soldier; that it is an army of men who are equals. Oh, I have heard a lot of talk recently about democracy. I would like to see our Army made safe for democracy. How can you say that you have a democratic Army; how can you say that conscription is democratic, that it is just, when you force some men into the ranks at the low pay of $30 a month when others have rushed off to training camps, having had college educations and social positions good enough to stand the tests, and now are to be further favored as proposed by this bill? How can you afford to discriminate between these equally deserving men, whether officers or men, when they are soldiers in the field; to discriminate between their families at home, to discriminate between them when they come home maimed and bleeding from service in their country's cause, and when they fall upon the battle field to discriminate between their widows and orphans?

I think the insurance idea is an excellent one. I think it is one that this Government can well afford to adopt, but it ought to provide a uniform amount of insurance for every soldier, irrespective of his rank. It ought not to be given according to a man's ability to pay for it. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. There is no rank insurance. Every private can take $10,000.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will explain to the gentleman how he can not. He is required to pay $8 per thousand. The officer who is drawing a minimum of $180 a month can take his $10,000, but the private who is only getting $30, and has got to send part of that home because you do not give him enough to keep up his mother and his father, can not take more than $1,000.

Mr. SIMS. If he takes $10,000 it will cost him less than $8 a month.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Government says, "We will bear the extra hazard, which is $50 per thousand." Then you propose that the Government shall carry a hazard of $50 for each man who takes out a thousand-dollar policy, so that when he takes out a $10,000 policy the Government carries a hazard of $500 for him. Do you not see that you are discriminating in favor of the man who has got plenty of money, in favor of the rich? Do you not see that you gentlemen are discriminating in favor of the man who has the means to take out a big lump of life insurance and against the poor devil who has only got enough to pay $8 for $1,000 insurance? [Applause.] Does the gentleman from Tennessee want to ask me something? Let him come on with it if he does.

Mr. SIMS. I said this, that the private has to pay only $80 a year for $10,000, which is less than $7 per month, and he gets $30 a month in this country and $33 when he is abroad; and if he has no dependents he can easily pay $7 out of $33.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think it is as easy to pay that $7 out of $30 as it would be to pay it out of $300 or $400?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly not.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is perfectly absurd. The gentleman knows that the fellow who is rich or who is drawing big pay as an officer will take a lot of insurance. It is absurd to assume that the man who gets only a few dollars per month is going to take as much insurance as the man who gets a big bunch of money per month.

Mr. SIMS. My friend, I do not think the rich men who do not need it will take it at all.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They are fools if they don't, because they are getting something for nothing. The Government is donating to them $50 a year on every thousand of the insurance. I say it is all right to donate it, but there ought to be a donation of $58. [Applause.] Why don't you get generous enough to add $8 more onto the $50 and give every soldier, whether officer or man, a thousand dollars of insurance? Why haven't you got fairness enough to stand for giving every soldier who fights for his country an equal reward and an equal return? Why will you discriminate? Gentlemen, there is no fair basis for any such discrimination; none whatever.

I refer now particularly to the discrimination in the compensation for injury. What is the foundation for such discrimination? Those men were equal at home. Many of the officers of the National Guard were just common fellows, of the sort that Regular Army officers sort of look over their left shoulders at. Some of them have even been workmen. Think of that! [Laughter.] They have worked their way up in the National Guard and perhaps have no large earning capacity. There are plenty of officers in the National Guard and plenty of them in the National Army—officers who were college boys, put into the Army through training camps—plenty of them who are making more money to-day in the Army than they ever made before in their lives. On the other hand, there are thousands of splendid men who have volunteered, and thousands of others just as splendid, who have been conscripted, who have left good jobs where some of them were earning as much money as some of the officers now get, and who are peers to any man who carries a sword at his side. It is a rank discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have been a soldier, and I know what it is. I went out of a lawyer's office and volunteered as a private soldier. I was building up a profitable practice, but I took a gun on my shoulder because my country needed me and served for $15.60 a month. The first thing I noticed was that one of the officers of the regiment into which I had volunteered used to be a soda-water clerk in a drug store, and probably made $600 a year. It is the customary and ordinary thing when the country needs and calls men to arms.

We are not dealing with professional soldiers. Your bill is all right if it was designed only for a professional army—the Regular Army, with its professional privates and its professional officers. It is all right for them, because their rank in the Army has a relation to their social position and earning capacity. But it is all wrong when it is applied to the great citizen army, a great army composed of men who are equal, a great army that is taken by force or by volunteering from all the people. There should be no discrimination among these men.

Mr. DEWALT. In your argument as it is, do you believe that every man in the United States Army and the United States Navy should be paid the same amount irrespective of rank?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say frankly to the gentleman that the man who carries a sword is no better than the man who carries a gun. They are equal, and they have come forward to defend their country, and when you discriminate between them I want to tell you that you violate one of the most sacred principles of democracy.

Mr. DEWALT. That does not answer my question, although it is a beautiful oratorical effort, but it does not answer the question I put.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I thank the gentleman for the compliment; let him put his question again.

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman believe that every man in the United States Army and the United States Navy should be paid the same amount for his service irrespective of rank?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; where they are not professionals; where officer and man are alike soldiers of an army of citizens conscripted to defend their country, I state to the gentleman that I do.

Mr. DEWALT. If he does believe that there should be a discrimination—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No discrimination.

Mr. DEWALT. No discrimination; that a major general should receive the same pay as a private?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why not?

Mr. DEWALT. Does the gentleman believe that?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. Is the statement so extraordinary that I should have to repeat it again and again?

Mr. DEWALT. Then the proper way is for the gentleman not to oppose this bill but to propose a statute making the pay of all men in the service the same, whether he is a private or a major general.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman's suggestion is not worth discussion. We have this bill before us. Why tell me to draw some other one? Why tell me to go and propose some other bill? I show you that your bill is wrong, I show you that it is vicious in principle; I show you that you discriminate against common men; I show you that your bill is wrong, because you bear down on the man in the ranks for the benefit of the man who carries a sword. It must be remedied here and now.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. For a question.

Mr. BATHRICK. I think many of us are in sympathy with the gentleman's contention respecting equality of compensation between officers and men, but I do not like to see a good argument spoiled—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish the gentleman would ask his question.

Mr. BATHRICK. I agree with the gentleman in part, but I do not like to see his argument spoiled by the contention that some men should not receive greater pay than others. My purpose was to ask—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, I must decline to yield for a speech. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been a soldier and I know what it is. I know the difference between being an officer and an enlisted man. I know the difference between carrying a sword and carrying a gun. The difference is as great as between the owner of the factory and the humble laborer in it. The difference is just as wide as that between the owner of the sawmill and the man who totes off the slabs. It is just as substantial and means as much.

A lot of people who have had no experience as soldiers think that being a soldier is fighting and running the risk of death. That is the smallest part of being a soldier. Being a soldier is being a drudge, a laborer; it is digging and sweating; it is standing guard. It means being cold when you would like to be warm; it means being wet when you would like to be dry; and it means being hungry when you would like to be fed. And I want to tell you that all these things bear heaviest on the enlisted man. They do not bear much on the officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks for two minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall not object in this case, but I give notice that hereafter I shall object to these long speeches.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would suggest that we might get along with this bill if these gentlemen would wait and make their insurance speeches when we get to the insurance paragraphs.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ought to have five minutes to answer him, if the gentleman is going to put stuff like that statement in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, we have taken thousands of young men of college education and good social position into the training camps. They were subject to conscription like the common man's son. They did not want to be private soldiers. I do not blame them. If I were one of them, I would try to be an officer because I should not want to do the sweating and the digging. But many of their brothers or other men just as good as they are have got to go and fight in the ranks, many of them have got to go as private soldiers, and the only pay they get is $30 a month. Many of the young men who went through the training camps had no great earning capacity, but now they are drawing $180, $250, $300 a month, or whatever they get. But we are not content merely to give the officer the best of it in regard to pay. When he is in the field we let him carry a sword, and that is his only weight, while the poor private has to carry a gun and other baggage weighing 30 or 40 pounds. We are not satisfied to let the officer stay in the tent in the shade, while the humble enlisted man digs in the ditches, stands guard, and does other hateful tasks—oh, I had rather fight a thousand battles than do this monotonous drudgery of camp life—we are not content to give the officer the best of it all along the line, we are not content to give him a chance to make something out of himself, to have his name mentioned in the dispatches, and come home as a hero, while the man that is doing the fighting in the trenches is not mentioned at all. Nothing is thought of the humble private; there is no chance of promotion, no distinction nor honorable mention for him. All this is inevitable in military life. Yet we propose to further discriminate between the enlisted man and the officer, to discriminate between them when they come home with equally honorable scars, between their mothers, the mothers who gave birth to them, who nourished them, between their widows and orphans, when officer and man heroes alike lie dead upon the battle field. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of this House for whom I have a higher regard than the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], for I know of his patriotism and his self-sacrifice, and all that, but we have got an existing law, and we have a great war on our hands, and this bill provides benefits for present conditions. At a time when our soldiers are in France and drilling for war at many places in this country preparing to go to France, for my good friend to make an argument here which if read in the camps wherever they may be is certain to dishearten and discourage the private soldier and tend to make him dissatisfied with his already hard lot—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is not the way to correct that to pass a bill that is fair to these common soldiers? [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman knows that these men are enlisted under existing law. He and I both voted against conscription, but conscription is the law, and men are being forcibly taken into the Army under that law, which passed this House by a vote of 3 to 1, and they are facing hard service. This bill is intended to help their hard lot and to try to make them less dissatisfied with an arduous and dangerous service. The gentleman knows it will be impossible to get a bill through this House to pay officers and privates the same salary. He knows that pensions have not always passed that way. We know that private pension bills have passed this House giving officers and the widows of officers much larger pensions than are given under the general law.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. In a moment. Now, such a statement, honestly made, sincerely made, and the gentleman would make no other, will be quoted all over this country as evidence of what America does for the soldiers of democracy.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Should I now close my mouth to the truth and allow the House to pass that kind of discriminatory bill?

Mr. SIMS. We have an existing law. This bill is intended to provide for the soldier's family, and enabling them to endure the hardships, to some extent at least. These men are in the Army now, many of them in spite of themselves, and they have got to stay in for the period of the war. Why not help conditions now prevailing under existing law instead of trying to make them harder by defeating this bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Give them a fair deal.

Mr. SIMS. Now, my friend can offer any amendment to this bill that he wants to offer. It can be discussed and voted upon by this House and adopted, but to make a speech here which of itself, especially if it should be garbled, can be read by all of the private soldiers as an evidence that one of the bravest and truest hearted men in this House, who has carried a gun in actual war, says we are discriminating against them and not doing justice to them—how can democracy stand such an admission of injustice, made upon the floor of this House? Sometimes we can not get all we want, and it is best to take what we can get. This bill is being opposed now by some men because it is too liberal, too large in its compensations. I appeal to my friend not to make the private soldier and the poor man in the ranks of our Army feel that he is being discriminated against and is being treated unjustly. If he does so believe he will not fight with that spirit that a man does who feels that he is loved by his country and is compensated by his country in proportion to his deserts.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the pension law to-day treats the soldiers and officers of the Civil War on exactly the same footing?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman mean by service pensions?

Mr. MCKENZIE. The general pension law.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman means pensions for injuries received in the Army?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I do not mean private pension bills brought in here to give some man a special pension, but the general pension laws of the United States as it affects the soldiers of the Civil War applies equally to the man and the officer?

Mr. SIMS. That is, in regard to a service pension?

Mr. MCKENZIE. The pension law, whatever it is called.

Mr. SIMS. If they do, so far as service pensions are concerned, they are unjust that far from being right. When a man is worth a million dollars it is not necessary to give him $30 per month that he does not need in order to give some old soldier $30 a month which he does need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks in reply to a statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, is there a motion before the committee? We desire to proceed with this bill, if we can.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACK (continuing). This statement which was made by the gentleman from Tennessee was made in a colloquy with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. He said that the pending bill makes equal provision for the insurance of officers and enlisted men. Well, now, let us see—

Mr. SIMS. Makes it possible for all to get the same amount.

Mr. BLACK. Well, now, let's examine the bill and see whether or not it is possible for all to have the same amount of insurance. Let us take article 3, known as the compensation section. It is not material what you call it, whether you call it pensions or whether you call it compensation or whether you call it insurance. It amounts, in fact, to a death and indemnity insurance policy in the name of the United States Government. And in reference to that word "compensation," let me say that no one will contend for a moment that it will be within the power of the United States Government to compensate in dollars and cents the man with blinded eyes or dismembered limbs for the loss he has suffered in defense of our Nation's cause. No one will contend that the Government can ever adequately compensate in material things the wife or child or parent whose husband or father or son has made the last supreme sacrifice on the far-flung battle fields of Europe, fighting under the Stars and Stripes.

No. No one will contend that, but, on the contrary, will freely admit that the most we do will be but small payment for the sacrifice so great.

But true as that may be, it makes all the more important that a great Nation like ours should stretch out the hand of generosity, so as to repair as far as possible the cruel and unrelenting tragedies of war. Therefore I am most heartily in favor of the principle of compensation set forth in article 3. But on examination of the details we find that a new principle is introduced in paying benefits to our injured and disabled soldiers and sailors and their dependents. A very material difference is made in the payment of amounts to some officers and their dependents and that which is paid to enlisted men and their dependents. These differences I shall now discuss at some length.

Let us take up the case of a man who is married, with no children, and who dies and leaves a widow. Let us see the respective amounts which will be paid in such cases under the terms of this bill. In the first place, the widow is to receive one-fourth of the pay that her husband was drawing in the service at the time of his death, but not less than $30 a month in any case. All right; that will cover the case of all privates, of all noncommissioned officers, and will practically cover the case of second lieutenants.

Now, for further illustration let us go from that to the case of a captain who is receiving $2,400 a year. Under the terms of this bill upon his death in the service his widow will receive $50 a month, or $600 a year. And assuming that she will live 20 years and receive 240 of such monthly payments—and I think that is a reasonable assumption—then that captain has a policy of insurance of, I should say, $10,000, and that policy is as good, or better, as any you could take out in any old-line insurance company in the country.

As a next step, let us now take the case of a soldier with the rank of colonel. He receives $4,000 a year. He dies in the service and leaves a widow. His widow will receive under this bill $1,000 a year, or $83.33 a month, and that is equal to an insurance policy of, I should say, $16,000 or $17,000.

Proceeding with the illustration still further, let us take the case of a major general, receiving $8,000 a year. He also dies in the service. His widow, under the provisions of this bill, will get $2,000 a year, or $166.66 a month, and that, gentlemen of the House, I think I am safe in saying, is equal to any $33,000 policy written by any old-line insurance company in the country. And yet in the face of these facts the gentleman from Tennessee says that this bill makes it possible for all soldiers to get the same amount of insurance.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SABATH. How many major generals have we in the Army now?

Mr. BLACK. I do not recall. I think the number has recently been increased.

Mr. SABATH. How long does it take before a man can become a major general? How many years must he devote of his services to the country?

Mr. BLACK. That is not material to the discussion of these death benefits in any sort of way, as I view the matter, and I decline to yield further.

Mind you, all these benefits conferred by article 3, and which I am now discussing, are without any money cost or deduction of pay from the officer or enlisted man.

Now, if that is so, then we may well ask ourselves the question, Upon what ground can such discrimination be justified? Now, that is a reasonable inquiry. And if the committee have given us a valid reason for the various and sundry differences and discriminations, then perhaps we should accept it. But let us see if they have done so.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], a member of the committee, made a very able speech upon this bill last Saturday, and I suppose that his ideas and the reasons which he advanced are representative of those held by other members of the committee. Now, let us see what particular reason he gives for this discrimination in the bill which I have pointed out.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] asked him a question, and he made reply. And I will read the question and the reply for your information. They are as follows:

Mr. DENISON. In that connection is it not true that all compensation laws have a period of limitation?

Mr. DEWALT. Oh, they all do. Now, there is another feature to which I desire to refer, and then I shall conclude.

It is said that this compensation feature is unjust, because it makes a discrimination against the private in favor of the officer. Is that true? No; it is not. Apparently it does; but when you reason it out to its conclusion it does not. Why? Because the earning capacity of every man must be taken into consideration when you consider the compensation feature in the law. In other words, in fixing compensation under all the statutes in all the States there is always taken into consideration as a primal fact—first, the age of the individual; second, the number of people that he has dependent upon him; and, third, the earning capacity which he has in order to sustain himself and the people dependent upon him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Now, gentlemen of the committee, if the premise of Mr. DEWALT is correct, then the reason which he advances is a good one, but I dispute the correctness of the premise. He says that these benefits are based upon the earning capacity of the individual. It is true that our State compensation laws, after which no doubt this law was modeled by Judge Mack, are built upon that basis, and no doubt in civil occupation it is a sound basis. But, gentlemen, it must be remembered that we are drafting into the Army men without the liberty of choice. They must serve as and when and where they are placed. In civil life a man has a liberty of choice, and presumably he selects that occupation and reaches that remuneration for which he is qualified. But when he goes into the Army he surrenders the liberty of choice. And under the operation of the selective-draft law we may take a man out of the civil walks of life that is earning to-day—and there is not a bit of doubt but that some will be taken—who are now earning more than even a major general in the United States Army, and yet his compensation as a private in the Army would be $30 a month and his benefits under this compensation article would be based upon that amount. Can it be said that in such a case that the benefits provided for himself and dependents would be based upon his earning capacity? No indeed, it would not be. Then where is the just reason for this wide difference of benefits? I call upon the committee for a better reason than they have thus far advanced. I say the premise is not correct, and you can not take as a model for these compensation laws in the Army the compensation laws of the several States, because they are based upon the civil walks of life, where each man has the liberty of choice in selecting his civil occupation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman in his computation taken into consideration the fact that so far as the older officers in the Army and Navy are concerned who will have the benefit of this insurance that their ages are far above the age of 21 to 30, to which the value of $8 a thousand is applicable, but range from 40 to 62 and 64, where the value of that same insurance is $18 to $25 a thousand?

Mr. BLACK. I am not referring to article 4 of the bill. That is what is known as the optional insurance feature, and I have not referred to it at all. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the comparisons which I have been making have no connection whatever with article 4, where premiums of insurance are required to be made. Now, some gentleman may ask me the question, If you do not approve article 3 how would you change the bill? I will tell you. I am in favor of making all of these benefits where no premium is paid, conferred by section 3, identically the same, both as to privates and officers and to their dependents. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, we have had now nearly four days of general debate. If we are going to make any progress on this bill, we must begin to consider it for amendment. I shall from now on insist that we debate the compensation section when amendments are pending to that, and in the same way the insurance section and the allowance section. We must do that if we are ever to pass this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Is not this of sufficient importance to justify us in taking whatever time may be necessary?

Mr. RAYBURN. The amendment to strike out the last word is not of sufficient importance to take up half a day in its consideration.

Mr. DOWELL. But this question is not a question to strike out the last word, but it is the material question involved in this bill, to give the private soldier a just pension.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would have liked to reply to the very amazing speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] if we had been on the insurance section. It was the most amazing enunciation, I am sure, that has ever been pulled off in this House.

Mr. DOWELL. But it is a fact that the question of compensation to the common soldier here is of sufficient importance to demand that it receive due consideration by the House. I want to ask the chairman what is the cause of the rush in trying to get along here any faster than we are going, when we are discussing the particular questions involved in this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I insist that we shall discuss what is germane before the House.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Did not the House listen to you the other day for an hour and a half?

Mr. RAYBURN. The House did not listen to me alone the other day for an hour and a half. It listened to other Members during a large part of my time. I could have cut them off, but I did not want to be discourteous. Mr. Chairman, I insist that we go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 13. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall administer, execute, and enforce the provisions of this act, and for that purpose have full power and authority to make rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising under the act, except as otherwise provided in sections 5 and 405. Wherever under any provision or provisions of the act regulations are directed or authorized to be made, such regulations, unless the context otherwise requires, shall or may be made by the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The director shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern the procedure of the divisions, to regulate the matter of the compensation, if any, to be paid to claim agents and attorneys for services in connection with any of the matters provided for in articles 2, 3, and 4, and to regulate and provide for the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing the same in order to establish the right to benefits of allowance, allotment, compensation, or insurance provided for in this act, the forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to such benefits, the method of making investigations and medical examinations, and the manner and form of adjudications and awards.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 2, line 20, after the words "provisions of," insert the words "article 4 of"; strike out the words "the act," page 2, line 24, and page 3, line 1, and "this act" on page 3, line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Said article 4"; also, strike out the words "allowance, allotment, compensation, or" in line 13, page 3.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is all one amendment. If this amendment is carried, the new bureau will have full control over insurance and over the subject matter of article 4. It will not have control over pensions or compensation, so called, which I expect to cover by moving amendments which will put them in the Bureau of Pensions under the Commissioner of Pensions, so far as that is concerned, and this new bureau will not have control of the soldier's pay and the allowance to his family while he is in the field, which ought to be paid now by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and not be delayed by being sent into any outside bureau. [Applause.]

I desire to say and to give notice that I am so despairing of our being able promptly by this legislation to take care of this imperative matter—that of taking care of the soldiers in the field—that I propose to ask unanimous consent, when the deficiency bill comes up, for the adoption on that bill of a section which will take care of the soldiers now much as they were taken care of at the border, by an amendment which I have prepared and which I want to have the House understand. Of course, it would be subject to objection by a single objector, but I believe if this bill is further delayed the Rules Committee will feel it necessary to introduce some rule which will allow that matter to be considered.

To take care of our soldiers now in the field by an allotment of part of their pay and an allowance by the Government to their families is of imperative and immediate necessity. We can not finish the consideration of this bill or expect it to be finally passed for a month or so. The Senate is full of matters which it will consider first. But we can make provision for the soldiers and their families, and I shall try to do it outside. But meanwhile, in order to simplify this bill, I move this amendment, which will limit the control of this new bureau to what belongs to it—the insurance provision, if it is passed—while the others will go to the other bureaus.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print this proposed amendment in the RECORD, so that it can be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the amendment he offers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the amendment referred to:

Sec. —. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of — for the payment of family allowances by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, under such rules and regulations as they may respectively provide, for the benefit of the family of every enlisted man, meaning thereby a person, male or female, enlisted, enrolled, drafted, or ordered into active service during the continuance of the war, including noncommissioned and petty officers, whether in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Naval Reserves, National Naval Volunteers, or any other branch of the United States service, while serving pursuant to law with the Army or Navy. The word family shall include only wife, children, or issue, and dependent mothers, and said regulations may allot and order paid for their support not more than half the pay of the enlisted man according to grade and length of service, excluding all allowances, and that whenever said allotment is insufficient the United States will add thereto and pay a family allowance which shall not exceed $50 a month: Provided, also, That the enlisted man, subject to such regulation, may allot his pay to such persons and for such purposes as he may direct, and if less than half his pay be allotted such regulations may require that the rest thereof shall be held to his credit during any required period and bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, with semiannual rests, and be payable after such period to the enlisted man or his executors, administrators, or assigns.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by the gentleman in charge of the bill to make response to the argument of my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. In brief his amendment is concerned with reference to line 13 on page 3. That amendment in substance is striking out the words "allowance," allotment," and "compensation." If this amendment were carried by a vote of the House, there would be nothing left in this bill except the insurance feature. The purpose of this entire piece of legislation is to combine all these features, and they are all correlative. The one would be inefficient without the others. Two would be inefficient without the other two. In other words, the concrete proposition is this, that the allotment feature, the compensation feature and the educational or vocational training feature and the insurance feature of the bill are all correlative and make one complete whole, for the purpose of benefiting not only the soldier and the sailor, but the families of the soldiers and the sailors.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not one of the prerequisites to entering into the military service that a man shall make an allotment of his compensation, as one of the first duties that he is called upon to perform, and that that allotment is made over his own signature on a blank furnished to him by the Military or Naval Establishment of the United States, and addressed to the secretary of the establishment in which he serves? And would not these allotments be properly directed and executed by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War?

Mr. DEWALT. I grant you, Mr. Chairman, and I also say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that there would be no serious objection to giving this function of the bill, if you please to the Department of War or the Department of the Navy, were it not for this fact, that this whole bill must be considered together and must be worked out together. It is not robbing the Secretary of the Navy, or the Secretary of War, or either department, of any of its functions. This bill provides that when the allotment is made under the provisions of the bill it shall be by compulsory allotment to the wife.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. The question that I raised was not raised for the purpose of urging that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy would have any function taken away, but the thought in my mind was that inasmuch as the allotment statement is filed with the department of which the man is a member, that department would be better qualified to carry out all the functions of the department with respect to the service of the man than to transfer part of it to another department, the information in connection with which would have to be supplied by the department in which the man was serving.

Mr. DEWALT. In reply to that, the gentleman will certainly agree with me and say that all the information that is now to be had in the War Department is certainly at the command of the department that may be created. And in further reply permit me to observe that, as I have before tried to state, all portions of this bill must, in my judgment, be considered together for the benefit of the entire bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Another question right there which I think is appropriate.

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to the integrity of this bill to transfer the administration of the allotment to a separate institution?

Mr. DEWALT. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEWALT. I will say to the gentleman that I do not, but I take this as a primal fact also: If I am desiring to reach a certain destination, it makes very little difference to me what road I take to get to that place, provided the road that I am taking is equally plain and efficient for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. One more question, if the gentleman please.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; but in reply further I say, therefore it can make no difference in my estimation whether this function be given to the new bureau or whether it be retained in the old. The destination is the same.

Mr. MADDEN. The only question in my mind was whether the transfer of the functions to a new bureau would not incur additional expense by reason of the fact that information must be furnished from the bureau possessing it to the bureau seeking it; whereas that expense would not be necessary if the function was performed by the bureau having possession of the information.

Mr. DEWALT. Even going so far as to grant that there might be additional expense, I still maintain that the resultant benefit would be greater than the expense entailed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would there not be a tremendous delay if, as proposed by this bill, no family allowance were made except upon an application made to this new bureau, considering the fact that there will be hundreds of thousands of such applications all coming in at once?

Mr. DEWALT. In reply to that let me observe to the gentleman that the Pension Department as now existing gets most or all of its information, I might say, from the War Department.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And there is delay there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 28, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offers an amendment which the clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MADDEN: Strike out all of section 13.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment which I offer, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that while perhaps the amendment which I propose is a little broader than it might be, yet I think an amendment could be offered in the shape of a new section that would modify this so as to meet approval from the business standpoint. According to my judgment there is no reason on earth why the War Department should not administer the funds of the men in the War Department. There is no reason why that branch of the service, having possession of the information and control of the men in connection with which the information is needed, should not administer the affairs of that department in all its details.

There is no reason why the Navy Department should not administer the affairs of the Navy Department to the extent of providing for the conduct of the allotment which the members of the Navy Department are required under the law to make. There is every reason why in my judgment the Navy Department and the War Department should perform these functions, for they have command of the men, they have the control of the discipline, they pay the compensation to the men for services rendered. They have the history of the men, the history of their families, they are in the possession of all information with respect to every man in the service. That information under this section of the bill would be required to be transferred to the board or the director or whatever you may be pleased to call it. That would require two sets of books to be kept, two sets of records to be made, two sets of men to be employed, two sets of expenses to be paid, two sets of taxation to be levied on the people.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman overlook the fact that this also makes provision for some deserving Democrats?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course it would make provision for additional men in some other branch of the service. Now, Mr. Chairman, it would not only require the employment of additional men in this new bureau, but the employment of additional men in the War Department and the employment of additional men in the Navy Department, because the history of every man in the service would have to be duplicated. That record then would have to be transmitted under this bill for the administration of this law.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HAMILL. Does the gentleman think it a good thing to load up the War Department and the Navy Department with the performance of duties that really do not properly pertain to those departments?

Mr. MADDEN. The War Department and the Navy Department are organized, as I understand it, to conduct the War and Navy departments. They are organized for the purpose of enlisting men, for the purpose of furnishing equipment to fight the battles of the Nation; for the purpose of furnishing discipline in connection with the conduct of those departments; for the purpose of making all pay rolls for the pay of the men; and that is what this means, and they have the information upon which to do this without the employment of any additional force. Instead of one force, under the enactment of this bill you would require the establishment of two forces and add another force. There would be two forces in the War Department and one additional force in this department.

Mr. HAMILL. Is not this really a fiscal matter which properly pertains to the Treasury; and while it is a fact that it might be accomplished by the Navy and War Departments, would not it embarrass and retard the administration of this department?

Mr. MADDEN. This is a fiscal matter and the payment of the men in the Army and the Navy is a fiscal matter. Keeping the accounts in the Army and the Navy is a fiscal matter, and I notice the gentleman from New Jersey is willing to admit that the establishment of this bureau might add to the expense, but he thinks it would create greater efficiency. Well, I would not want to accept the judgment of the gentleman from New Jersey on the question of fiscal efficiency. I know the gentleman, and I know he would be glad to see a new bureau by means of which greater efficiency, according to his standpoint, might be inaugurated, and that standpoint means the employment of additional men at an additional cost to the American taxpayer. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois I feel certain was not offered seriously. It is practically what was offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and just voted down, except that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is a little worse than the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey. I do not care to say anything more about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That for the purposes of this act, the director, commissioners, and deputy commissioners shall have power to issue subpoenas for and compel the attendance of witnesses within a radius of 100 miles, to require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, to administer oaths, and to examine witnesses upon any matter within the jurisdiction of the bureau. The director may obtain such information and such reports from employees of the departments of the Government of the United States and of the States as may be agreed upon by the heads of the respective departments. In case of disobedience to a subpoena, the bureau may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court, within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on, may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to any corporation or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before the bureau, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 17, after the word "from," insert the words "officials and."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose to be obtained from "officials and employees of the State" as provided in this paragraph? The information sought is not limited to the departments, but extends also to the States.

Mr. ESCH. I suppose the States would have a large amount of information in relation to the various men enlisted in those States. I know that is true from my own State. Every man in the National Guard has a record in The Adjutant General's office, and I suppose every State has similar records in the office of The Adjutant General. That would make all the records of The Adjutant General's offices of all the States available to the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would rest with the State; it is not mandatory.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understood when the gentleman was speaking earlier in the day he stated that it might be made by other departments. I was wondering whether under this bureau there could be employed any of the agents outside of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ESCH. It does not limit it to the Treasury Department. It says "any department of the Government," and it would include all of them.

Mr. FESS. So under the bill the administration might extend to other departments as well as to the Treasury.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; under the act creating the Federal Trade Commission we gave the commission practically power to levy tribute on all the departments of the Government. We did the same thing in the bill creating the Shipping Board.

Mr. FESS. So that if it should appear in future administrations that the Pension Department might be capable of doing the work more expeditiously than the other the power is here lodged?

Mr. ESCH. I presume so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: Page 5, line 5, after the word "thereof," and before the words "Section sixteen," insert: "Any person so required to attend as a witness shall be allowed and paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, as far as we are concerned, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. Page 5, line 1, insert after the word "any" the words "officer, agent, or employee of any."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 5, line 1, after the word "any" insert the words "officer, agent, or employee of any."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, for the payment of all expenses incident to the work authorized under this act, including salaries of the director and commissioners and of such deputies, assistants, accountants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, traveling expenses, rent and equipment of offices, type writers and exchange of same, purchase of law books and books of reference, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses. With the exception of the director, the commissioners, and such special experts as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of the work of the bureau, all employees of the bureau shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question, and if it is necessary I will offer an amendment in order to ask the question. I want to know whether under the power given in lines 22, 23, and 24, page 5, we do not make possible an entire vitiation of the civil service as applied to this particular law. The language seems so broad where it says "Such special experts as the Secretary may from time to time," and so forth.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; if we did not believe or we did not think we could trust it would be applied only to people not in a regular clerical way, and that they were really experts at some part of this work, such as compensation or insurance or something like that, or actuaries, or people like that. Of course, the gentleman can make it safer, and we would have no objection to an amendment, but I believe the language is sufficient, because it provides here that the general clerical force shall be drawn from the civil service, and they could not be considered experts along any line.

Mr. FESS. I readily admit that as to the directors and the commissioners it ought not to apply, and I readily admit there are certain characters of experts—

Mr. RAYBURN. Actuaries.

Mr. FESS. That ought to be omitted from such regulations, but it looks to me it is dangerously broad phraseology.

Mr. ADAMSON. Suppose you insert in line 24, after the word "all," the word "other," so it would read "all other employees." That would clearly differentiate between the experts and the other employees.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it is already differentiated, because you have the words "with the exception."

Mr. FESS. I wanted the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is my opinion, but if the gentleman during the consideration of the bill can think of a method of making it safer or limit it, which would mean what we intend to express, we would be very glad to accept it.

Mr. FESS. There has been a feeling that the civil-service work has been assaulted a good many times—

Mr. RAYBURN. I know that.

Mr. FESS. And I would like to avoid it in this bill if possible.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think we ought to live absolutely up to the civil-service law or repeal it; I do not know which I should vote for, but should perhaps vote to repeal it.

Mr. FESS. I thought of offering an amendment to strike out all of that part of the section that refers to the special employees but I recognize that would take out the power which you wish to retain if it is not abused.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If between now and the time we conclude the consideration of the bill the gentleman could name some special experts and others, there could not be any objection to that. It is intended to apply to experts alone and not to give individuals a job.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment, and I should like to have the privilege of offering an amendment later if I see fit to do so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I am somewhat curious to know of a distinction in this bill. There are two advisory boards created. The act of 1914 created an advisory board for one department of this War Risk Bureau and fixed the maximum compensation at $25 a day. I notice in this proposed act that you fix the maximum compensation of the experts of the other board at $20 a day. Now, what is the reason for that discrimination, if there is any?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know there is any reason for the discrimination, because I really think under this bill these commissioners should be more competent than under the other, for the simple reason the others have to deal only with the question of commerce and these have to deal with the question of allotments and compensation—

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know it makes any particular difference to me except to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that this discrimination existed.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the truth about it if there is any difference there.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is the situation. The original act makes it $25, while this makes it $20.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 18. That there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $141,000,000, to be known as the military and naval family allowance appropriation, for the payment of the family allowances provided by article 2. Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards made by the commissioner of the division of military and naval insurance.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 6, lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "by the Commissioner of the Division of Military and Naval Insurance" and insert "Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy, respectively."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to point out to this committee and to the managers of this bill that when a soldier or sailor enlists now he can not go where he pleases. He may be taken away immediately to another country, and under this bill his family can get no family allowance until, first, as you will find at the bottom of page 12, there is a written application to the bureau by the enlisted man or by his family. And then, with these thousands and hundreds of thousands of applications, there must be an award, which will at least have the delay of the Bureau of Pensions. There will be new clerks, new organizations. They will have to take these matters up serially and then make awards. I propose, Mr. Chairman, what is done by everybody else; that when a man enlists and makes an application for the payment of an allowance to his family, the War Department or the Navy Department, as the case may be, through their proper officer, shall give him that allowance from the very beginning, as they ought to do, and allot his pay. I therefore move to strike out this provision that the award shall be made by the commissioner of this new bureau and to insert a provision that the award to the man who enlists shall be by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, which means by any of their subordinates engaged for that purpose. It is the same point that I mentioned before.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is practically the same amendment that was voted down before.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I will have to ask for a division on this.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 19. That there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,150,000, to be known as the military and naval compensation appropriation, for the payment of the compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies provided by Article III. Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the director.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 6, line 17, after the words "awards by the," strike out "director," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Commissioner of Pensions."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is exactly what I have argued before, that payments of pensions ought to be made on awards of departments that know something about them, instead of going to some other department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I trust the House even at this late hour will indulge me for a few minutes while I express my opinion in reference to this wide, progressive, and meritorious legislation. [Applause.] While I have recently been indisposed and confined to my sick bed, all along I entertained the hope that I would recover in time to say a word for this bill and to vote for it. So I consider myself exceedingly fortunate, Mr. Chairman, in being able to stand here and look my colleagues in the eye and from the very bottom of my heart say that, if there is a measure which should appeal to our sense of justice, fairness, and humanity, it is the pending bill. [Applause.]

This bill will do something for every soldier and for every sailor who fights beneath our flag. It means comfort, it means blessings, it means happiness to the wife and children of every man, whether a volunteer or a conscript. We have passed in the history of the Republic many pieces of legislation affecting the soldiers of the Union, the Revolutionary heroes, those who fought in the War of 1812, in the Mexican War, in the Civil War, and in the Spanish-American War. But this measure is more far-reaching and beneficial than any legislation ever passed by Congress on the eve of any of our wars. There ought not to be a vote against it. If there are errors or imperfections in it, let us endeavor as just men to correct them. But let us pass it. If it is necessary, let us invoke the power of a special rule to put it through the House at the earliest possible moment, speed it on its way to the United States Senate and give that august body no excuse to withhold this meritorious legislation from the statute books before our heroes sail for France.

On the 2d day of June, when this same committee reported an amendment to the war-risk insurance bill, standing here I then appealed to that committee and to the American Congress to pass an insurance bill in justice to the men who are going to fight our battles on the seas and on foreign shores. At that time my only son, an officer in the Navy, could not have his life insurance increased, though a wife and two children are dependent upon him, without paying an old-line insurance company $100 for every extra thousand that he desired, which made it practically impossible for him and other young officers in the Army and Navy to guarantee their wives and children from want, and made the insurance rate so high that no private soldier or sailor could take out protection for his loved ones.

I here and now express my thanks and appreciation for the splendid work of the Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, in insisting upon this legislation. [Applause.]

While I am a partisan Republican, I want to voice my approval and appreciation of Woodrow Wilson's action in recommending this beneficial legislation. [Applause.] If the Democratic Member from Alabama, from the Birmingham district [Mr. HUDDLESTON], wants to criticize the administration and criticize the splendid members of the committee reporting this bill, beginning with honest Judge ADAMSON, from Georgia, and our beloved colleague from Wisconsin, JOHN ESCH, he can have a monopoly of it; I want none of it in mine. [Applause.]

Now, another thing: The insurance which is now being paid by your constituents and mine in the Army and Navy is at an additional rate from $38 to $100 from the private insurance companies, and there is a provision in those policies reserving the right on the part of the insurance company to increase the rate at any time, practically making it impossible at any period in this war for men with moderate salaries as officers or privates to carry insurance. God speed this legislation, and let us stand here, Republicans and Democrats, backing this administration man to man, and stand for the successful prosecution of the war, and vote for the pending war measure at the earliest practicable moment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 20. That there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $23,000,000, to be known as the military and naval insurance appropriation. All premiums that may be collected for the insurance provided by the provisions of Article IV shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations carried in this section and in the two preceding sections total something like $176,000,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; $276,000,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; $176,000,000. These sections here mean an expenditure of $176,150,000, which to my mind is the best appropriation that this Congress has made during this special session; a sum of money which will bring more in the way of efficiency to America and its Army than anything else that we could do.

Efficiency in twentieth-century warfare depends largely upon the morale of the fighting force and the population at large. It is but another word for unity. The newspapers to-day give a remarkable evidence of the effect of this unified mind and also the lack of it upon nations.

For instance, one article deals with the present situation in bewildered Russia. It states that Premier Kerensky has declared Petrograd in a state of war and that the commander in chief of the Russian armies has been deposed. It gives as the reasons for the conditions existing the following:

Lack of adequate arrangements for provisioning the city, the general unrest felt over the German success at Riga, the enemy's plans for an advance on Petrograd, and a redoubled campaign by German propagandists, which have all resulted in great tension in the Russian capital.

The fact is that at present the Russian morale is destroyed, and there is no seeming basis for united action toward a determined goal.

In the same newspaper is a dispatch from Germany stating there has been a fresh outburst of rage against the United States. A paragraph is as follows:

One newspaper carries a headline that crosses the entire page in large type, reading "America demands the deposition of the Hohenzollerns," which it follows with a furious denunciation of America.

Now, there must be some explanation of the unity on the part of Germany in an unjust cause, and also a reason for the lack of unity in Russia, where liberty is the shining goal ahead.

What is the secret of the efficiency which transforms the German nation into a mighty military machine which presents an unbroken front to many foes and keeps back every invading foot from her own territory?

I believe it is due more than anything else to the fact that Germany has for a quarter of a century carried out the fundamental principles of this bill under consideration. In time of peace she adopted the policy of lifting from the individual the burden of life's mishaps and placing it upon the broad shoulders of the nation. She established a system of national insurance under which the entire body of industrial workers was insured against the three great contingencies causing inability to earn a living—accidents, sickness, old age and invalidity.

That policy of the Government united the people into a dynamic force which still operates, although the Kaiser has treacherously betrayed the people by using them in his mad dreams of world dominion by the power of the sword.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I did not have an opportunity to speak in general debate, and I desire now to discuss this bill as a whole.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to complete his remarks in his five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. This has nothing to do with the measure under consideration.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It has, absolutely. I am trying to show what this measure will do for the efficiency of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed and complete his five minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman is talking about the good this provision will be in this emergency.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman is granted additional time, is it to discuss the amendment he has offered, or to continue along the line he has been talking on?

Mr. ADAMSON. My request was that he be allowed to use the balance of his five minutes as though he had not been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to conclude his remarks in his five minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Do not count this interruption. The CHAIRMAN. We will not count that. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I only want to call attention to the point that Germany has secured unity and that we may well take at least this one cue from that nation for an honorable Nation like our own.

America may have that same efficiency and solidarity, and she may secure it not through a government that works from the top down, but through one that works from the bottom up.

I believe that the passage of this insurance measure for the protection of the American soldiers and sailors will do much to aid in realizing the unification of America.

It will increase the morale of the fighting forces. The spirit of the army is as essential to its efficiency as guns, ammunition, and other equipment of war. It stands to reason that for the American soldier to render his most effective service he must be free to concentrate his entire attention upon the task before him. He should not be distracted by the thought of loved ones who would be helpless if he paid the price of death or disability. There is no fear known to mankind so bitter and so burdensome as the fear of poverty in days of helplessness. Carlisle was right when he said that the hell of which Englishmen are most afraid is the hell of poverty. It is true not of Englishmen alone, but of people all over the civilized world. It is a fear which blights the hope and blasts the happiness of men who are engaged in the peaceful pursuits which have little of hazard in them. How much more of agony it must contain for those who are hourly looking death in the face. It is a fear which must be removed from the minds of those who are risking all they have to give at the Nation's call.

This measure will remove that fear from the hearts of the defenders of America. It will also inspire those who remain behind while their natural protectors are in the fighting line.

It is estimated that 470,000 soldiers and sailors in service during the first year will have dependents. This measure will guard them from want and privation. If the figures are correct that 29,800 soldiers and sailors are marked for death during the first year of warfare and 43,750 totally or partially disabled, then the importance of this protective measure becomes apparent.

As I see it, the great purpose of this bill is to do justice to America's fighters, and by doing that to unify the Nation into an efficient, invincible unit.

I hope this bill will pass without a single dissenting vote.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of putting an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of the bill. It will be noted in section 18, on page 6, that the awards under the family allowance title are made by the commissioner of the division of military and naval insurance. In section 19 the awards made under the compensation title are made by the director. In section 20 the awards made under the insurance title are also made by the director. Question: Why should there be that division of authority in the payment of awards under the several titles of the bill? Why should not all of the awards be made either by the director or by the commissioner?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think it is immaterial. I do not care how they are made. I had just as soon that it be one way as the other.

Mr. ESCH. I did not care to offer an amendment. It occurred to me that it might be one thing or the other. Now, you will notice that on page 16, in section 210, the duty of accepting the applications for family allowances falls upon the commissioner, and they are to be certified by him to the War Department and Navy Department. Now, that may be a reason why family allowances are paid on the award of the commissioner, but why the other two sets of awards under the other titles are paid by the director—

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know now that there is any good reason for it. We can pass it over and return to it, and I will be very glad to look into it.

Mr. ESCH. Very well. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. RAYBURN. I ask unanimous consent to return to section 14.

Mr. GILLET. Before we do that I should like to ask the gentleman upon what basis it was determined that this $23,000,000 would be needed?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is an actuarial calculation, and it is in the hearings, and I can not keep the figures entirely in my mind. I have not the figures here. It was computed that a certain number of men will be killed and disabled the first year of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. You will find it on page 53 of the hearings. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his request, so that I may make an inquiry as to whether the language should not be changed? I move to strike out the last word. Language new to legislative enactment is used here in the form of permanently appropriating this money. The money is not permanently appropriated. We appropriate here. When it is once appropriated it is for all time available for the purposes for which it is appropriated. I think it will be far better, and I wish to suggest to the gentleman having charge of the bill to strike out the words "permanently appropriated," in line 2 of page 7, and to insert the words "made available." There is now no law whatsoever that restricts the use of an appropriation to any one year, except as to appropriations made in general appropriation bills.

Mr. RAYBURN. What is the language?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am directing attention to the language in line 2 on page 7, "permanently appropriated," which I think should be "made available."

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will offer an amendment, that will be perfectly acceptable to the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out, in line 2, page 7, the words "permanently appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "made available."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 7, line 2, strike out the words "permanently appropriated" and insert in lieu thereof the words "made available."

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi took the chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] that it occurs to me that the reason for that is so that this money may not have to be subject to an annual appropriation bill passed by Congress. If you strike out these words, will not those who are the beneficiaries under the act have to wait until the appropriation bills are passed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. As I stated to the gentleman having the bill in charge, when money is once appropriated for any purpose it remains appropriated for all time. There are certain limitations as to appropriations carried in general appropriation bills. I took occasion to confirm my impression by conferring with the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, and he has called my attention to the law, which shows that there is no question whatever that when this money is once appropriated it is appropriated for all time until it is used. As I take it, you are not attempting by this phraseology to appropriate $23,000,000 each year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But you are undertaking to appropriate the premium payments as they come in.

Mr. STAFFORD. You do not appropriate the premium payments, but you direct by legislation that these premium payments shall be paid into the Treasury. I intend to follow up the amendment which I have just offered by moving to strike out, in line 5, the word "appropriation" and insert the word "fund." What is purposed by the framers of this bill is to create a certain fund. We appropriate $23,000,000 in this one instance. That goes into the Treasury as a lump sum for this special purpose, together with the premiums that are paid thereon. There is a fund that may be utilized for all time until it is exhausted. Now, there is no question but what there is a contractual obligation incurred by Congress by this phraseology, which will compel the Appropriations Committee to report from time to time the necessary amounts to carry out this legislative enactment.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman think under the language that he inserted there, "made available," the money would go into the General Treasury or that it would be set aside permanently in this fund?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would be available at all times for this purpose.

Mr. RAYBURN. It would remain in this one fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not quite agree with the gentleman on that. I agree with him in his suggestion that the $23,000,000 capital for this appropriation on the preceding page does not have to be reappropriated, permanently or otherwise; but it seems to me that there should be a specific appropriation of the premiums paid in under the law, otherwise they would go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The Constitution says that no money shall be drawn out of the Treasury except by virtue of an appropriation. The premiums will go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and there must be in the law an appropriation of the premiums either in this language or some other. In other words, they must be appropriated into a separate fund.

Mr. RAYBURN. I suppose the only intention is to keep the premiums out of the General Treasury, but suppose we pass this by for the present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas I ask that this provision be passed over, to be taken up at a future time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that section 20 may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 14. I am sure in the writing of the bill it was an inadvertence in putting the compensation at $20 instead of $25. If there is any objection to an amendment, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the amendment?

Mr. RAYBURN. I stated if there is any objection to it I will withdraw the request. The compensation here is $20, and in the war-risk insurance act it is $25.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman certain of that? My recollection is that it is $20.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have the act before me, and it says:

That the Secretary of the Treasury * * * is likewise authorized to appoint two persons skilled in the practices of accident insurance for the purpose of assisting the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the adjustment of claims for death, personal injury, or detention; the compensation of the persons so appointed to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed $20 a day each while actually employed.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request. I was relying entirely upon other information.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. That there shall be set aside as a separate fund in the Treasury, to be known as the military and naval pay deposit fund, all sums held out of pay as provided by section 203 of this act. Such fund, including all additions, is hereby permanently appropriated for the payment of the sums so held and deposited, with interest, as provided in section 203, and the amount necessary to pay interest is hereby appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman have this section passed over for the same purpose as the last one was passed over?

Mr. RAYBURN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this section be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That for the purpose of this act marriage shall be conclusively presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is a legal spouse living, if the man and woman have lived together in the openly acknowledged relation of husband and wife during the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of war, or the date of enlistment or of entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States if subsequent to such declaration, or during the two years immediately preceding the man's death or the beginning of the disability.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out, on page 7, lines 15 to 24, inclusive.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the committee amendment ought to prevail. It does seem to me that the language as originally written in this bill was enough to thoroughly safeguard it and that it deserved to remain. In line with that I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language in the pension laws with reference to a matter of about the same kind, and that is with reference to colored and Indian soldiers. I think the language is not so closely drawn as this. I fear if we cut this out entirely that we will do an injustice. Of course, I know it may be unpopular to say that, but nevertheless it is true, and I think it ought to be said.

Now, in the pension laws I desire to read the language, which says:

They are considered man and wife who habitually recognize each other as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and lived together up to such time as enlistment.

Now, this language here is as follows:

SEC. 22. That for the purpose of this act marriage shall be conclusively presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is a legal spouse living, if the man and woman have lived together in the openly acknowledged relation of husband and wife during the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of war, or the date of enlistment or of entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States if subsequent to such declaration, or during the two years immediately preceding the man's death or the beginning of the disability.

I fear if that language is stricken out and there is no relief for cases like that for the wife or for the children that we may work a very serious injustice, and for that reason I trust the committee amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language proposed to be stricken out only includes common-law marriages and does not include as suggested marriages by Indian laws and customs, as has been decided time and again by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the States in which Indian tribes reside. In other words, common-law marriages are not included in the Indian marriage laws and customs of their tribes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was simply reading the language of the bill. In the question of marriage in the case of a great many there comes a difficult question of proof, which is an additional reason, I think, why this language or some similar language should remain in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not possible for a situation such as the gentleman has mentioned to be covered by regulations which are to be drawn by the bureau or the Secretary or the directors or the commissioners. They regulate about everything else under the provisions of this bill, and should not they cover that matter by regulations? I ask the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. We could say—

Mr. WALSH. Without mentioning it in the law.

Mr. RAYBURN. We could appoint these officers and turn the whole thing over to them, but I would not be in favor of that. Of course, in a measure like this great discretion and great latitude must be given to somebody about details, but that is a matter I think should be made definite.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think we ought to write provisions such as that into the law, recognizing—

Mr. RAYBURN. We have written that provision into the law many times.

Mr. WALSH. What law?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have just read one.

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to ask the gentleman for information as to the section, why not recognize any marriage such as the courts of the law recognize, such as pension laws and the laws of the various States. If the statute recognizes the marriage to be valid, why should not the compensation bureau or the allotment bureau recognize it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I was going to have this read. As I understand, this is a question merely of proof—if it shall be conclusively proved—but it does not settle the question that may arise in reference to marriage in various States, and I would ask to have this amendment read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think this is additional to cover cases that can not be proven by law.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; I understand it is to be legislation merely for the benefit of this commission and that it does not in any way interfere with reference to the question of marriages in the various States.

Mr. RAYBURN. It could not have any effect except as to this act.

Mr. DOWELL. But it does specify what they may think is conclusive.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas quoted from section 4705 of the Revised Statutes in regard to the regulation of these Indian soldiers and colored soldiers and sailors and quoted it correctly as far as he went, but the last line says:

This section shall not apply to claims on account of persons who enlisted after March 3, 1873.

So that the section that he quoted was to those who had lived together as husband and wife before that time—March 3, 1873.

Mr. RAYBURN. That does not make any difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, before the word "in" beginning the sentence, strike out the quotation marks.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 18, after the word "or," insert the words "of any age."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 20, after the word "occupation," strike out the words "of any age."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, between lines 3 and 4, insert "(a) A legitimate child."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman propose to follow that up by another amendment, so far as the next paragraph is concerned? I suppose the gentleman intends to change the letter.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is an additional classification?

Mr. RAYBURN. This is a classification to cover everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the several amendments now sent to the desk may be read together.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 4, strike out "(a)" and insert "(b)."

Page 8, line 9, strike out "(b)" and insert "(c)."

Page 8, line 10, strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 23, strike out the word "man" and insert the words "person in the service."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will explain that amendment by saying that it simply means that the sentence "person in the service" would cut out men on the retired list who have not been called back into active service.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "warrant," line 3, page 9, add "officer or appointed."

Mr. RAYBURN. There was some question raised in the committee as to whether or not it would cover these field clerks or men like these.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would it include the clerks in the Engineer Corps.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas whether he is certain that the Army field clerks are officers?

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been reliably informed by people whose judgment I took that they were.

Mr. MADDEN. They are not officers; they are clerks.

Mr. DALLINGER. They have the privileges of officers, but they are not officers.

Mr. BUTLER. They have a noncommissioned grade. Of course, if the gentleman has the authority, all right.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have been so informed. I am willing to pass it, however, for the present.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have a letter this morning from The Adjutant General, in which he referred to them as men who might be commissioned as officers.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think it ought to cover these field clerks.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to say that my former secretary has been appointed as field clerk, and I was advised by The Adjutant General's office that they could not be commissioned without further legislation by Congress, and that they simply had the privileges of officers, while the status was that of clerk.

Mr. RAYBURN. I simply wanted to put something in here that would cover these field clerks, because they are rendering valuable service. If it does not, I care nothing about it.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not be better to use the term "commissioned officer, including warrant officers and field clerks in The Adjutant General's office of the Army"?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know that that would cover all of them, anyhow. There may be other officers. I offered the amendment for the simple reason that I have been informed that this would cover the people we wanted to cover in this section. If it is not all right, I ask unanimous consent that this be passed over.

Mr. BUTLER. While I am satisfied with the gentleman's purpose, I do not think he is right about it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Texas has made the request that I wish to make—that we return to this matter later,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this matter be passed for the present and the section be returned to later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 8, line 11, after the word "him," insert the words "in a court of record."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I want to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill what his idea is as to the kind of acknowledgment that will be sufficient under this language. It says, "acknowledged by him." Now, the concluding part of that paragraph is very plain and specific. It says:

Or if he has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute to such child's support.

That is very plain. There are two alternatives seeking to fix the status of an illegitimate child. One is where the putative father acknowledges that he is the father of the child, and the other is where the status of the child has been fixed by a decree of court. What kind of acknowledgment on the part of the father does the gentleman think would be sufficient in order to fix the status of that illegitimate child so that it could receive from the father benefits bestowed under this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know anything except something like that he would openly acknowledge before men that it was his child, and that he was willing to sign the statement and contribute to its support, and so forth, and that it was his child and dependent upon him. I do not think that there is any especial language that we could put there. If there is any such language that would save the Government from being imposed upon I am willing to have it.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman think that the amendment I have suggested here would do it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not hear the amendment.

Mr. COX. Where he admits it in a court of record?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the gentleman's amendment by striking out the word "or" after the word "record" and to insert the word "and," so that he will be obliged to acknowledge in a court of record.

The CHAIRMAN. In just a moment. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Illinois will be recognized to offer his amendment next.

Mr. COX. I will explain briefly, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there before he starts in?

Mr. COX. To a question only.

Mr. BARKLEY. What sort of proceedings has the gentleman in mind that would be binding upon any man?

Mr. COX. I will answer that in just a minute.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. COX. A question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose a man in a letter, signed by himself, acknowledged he was the father of a child; would there be any necessity for further proceedings?

Mr. COX. I think I will touch on that before I get through.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to assure you, one and all, that I am heartily in favor of this bill. I said yesterday that there might be some details here and there in it that ought to be whipped into shape. I offer this amendment in good faith. It is offered in good faith and in all seriousness, and I am going to ask those in charge of the bill seriously to consider it before they oppose it.

Of course we want in every way we can to keep the Government from being imposed upon, and I am sure every member of the committee desires to act along that line. Now, this paragraph 6 seeks to fix the status of an illegitimate child, and one of the conditions whereby it seeks to fix the status of an illegitimate child is where the putative father has acknowledged that he is the father of the child. I wonder whether or not we are going to leave that language so wide, broad, and deep that the mother of an illegitimate child could go out and find somebody to make a sworn affidavit to the effect that they heard the father say that he was the father of her illegitimate child—a thing that not a court in the United States would ever admit as evidence.

Now, then, in response to the question asked of me by the gentleman from the State of Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] as to what kind of a proceeding you would have, I was prosecuting attorney in Indiana for six years, and during that period I saw men come into the magistrate's court, a court of record, and admit that they were the father of the illegitimate child. But even that admission would not entitle the child to inherit from the putative father on the death of the father at all—an illegitimate child, acknowledged by the father as being his child, either by a court of record or on his own admission or by a court by judicial decree fixing the status of the child. That never entitles the child to inherit from the father. You would have to go further than that.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. How would the situation be met where a magistrate's court, as in our State, has the jurisdiction to receive this acknowledgment that you speak of, but is especially designated in our State as not a court of record in the general sense of a court of record?

Mr. COX. Then I suppose that in the State of Nebraska you have a court of record that takes care of cases of this kind?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. Could the gentleman modify his amendment by saying "a court of competent jurisdiction"? Would you object to that?

Mr. COX. Not at all.

Now, in response to the question propounded a moment ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], the declarations in favor of interest are never admitted in criminal cases; only declarations against interests in criminal cases are admitted in the trial of criminal cases—

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. COX. Not just now. And the admission by a father by letter that he is the father of a legitimate child would not be binding upon the Government. It would not be sufficient to justify a decision that that child should inherit any part of his putative father's estate, and certainly would not be sufficient to bind the putative father under any of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. COX. I will yield first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Suppose this provision as to the child applied only to the family allowance or the insurance provisions of this bill. Suppose one of these men had made a will in which he named this child. He would be excluded?

Mr. COX. Oh, that is entirely different. A man has the right to make a will and designate any one he wants to leave his property to. That is different from the procedure under this provision.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That will not give this child any part of this? That excludes it under these circumstances?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield to a question.

Mr. RAKER. If a man should write a letter and sign it, and in it say that a certain child was his, is it not a fact—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that in a court of equity the child could prove and get a decree?

Mr. COX. Oh, no; not even in the gentleman's State.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, nonsense.

Mr. COX. Now, gentlemen, I want to ask you in all seriousness to consider this amendment. I am not seeking to defeat the purposes of this bill. I am seeking to clarify what to my mind is a doubtful provision in the bill. I want to see if we can not foreclose all the dangers whereby the Government is likely to be defrauded. I do not believe that we want to go on record here as enacting a law that would say that, simply because A has admitted to B that he is the father of some illegitimate child, that should be binding upon A in the disposition of his estate. I do not think we should go that far. I do not think it would be a wise policy for this Congress to go that far.

I think the only safe course to pursue is to have a record, a court record, of the father's admission to which the father is a party, and such a record, in the absence of fraud, would be conclusive.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says that for a man to sign his name to a letter admitting that he is the father of an illegitimate child, that that would be used in a declaration. Now, just such an admission as that in his interest—

Mr. COX. How is that?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that an admission in his interest?

Mr. COX. That would not be binding if a controversy came between the legitimate and the illegitimate children of the father, trying to get hold of his estate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. RAKER. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DECKER rose.

Mr. RAKER. There has been no opposition to the amendment yet. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Are not five minutes allowed in opposition to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee, will be recognized first. The gentleman from California will be recognized later.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this section was considered by your committee, and at first it was thought that perhaps some restriction protecting the Government, like the one suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, might be a good thing. But after careful consideration and discussion your committee felt that it was best to use the words which you find in the bill and make this depend upon two things, as to whether or not an illegitimate child should receive the benefits of this bill; to wit, a judicial decree by a court of record compelling the father to take care of the child or an acknowledgment upon the part of the father that the child was his.

Now, of course we can readily see that some fraud might be perpetrated upon the Government, but when you look at it again it occurs to me that that fraud will not be so great. Men do not acknowledge illegitimate children with such readiness as might be supposed from the arguments here.

Mr. GILLET. Under this wording, suppose the mother of the child came forward and said that the father had acknowledged it to her, would not that be sufficient?

Mr. DECKER. I was just coming to that point. The man himself is not going to acknowledge the paternity of an illegitimate child for the purpose of defrauding the Government. I do not think that the men who fight this war or any other war are the kind of men who, for the sake of defrauding the Government, will acknowledge the paternity of children that are not theirs.

Now, the next question is, what inducement will there be to others to defraud the Government at the expense of the reputation of the soldiers. That is very pertinent, as put forward in the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET].

I apprehend that the men who administer this law will be intelligent men, and if they are not intelligent men the law will be a failure in a good many respects. The bare statement of the mother of an illegitimate child that some soldier who is over in France is its father will not be taken, as I understand it, or the statement that the man had acknowledged that it was his child would not be taken, standing by itself, as proof of the truth of the statement, but I apprehend that this bureau which we will create will have somebody commissioned to look into the surrounding circumstances, and if the woman is telling the truth, nine times out of ten there will be some corroborative circumstances that any intelligent man can form an opinion upon as to the truth of her statement. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] says that if the soldier should acknowledge it to John Smith, perhaps that would make the Government liable. I say it would not, because the reliability of John Smith, his character, the circumstances under which the admission was made and how it happened to be made, would all be taken into consideration, just the same as a judge upon the bench or a magistrate would consider those things. Now, if you say in this bill that no illegitimate child shall receive these benefits unless there is an acknowledgement in open court of record, then you might just as well wipe out the whole thing so far as the benefits of it reaching to the extent that I believe honest and thoughtful and right-thinking men want to have it go, because the circumstances will be few indeed where illegitimate children will be acknowledged in open court by the putative father. If you believe that the illegitimate child of a soldier should not receive the benefits of this bill, then vote for the amendment, but if, on the other hand, gentlemen of the committee, you believe that these children who come into the world without any blame upon their part or without any stain upon their hearts and souls should have the right to hold up their heads and have the benefit of a chance in life, then vote against this amendment and leave this bill as the committee wrote it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MADDEN. I offer an amendment to the amendment; after the last word in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana I wish to strike out the word "or" in line 11, page 8, and insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit, that is not an amendment to this amendment. There is no word "or" in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MADDEN. I meant to strike out the word "or" in the bill, on page 8, line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. That will come later. That would not be an amendment to this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought it would.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer this amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]: Add to the amendment the words "or by a paper signed and witnessed according to the requirements for the execution of deeds in the State of the child's domicile."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON to the amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Add the following to the amendment offered by Mr. Cox: "or by a paper signed and witnessed according to the requirements for the execution of deeds in the State of the child's domicile."

Mr. STEVENSON. The question has been made here as to whether or not all the men who go to this war will be men who will lightly acknowledge the paternity of illegitimate children. Now, it must be remembered that there is a large element of the colored people in the South who are going to this war, and this question will be the most troublesome one that will have to be solved. Every time a person of that race gets a pension, in many of the counties of the South there will be children bobbing up all over the neighborhood, with lots of fellows ready to swear that a certain man who is going to get the pension, or whose people are going to get it, acknowledged that he was the father of a certain child, and they will come mighty near proving it in writing. And not only that, but the wife and the legitimate children and the brothers and sisters, who are legitimate brothers and sisters, will have to come up and divide with a lot of people whose paternity nobody knows; and you can prove that almost anybody in the community is their father. If you do not believe that, go down South and investigate a little.

And I will tell you another thing: You had better put the bars a little higher about how you are going to prove marriage, anyhow. You know when a colored man moves across the line he marries again. If there were enough colored women over in Europe every colored soldier who goes over there from my section of South Carolina would be married before he was over there three weeks. That is no overstatement. Whenever colored people separate for 12 months they both get married again. I had a man who died in my employ, who was in my employ 20 years—a man of excellent character, who sat in the front seat in the church, and he was a class leader, and he went every Friday night—yet I know of my own knowledge that he was married several times, and his last wife had two living husbands. [Laughter.] That is a fact. That is the situation there. You had better not open the door here for this kind of trouble about these pensions. You had better have an acknowledgment, at least, by a deed properly signed and witnessed.

As to proof by a letter supposed to be signed by the alleged father, the trouble would be almost as great. Few colored men have established well-defined signatures, and those of them who can write have not the high ideals about signing another man's name. What happens? Some man who goes to war for us is killed, and compensation is allowed to his people under this bill. Somebody turns up with a letter signed, apparently, by this poor colored man who has gone to the war. How do you know whether it is his signature or not? He has not established any signature and you can not tell whether it is his or not. Some negro turns up and says it is John Smith's signature and that he signed this letter, and he will get a part of the pension. It will be divided with illegitimate children, divided with somebody that has no claim on it at all, and you can not dispute it or get around it. I submit that we ought to strike out all of this acknowledgment in a court of justice or require the acknowledgment to be in the form and solemnity of the acknowledgment of deeds in the State.

Mr. BLACK. If you insert the words "acknowledged publicly," would not that cover it?

Mr. STEVENSON. No; you could get one of these colored fellows to prove that it was acknowledged at a hot-supper festival before a hundred people if the pension depended on it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that "acknowledged" has a legal signification?

Mr. STEVENSON. When the word "acknowledged" is used in the common acceptance of the term, unless you say acknowledged legally or under oath it has not that effect. When you come to the acknowledgment with an instrument for registration you acknowledge it under oath, or have a witness, but if you say acknowledged, taking the usual acceptance of the term, I can step out in the lobby and acknowledge the paternity to somebody, and you could prove it by some one else. I tell you that you ought to have some safeguards put around it, or you will have a good deal of trouble.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest this: There seems to be a great deal of information in the House on this question. I do not agree at all with the learned discussion I have heard here by two able lawyers. I believe when a man in writing admits the paternity of a child the presumption is so strong against him that any court would accept it. It is a declaration against his interest. If you put language in, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, or that language as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, you might as well strike out the whole paragraph, because no man, even in the southland where the colored people thrive so luxuriantly, will ever go before an officer and in the formality and solemnity of the execution of a deed acknowledge that some piccaninny should be accredited to him. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. DECKER) there were 19 ayes and 33 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "court of record" and insert in lieu thereof "court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit that amendment to the amendment so as to cover cases under our law in Nebraska. In Nebraska, and I understand it is so in a number of States, when a charge of this kind is brought the man may be brought before a magistrate. The law confers on the magistrate jurisdiction to receive his acknowledgment and have it entered upon the magistrate's docket. It is made a matter of record so far as that court is concerned. But in our State, as in other States, a magistrate's court is not denominated a court of record, but it is for the purpose of taking acknowledgments in illegitimacy, a court of competent jurisdiction. If the charge is contested all they can do is hear the complaint and the evidence of the complainant and have it all certified to what is called a court of record. Only in a court of record or general jurisdiction can a trial be had. In this case if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] should prevail, my amendment would in nowise interfere with the proposition involved in his amendment. It would save the situation in a number of States. Therefore I suggest that my amendment to his amendment should prevail.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say, that if any amendment is to be adopted I prefer the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska, but I trust that the House will vote them both down, for I believe the language here is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were 43 ayes and 37 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were 26 ayes and 50 noes.

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend article (c), page 8, line 11, by striking out the word "or" and inserting the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 11, after the word "him" strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make the language read as follows:

(c) An illegitimate child, but, as to the father, only if acknowledged by him, and if he has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute to such child's support.

A mere acknowledgment ought not to be sufficient; it ought to be judicially determined, and then there can be no question whatever about a fraud being perpetrated on the Government of the United States.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman believe a decree of the court fixing responsibility on a man will be sufficient whether acknowledged or not?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know whether it would or not, but I would make it a prerequisite to the right of the child to entail the estate of the father.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Notwithstanding the court's decree under the gentleman's amendment, if the father denied it the child would not benefit under this section.

Mr. MADDEN. The court might decree something that was not exactly the fact—

Mr. BARKLEY. That might be true in any sort of proceedings.

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to the father making public acknowledgment that he was the father of that child, for the child to get the benefit he would have to go to the court and get a decree of the court filed on behalf of the child before he could get any relief.

Mr. MADDEN. This section of the bill does not make provision as to what acknowledgment shall be made nor before whom it shall be made, or when it shall be made, or where it shall be made, or the nature of the acknowledgment. It seems to me that in order to make the acknowledgment complete there ought to be some record of the court somewhere, and the way to get that covered is to have the court pass upon the case.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. How can you secure judicial action if the man never returns?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know how you lawyers do things. I am trying to get at this case—

Mr. SABATH. But the gentleman's amendment is more drastic than the language of the bill itself.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not a lawyer, but I am trying to suggest some common-sense view of the situation that seems to be embarrassing to a lot of people. It does not embarrass me at all. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] has an amendment he desires to offer.

Mr. DOWELL. I am offering an amendment but I desire to ask a question to lay a foundation for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized in a few moments. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 9, after the word "stepchild," strike out all to the period at the end of the line.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, this line reads "A stepchild, if a member of the man's household." Now, in other words, if this child is not a member of the soldier's household or if he has no household, it is not a stepchild under the meaning of this law. I think that is an absurd assumption and I do not think it is fair. I believe it will work hardships in many worthy cases. Now, these cases unless taken care of in this law, will be constantly coming up to Members of the House for special bills, and it seems to me as we go along we might change them, carefully, and that this is one question we should take care of.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. I do.

Mr. COX. What is the gentleman's interpretation of the language in order to be a stepchild? Does the gentleman construe the language in the bill to mean the child must live under the roof of the stepfather?

Mr. BATHRICK. Absolutely, under the provisions of this bill, and the stepfather may have no roof so the stepchild is absolutely excluded from any benefits under the bill. Now, the man may go to war—

Mr. COX. Just a moment further. Suppose the stepchild married and has got a home of its own?

Mr. BATHRICK. This bill excludes all children, married or over 18 years of age.

Mr. COX. Under the provisions of this bill would it be regarded as a stepchild?

Mr. BATHRICK. If married or over 18 years of age, the stepchild would be excluded.

The case I am looking at is this: A man has gone to war, either an enlisted man or a drafted man, and he is the husband of a woman with a child, and the child was her child. He remains responsible for the care of that child under the law. Now, take the case where the woman dies and the man returns from war. He has no household; he can not have a household when he is in France, in many cases, and the child is turned out on the cold world without any care. Now, I do not believe the committee or anybody else intended that should happen, and it is easily within the scope of our imaginations to conjure up other cases where children are thrown out without any provision being made under the bill, and I believe my amendment should prevail. Now, I am for this bill, I am heartily in accord with the purposes of it and the principles enunciated in the bill, but there is always present, it seems to me, when bills are considered in the House, an overweening determination on the part of chairmen and leaders of committees to jam bills through because it is "ours." Now, that is not the way to get consideration of bills in this House; it is not the way to get combined application of the minds of Members of this House, and while this amendment does not bear with any supreme importance on the bill, yet there are other matters that are going to come up shortly that do have important relation to the principles of good legislation for the purpose of taking care of our soldiers. I believe our honorable chairman, who is known so well in this House and in the country, and who is better known, perhaps, for his intelligence and many attainments in a predominant desire to have a bill go right through just as he made it.

When we get to that proposition spoken of this afternoon by our friend from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], that there should not be any difference between one man's life and another's when he is performing a patriotic service, I hope the gentleman from Georgia—the chairman of this committee—and those who stand with him in an effort to put this bill through right, will propose some amendment themselves as a committee amendment to amend this bill. I believe a dead or maimed private has yielded to his country as great a sacrifice as a dead or maimed general. I do not believe we should overturn this conception and practice of a hundred years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes; if I can have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman say whether or not in his State a man is legally liable for the support of his stepchildren?

Mr. BATHRICK. I can not do that. I am like my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I am not a lawyer. I know he has a moral obligation, and moral obligations must be considered in any legislation. No lawyer will deny moral obligations, or assume that law is unmoral, will he?

Mr. DYER. I do not think he wants to force that on the House when the man is not legally liable and that when the child is not in his household he should take care of it.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I presume that we are both interested in doing what we can to promote this bill, and there seems to be some trouble on the part of the gentleman as to the definition of the word "household." Will the gentleman allow me to read a definition from Bouvier?

Mr. BATHRICK. I would like to have the gentleman show me that the household where the child may live, for instance, among strangers, is still the household of the man who is far away, and does not in any sense live there.

Mr. SLOAN. I desire to read to the committee this definition from Bouvier's Law Dictionary. It says:

Household. Those who dwell under the same roof and constitute a family.

Citing Webster:

But it is not necessary that they should be under the roof or that the father of the family be with them if the mother and child keep together so as to constitute a family.

Mr. BATHRICK. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I have cited a case where a man goes to war, having married a woman with a child, and the wife dies and the child is left out in the world. I think the citation the gentleman just referred to does not apply to that case.

Mr. SLOAN. That child is the last remnant of that family, and as long as any member of the family exist the family remains.

Mr. BATHRICK. I think that is a strong definition, subject to legal quibbles and varied interpretations. If we pass the amendment I propose, it certainly would do no harm, and it has great possibilities for doing good. I am for this bill and shall vote for it and try to make it better as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] offers an amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language on line 17, page 8:

"Child" and "grandchild" are limited to unmarried persons either under 18 years of age, or of any age if incapable.

The words "either" and "or" should be stricken out and the word "and" should be inserted in lieu of "or," in order to meet what I think the committee desires.

Mr. RAYBURN. What interpretation does the gentleman think the language ought to have?

Mr. DOWELL. I will read. It says:

limited to unmarried persons either under 18 years of age, or of any age.

Should it not be "limited to unmarried persons under 18 years of age, and of any age when incapable"?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; there are two classes there. One is the competent that is under 18, and passes out of that age. The other never passes out of the category of a child, because he never becomes competent.

Mr. DOWELL. I understand what the committee means, but in the expression here you put it "either under 18 years, or of any age," and if the word "either" is stricken out you then state "of under 18 years of age," and if you change the word "or" to "and" you then include those "of any age" who are incompetent.

Mr. RAYBURN. It seems to me the language is perfectly clear.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not want to offer an amendment if the committee objects to it, but it occurs to me that in order to make it correct you should strike out the word "either." It will then include "all children and grandchildren under 18 years of age and all incompetent of any age."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Suppose you strike out the words "of any age," so that it will read "either under 18 years of age, if incapable."

Mr. DOWELL. Perhaps that might do. Does the chairman make an objection to language of that character?

Mr. RAYBURN. Of the character you suggest?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. It seems to me the language is perfectly clear as it is. There are two classes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If you strike out the words "of any age," it is perfectly plain they are under 18 years of age, or incapable, and the words "of any age" only mixes it up. I would suggest to strike out the words "either under eighteen years of age, or incapable."

Mr. BATHRICK. I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] offer an amendment?

Mr. DOWELL. I will not insist on an amendment. I think the language I suggested makes it very clear, and I think the language in the bill is not clear; but I will not insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BATHRICK. These are children, incapable because of mental or physical infirmity of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation; and in section 301 there is a reference very similar to that. Now, what do you propose to do with a mental incompetent, say 25 or 30 years of age, who is being cared for in a public institution at public cost? Do you intend to double the public cost by giving such a person compensation also?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. I think a man should be cared for. If he is a public charge, that cost should be taken out of that.

Mr. BATHRICK. There is no reason why a mental incompetent, a menace to the community, might not be taken by the court and put into an insane asylum and there cared for at the public cost. Or there is no reason why this same mental incompetent might not be costing public money in a poorhouse, and the people of the State called upon to pay taxes to support him, while at the same time the Federal Government is taxing the public to support him.

Mr. RAYBURN. From time to time a child will be sent to an asylum or to an epileptic colony or sanitarium, which is a humiliating thing to the family when the child has to go there entirely at the charge of the State; but if that person, by some contribution by himself or his relatives or from the Government is in whole or in part supported in that way, the family would not be subject to the humiliation of putting that child into an epileptic colony or an asylum, but they could rent a ward in a private hospital, not in a public institution.

Mr. BATHRICK. I agree with the gentleman absolutely, but would it not be a good plan to have a proviso inserted here, or at the end of the paragraph on page 8, something to this effect: "Provided, That such payment shall cease while such child is incarcerated in any penal or eleemosynary institution as a mental incompetent"?

Mr. RAYBURN. He will not be incarcerated in a penal institution.

Mr. BATHRICK. Semi-incompetence often leads people to commit crimes, and then they are committed to a penal institution. Then they are a charge upon the public.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is not so in my State.

Mr. BATHRICK. An insane murderer is incarcerated in an asylum for the criminal insane. There, under this bill, they will be costing the public double.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that when insane or dependent persons are placed in public institutions, if they have any funds of their own or if their relatives who are ordinarily obliged to support them have funds of their own, those relatives must pay for their support?

Mr. BATHRICK. I am aware of the fact that that is usually the case. But always the relatives seek to avoid this expense and often succeed.

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman is aware of that fact, does he not concede that if this allotment is made and this compensation is paid, that payment will come from the Government from the allotment instead of the State paying? That is the law of the land.

Mr. BATHRICK. If you would adopt such a provision as I have suggested there would be no opening for fraud.

Mr. DEWALT. You do not need it. That is the law now.

Mr. BATHRICK. In one case it is necessary for the officials of the institution to prove that the relatives have this power to pay. In the other case it is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 8, line 18, by striking out the word "unmarried." I would be glad to have the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill. As the bill reads, the terms "child" and "grandchild" are limited to unmarried persons under 18 years of age.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will suspend just a moment until the Clerk reports the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER: Page 8, line 18, strike out the word "unmarried."

Mr. RUCKER. These definitions on this page, I understand, have relation to the provisions following in the bill for allotments and allowance and compensation. I would like to ask the gentleman what reason governed the committee in providing that if a soldier's boy—possibly his only heir—should be under 18 years of age and should marry, or should be married, he should be denied the benefits of this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. The simplest reason in the world, I should think.

Mr. RUCKER. It is not clear to me. Doubtless the gentleman can make it so.

Mr. RAYBURN. In my State, and I presume in every State, when a girl marries she ceases to be a child.

Mr. RUCKER. I was speaking about a son.

Mr. RAYBURN. Or a son.

Mr. RUCKER. Ceases to be a child?

Mr. KITCHIN. Ceases to be dependent on the father, usually.

Mr. RAYBURN. He ceases to be a member of his father's household, and it is supposed he ought to be able to go out and make a living, if he is not mentally incompetent.

Mr. RUCKER. True, but still there are many people over 18 who sometimes fail to make a living.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. And the fact is that in most States we have marital laws which require licenses and forbid the issuance of licenses for those under certain ages, usually 21 for the man, unless he has the written consent of his parent or guardian. Suppose a father should give consent to the marriage of his boy, who was 17 or past 16, in good faith, and the marriage should occur; ought the child to be deprived of the benefits which this bill seeks to give to those dependent upon the father, because in his minority, with the consent of his father, the boy was married?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; and I think even when they are not married, when you get as high as 18 years you are going mighty high. I think when they graduate from the high school they ought to begin to take care of themselves.

Mr. RUCKER. That may be; but I take it that under the bill as it reads, and for which the gentleman stands sponsor, we are invited to vote this measure of protection to all those who are not yet past 18, unless they have married, and then they are barred.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say to the gentleman, while I appreciate his intelligence and the thought he has given to this bill, I doubt the wisdom of that provision, and therefore in good faith I make the motion to strike out the word "unmarried," because I can see no reason on earth for depriving a boy of the humane provisions of this bill because with the consent of his father he happens to have married before becoming 18 years of age.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 9, line 9, after the word "include" insert "Army field clerks."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have this amendment deferred until action is taken upon the other, and that the amendment be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asks unanimous consent that the amendment proposed by him may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I wish to direct attention to some rather unusual phraseology found in line 5, page 8. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to use the words "approval of this act" instead of "enactment of this amendment"? That is the usual phraseology in reference to such matters.

Mr. RAYBURN. This is an amendment to the other law.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the language "enactment of this amendment" is not the language usually used in referring to the date when a bill becomes effective.

Mr. RAYBURN. I know the words "approval of this act" are the usual words.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to such an amendment?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. In line 5, page 8, I move to strike out the words "enactment of this amendment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "approval of this act."

Mr. ESCH. I suggest that the same change be made in lines 8 and 9 on page 13.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have not read that part of the bill yet.

Mr. ESCH. No; but it is the same language.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are two or three places where similar changes will have to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 8, line 5, strike out the words "enactment of this amendment" and insert in lieu thereof "approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman take his time on the next section?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I simply do this for the purpose of making a statement. A little while ago I directed an inquiry to the chairman of the committee asking him about the rates of compensation that were fixed for the advisory boards, and at that time I stated that the act of 1914 fixed the maximum compensation for the advisory board at $25 a day. I had overlooked the fact that at this session of Congress that act had been amended and the amount had been made $20 a day. I did not want the apparent misstatement to go uncorrected into the RECORD.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RAYBURN. I move to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. KEATING. I desire to move to strike out the last two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to close debate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think there is an ambiguity in the reading of that paragraph, in lines 15 to 20, which could easily be obviated by using what was used in the bill presented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KIRCHIN] the other day; after the word "either," in line 18, page 8, insert "(a)," so that it will read:

Unmarried persons either (a) under 18 years of age or—

And then in parentheses a letter "b," so that it will read—or (b) of any age if incapable—

And so forth. That makes it perfectly clear.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not object to it, although I would not say that I deem it necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 18, after the word "either," insert "a" in parentheses, and after the word "or" insert the letter "b" in parentheses.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that at the end of five minutes all debate on this section and amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, on page 8, the bill states that the terms "child" and "grandchild" are limited to unmarried persons either under 18 years of age, or of any age if incapable because of mental or physical infirmity. Then, on page 29, line 8, it says "it shall be payable only to his spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister." Now, as a matter of fact, under the definition of child do not you make this situation possible—that a child can not inherit this insurance if it is more than 18 years of age?

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no; the gentleman does not read the whole. It says, except as used in the last sentence of subdivision E of section 301 and in section 402. That is the one he has read from. The word "child" in section 402, article 4, is not the same child.

Mr. KEATING. It does not apply to the insurance section, I understand.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. On page 8 the term "parents" includes the father and mother, grandfather, grandmother, stepfather, and stepmother. On page 14 we find that they are allotted, if there be one parent, $10. Is it the intention of the bill that the soldier shall make an allowance to his stepfather? I do not care to argue it. I am asking for information.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is possible that there may be three parents.

Mr. LITTLE. But suppose there is no one but a stepfather, would the boy be supposed to contribute for his support?

Mr. RAYBURN.* If he was a dependent, yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 23. That when, by the terms of this act, any payment is to be made to a person mentally incompetent or a minor, such payment shall be made to some suitable person, corporation, or association, as may be prescribed by regulations for the benefit of the person entitled thereto.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to get the opinion of the gentleman in charge of the bill why they desire to change the whole legal status of the disposition and handling of property of minors and incompetents.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. RAKER. I am calling the gentleman's attention to the fact that this legislation appears to override and change practically all legislation as to the disposition of property of minors and of incompetents. This provision allows the department to select any individual they want, responsible to no one, or to select a corporation to report to no one, or to select an association to report to no one, and changes the entire condition of the legal status of minors and incompetents.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will state that I have no objection to the gentleman inserting the words "legal representative."

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: After the word "made," line 3, page 10, strike out the rest of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the words "to his or her legal representatives."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 3, after the word "made," strike out the rest of the line and all of lines 4 and 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "to his or her legal representative."

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman is seeking to strike out more than he intends. I feel sure that the gentleman does not intend to strike out the last part of line 5, the words "for the benefit of the person entitled thereto."

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my amendment to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 3, after the word "made," strike out the following words: "to some suitable person, corporation, or association, as may be prescribed by regulation," and insert in lieu thereof "to his or her legal representative."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, just one word. In all of the States there is some one to represent the minor or the incompetent person. In some they call it a guardian, some guardian ad litem, but there is always some one legally under the law, so that they can account to the proper authority for the property and personnel of the child.

Mr. IGOE. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that in the State of Missouri if you want a guardian legally appointed it is necessary to go into the probate court and file proceedings. It is necessary to have a guardian appointed under bond. It is necessary to make report annually; it is necessary to account for all these funds for all time for all minor children under guardianship. I think for the little property involved here it would be unwise for this Congress to write in the words that the gentleman seeks to have written in by his amendment.

Mr. RAKER. In the gentleman's State, and every State in the Union, for the personal attention of the child it requires a guardian for his person if he has any property.

If there is property, a guardian for the person and property; and no State or county will permit a person to handle the property of a child at will without some one responsible to account for it.

Mr. IGOE. But the Government now, in the case of pensions, if they are satisfied that the child ought to have some one to look after it and take care of it, does so without requiring them to have a guardian appointed by the court. Now, the point I make is this: When you pay this money under the law of Missouri, for instance, there is a guardian of the property, and in order to have the funds applied to the children it is necessary to have somebody attend to that; it is necessary to have an attorney or somebody go into the court to make out the report, and I assure the gentleman that it is going to do a great injustice.

Mr. RAKER. If there is money coming to these children, is there any reason you should give it to some one without any responsibility?

Mr. IGOE. Well, I will say to the gentleman, the Secretary of the Treasury or whoever administers this law can, for instance, pick out some trust company or a relative or somebody whom they are satisfied will properly administer the money and there will not be any expense attached to it.

Mr. RAKER. There will not be any unnecessary expense. In nine cases out of ten the attorney charges nothing for an orphan or an incompetent of this kind, and you might just as well—

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman will find it will lead to trouble and expense.

Mr. RAKER. You might as well say in all cases where incompetents, or where there are minors, let their friends or somebody else pick out a suitable person to take care of the person or property. Now, it is recognized and known that while 99 per cent of the people are honest you will always find some fellow who will get away with the property of a minor or an incompetent person.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will vote down the amendment, because I think it is very harmful. I heartily agree with my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] in what he said. In substance, the amendment of the gentleman from California means that the legal fees are apt to eat up all the money intended for the child. When you say somebody responsible should look after this money and see that it goes to the child, I assert that Uncle Sam is responsible. I can see that the success of this whole bill, or any similar bill, must depend upon the intelligence and efficiency of the bureau that administers it. Now, I desire to point out an illustration in addition to those Mr. IGOE has mentioned. Most of the people whose children will get the benefit of this are poor people. They have not enough personal property usually to justify the appointment of a curator. In Missouri, as I remember, there is a guardian of the person and a curator of the property. Suppose the party lived in St. Louis and sought to move over into East St. Louis, Ill., and work; or suppose they move around; with many of those people it will require a new appearance in the probate court wherever they may go. The bill as drawn leaves it to the bureau to select "some suitable person, corporation, or association" to look after it for the benefit of the person entitled thereto. If a child happens to have other property that requires a curator, in all probability the bureau would say that this contribution goes to the curator to be turned over to the child; but if it has a mother and no curator, it will go probably to the mother, as pensions do now.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DECKER. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. Suppose some "suitable person" was designated and the law put a curator in charge; could not the curator take it away from this "suitable person"?

Mr. DECKER. I do not think anybody can take away anything we provide here. This compensation will be paid in the amount and the manner which we provide, and I have enough faith in the bureau to administer this law and see to it that it goes to the child in the least expensive way; if I did not think so, I would not vote for the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DECKER. I will.

Mr. RAKER. What assurance is there, or what arrangement is there, that the party selected is going to account for this money properly?

Mr. DECKER. The assurance of the greatest Government on earth, sir, which is as good as any government of any State, and I have the profoundest respect for State governments.

Mr. RAKER. Then it is the duty of the Government to keep in touch with the person appointed and see—

Mr. DECKER. Most certainly, as it does it to-day with pension contributions to the children of this country, the children of old soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it is half past 5 o'clock and I think we have worked long enough—

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like to get down to article 2. I do not think there is any contested section to be read—

Mr. MADDEN. I think we are going along without any obstruction in any way, and we are getting along very well with the work, and if we work too hard to-day we will be tired to-morrow and probably be ugly.

Mr. ADAMSON. If we read over the three remaining sections I will move to rise. There is no contest on those sections.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-one Members are present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5723, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MORGAN for three days, on account of the death of Mrs. Morgan's brother.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—COAST GUARD.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of a bill. I spoke of this yesterday afternoon, and at that time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], of the Committee on Military Affairs, asked to have it left over until to-day. I have seen the gentleman since then, and he raises no objection to it. The number of the bill is H. R. 5988, pertaining to the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] asks unanimous consent that the reference of the bill H. R. 5988 be changed from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that matter go over. I am not certain but that it should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. HICKS. I wish to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he will permit a moment—

Mr. STAFFORD. There are very few Members here.

Mr. ADAMSON. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the pending insurance bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the pending bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business for Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business for Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOOR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether the gentleman intends to ask to send the revenue bill to conference to-morrow morning?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is my intention, I will say, after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. In view of the fact that the gentleman from North Carolina expects to make that request to-morrow morning and the necessity for going on with this bill later, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union ascertained that there was not a quorum present, and the committee rose after that. Can this business be transacted in the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course. That was the committee, and this is the House. It would not make any difference if there were only three Members here.

Mr. MAPES. A notation in the Manual says that when the committee rises without a quorum it may not report the bill until it is acted on.

The SPEAKER. I know. It is not going to report any bill.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the Chairman have to report?

The SPEAKER. He reported that they had not come to any conclusion.

Mr. MAPES. Does he not have to report that the committee found itself without a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. That was a straight motion for the committee to rise. If there had been 435 Members here, the committee could rise, or if there were only 15, or even 2 for that matter.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Wednesday, September 12, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1918, for the care and custody of the insane of Alaska (H. Doc. No. 364), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 6019) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the acts of Congress approved, respectively, July 1, 1862; March 7, 1864; July 13, 1866; March 2, 1867; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6020) conferring police powers on all conductors and motormen on all electric and other street railways in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6021) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6022) to prohibit the payment of any compensation by way of salary, expense account, or otherwise to any person who has volunteered or may volunteer to donate his or her services in any civil capacity to the Government of the United States, and to punish violations thereof; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6023) to prevent heads of departments of the United States Government and all other Federal officials issuing any order or promulgating any rule which tends in any way to prohibit Government employees petitioning the Congress with relation to any matter relating to the public service, and prescribing penalties for its violation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 6024) to authorize the Secretary of War to employ such portion of the appropriations made for the transportation of the Army and its supplies as in his judgment may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 6025) to extend the franking privilege to literature published by boards of health of States and Territories in the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6026) to prevent the employment of aliens and naturalized citizens in certain cases and to prescribe punishment for its violation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6027) to provide for the purchase of a site upon which to erect a post-office building in the city of Starke, Fla.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6028) to extend to the veterans of the several Seminole Indian wars and to the widows of veterans of the several Seminole Indian wars the benefits of the act of Congress of February 6, 1907, and acts amendatory thereof; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6029) granting pensions to the soldiers of the different Seminole Indian wars and their widows; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6030) for the relief of the State of Florida; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6031) to prohibit the intermarriage of persons of the white and negro races within the District of Columbia; to declare such contracts of marriage null and void; to prescribe punishments for violations and attempts to violate its provisions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6032) to provide for the erection of a public building at Lake City, in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6033) to provide for universal transfers on all street railway companies, herd companies, and all other passenger transportation lines within the District of Columbia, and to prescribe penalties and punishments for violating its provisions; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 137) for appointment of special committee to investigate certain commissions, boards, etc.; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 150) relating to printing speeches in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; to the Committee on Rules.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 151) to appoint a commission to provide a tablet to mark the birthplace of Thomas Jefferson; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 6034) granting a pension to William H. Williams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 6035) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann Stapleton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 6036) granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. Winfield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 6037) granting an increase of pension to Oscar Bowen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 6038) for the purchase of a site for a public building at Columbia, Marion County, Miss.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 6039) granting an increase of pension to Anna Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6040) granting an increase of pension to Hubert W. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 6041) granting an increase of pension to James K. P. Simpson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6042) granting an increase of pension to David F. Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODS of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 6043) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of Victor Geiger and 39 others, of Galena, Ohio, in favor of national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Petition of numerous citizens of Pleasant Grove and surrounding sections of Saluda County, urging the President and Congress to end the war and the consideration of any honorable peace terms; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of A. J. White, New York, and Memley & James, New York, protesting against the tax of 2 per cent on gross sales of ready-made medicines and the heavily increased tax on alcohol; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of the National Brick Manufacturers' Association, Indianapolis, Ind., and the National Paving Brick Manufacturers' Association, Cleveland, Ohio, urging the early designation, construction, and maintenance of a system of national highways; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of P. A. Peterson, of Rockford, Ill., opposing the proposition to compute excess-profits tax on the basis of earnings for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Ind., favoring prosecution of those responsible for the greatly increased cost of print paper and protesting against imposing any further burdens of taxation on publishers; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, Division 589, urging a full investigation into the San Francisco bomb explosion of 1916; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolutions of Tyler Council, No. 45, Knights of Columbus, of Pawtucket, R. I., protesting against granting of loans to Carranzista government of Mexico until such time as that Government shall have put into effect in Mexico religious liberty and freedom of worship, the same as provided by the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Commodore Perry Council, No. 14, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Wakefield, R. I., favoring further restriction of immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of the Common Council of Danbury, Conn., urging an investigation of the production and distribution of anthracite coal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the International Typographical Union, J. W. Hays, secretary, Indianapolis, Ind., protesting against any further increase in the postage rates on second-class matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Division 57, Ancient Order of Hibernians, urging the independence of Ireland, etc.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, September 12, 1917.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, we recognize Thee in the brightness of the day, and recognize Thee, too, in all the manifold duties and responsibilities which Thou dost call for. We ask Thy blessing upon this representative body. May these, Thy servants, be guided to fulfill the high duties of their sacred trust in Thy fear, and may the Government under which we live be prospered in all its undertakings. Be with us at home and abroad. In the manifold duties we owe to the world at large guide, we beseech of Thee, and guard the person of our President and all who are called into the councils of our Nation at this time; and speed the hour when over the vast field of human conflict the battle flag shall be furled, and we shall find ourselves in happy relations to all the peoples of the earth. We humbly ask, for Christ our Lord's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BRADY and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINEY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FORDNEY, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5271) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

LETTER BY PROF. KELLY MILLER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have an open letter here by Prof. Kelly Miller, of Howard University, pronounced by the New York Evening Post to be the ablest colored man in the United States. This letter is a very temperate presentation of the colored man's view of the riots, and so on, that we have had involving their race. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE DISGRACE OF DEMOCRACY.

[By Kelly Miller.]

AUGUST 4, 1917.

HON. WOODROW WILSON,

President of the United States,

The White House, Washington, D. C.

MR. PRESIDENT: I am taking the liberty of intruding this letter upon you because I feel that the issues involved are as important as any questions now pressing upon your busy attention. The whole civilized world has been shocked at the recent occurrences in Memphis and East St. Louis. These outbreaks call attention anew to the irritating race problem of which they are but eruptive symptoms which break forth ever and anon with Vesuvian violence. For fully a generation American statesmanship has striven to avoid, ignore, or forget the perplexing race problem. But this persistent issue will not down at our bidding, and can not be shunted from public attention by other questions, however momentous or vital they may seem to be.

I know that I am taking unwarranted liberties with the ceremonial proprieties in writing such a letter to the President of the United States at the present time. It may seem to partake of the spirit of heckling after the manner of the suffragists. Nothing is further from my purpose. No right-minded American would wish to add one featherweight to the burden that now so heavily taxes the mind and body of the President of the United States who labors under as heavy a load as human nature is capable of sustaining. Every citizen should strive to lighten rather than to aggravate that burden. It is, nevertheless, true that any suppressed and aggrieved class must run athwart the established code of procedure in order that their case may receive a just hearing. Ceremonial codes were enacted by those who are the beneficiaries of existing order which they wish to perpetuate and make unchangeable. They would estop all social and moral reform. The ardent suffragists find it necessary to ruthlessly violate the traditional and decorous modes of procedure in order to promote the reform which they have at heart. On one occasion you felt forced to terminate an interview with a committee of suffragists because they persisted in cross-examining the President of the United States.

There are 10,000,000 loyal citizens of African descent in the United States. They are rigorously excluded from a voice in the Government by which they are controlled. They have no regularly constituted organ through which to present their case to the powers that be. They have no seat nor voice in the council of the Nation. The late Dr. Booker T. Washington was the accepted spokesman and mediator of the race, but he has no successor. Under former administrations there was a small appointive official class of negroes. Though derisively designated as the "Black Cabinet," they were on the inside of the circle of governmental control to which they had ready access in presenting the claims of the race. But under the exaction of partisan exigencies even these have been excluded from official position under your administration. Several weeks ago a delegation of colored men from the State of Maryland sought an interview with you concerning the horrible crime of East St. Louis. You were good enough to write Senator FRANCE that you were too busy with other pressing issues to grant the request of an interview. The failure of all other methods is my only excuse for resorting to an open letter as a means of reaching you and, through you, the Nation at large, concerning the just grievances of 10,000,000 loyal American citizens.

The negro feels that he is not regarded as a constituent part of American democracy. This is our fundamental grievance and lies at the basis of all of the outrages inflicted upon this helpless race. It is the fundamental creed of democracy that no people are good enough to govern any other people without their consent and participation. The English are not good enough to govern the Irish. The Russians are not good enough to govern the Finns. The Germans are not good enough to govern the Belgians. The Belgians are not good enough to govern the people of the Congo. Men are not considered good enough to govern women. The white people of this country are not good enough to govern the negro. As long as the black man is excluded from participation in the government of the Nation, just so long will he be the victim of cruelty and outrage on the part of his white fellow citizens who assume lordship over him.

These periodic outbreaks of lawlessness are but the outgrowth of the disfavor and despite in which the race is held by public opinion. The evil is so widespread that the remedy lies in the hands of the National Government.

Resolutions pending before both Houses of Congress look toward investigation of the outrage at East St. Louis. I understand that you are sympathetically disposed toward this investigation by Federal authority. Such investigation is important only to the extent that it implies a tardy recognition of national responsibility for local lawlessness. There is no expectation that any additional comprehensive information will result. You may rest assured that there will be a half dozen similar outbreaks before this investigation is well under way. Indeed, since the East St. Louis atrocity there have already been lynchings in Georgia, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, and Montana. Every intelligent American knows as much about the essential cause of this conflict as he will know after long and tedious investigation. The vital issues involved are apt to be obscured by technical wranglings over majority and minority reports. What the Nation needs is not investigation of obvious fact, but determination and avowed declaration on the part of the President speaking for the people of the United States to put an end to lawlessness wherever it raises its hideous head.

I know that it has been steadily maintained that the Federal Government has no authority over lynchings and local race conflicts. This is not a political contention. This view was maintained under the administrations of Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft. Indeed, President Cleveland, that great American Democrat, came nearer recognizing Federal responsibility in such matters than any President before or since his time. During the administration of President McKinley, an atrocious riot occurred in Wilmington, N. C., the city in which you spent your boyhood as the son of a minister of the Gospel. Scores of innocent negroes were killed and hundreds were driven from their homes. But it was maintained that the President had no authority to interfere. A horrible lynching took place at Alexandria, Va., a few miles from the White House, which the President might possibly have observed through his field glasses. And yet it was looked upon as a purely local affair for which the Federal Government had no responsibility nor concern. You recall the atrocities of the riot in Atlanta, a city in which you spent your young manhood as a practitioner of law. But here again even President Roosevelt could find no ground for interference.

These outbreaks are not limited to the Southern States, although they occur there more frequently than elsewhere because of the relatively larger number of negroes in the total population. There have been lynchings and burnings in Illinois, Kansas, Delaware, Ohio, Indiana, Colorado, and other Northern States. The evil is, indeed, national in its range and scope, and the Nation must provide the remedy. Striking, indeed, is the analogy between the spread of lawlessness to-day and the extension of the institution of slavery two generations ago. Like slavery, lawlessness can not be localized. As the Nation could not exist half slave and half free under Abraham Lincoln, so it can not continue half law-abiding and half lawless under Woodrow Wilson. The evil tendency overcomes the good, just as the darker overlaps the brighter phase in the waning moon. If the negro is allowed to be lynched in the South with impunity, he will soon be lynched in the North, so easy is the communicability of evil suggestion. The lynchings of negroes has become fashionable in some parts of the country. When a black man is accused of wrongdoing, "Lynch the negro!" is the cry that springs spontaneously to the lips of man, woman, and child. The fashion is rapidly spreading throughout the whole Nation. If slavery could have been isolated and segregated in the South, that institution might have existed even down to the present time. And so if lynching could be localized and limited to the Southern States the Nation as a whole would have less pretext for interfering. But this can not be done. Senator Tombs, of Georgia, boasted that he would call the roll of his slaves under the shadow of the Bunker Hill Monument, an ambition which doubtless might have been gratified had not the Nation arisen in its moral might and blotted out the iniquitous institution altogether. Unless the aroused conscience of the American people, efficiently asserting itself through Federal authority, shall stamp out the spirit of lawlessness, it is easy to prophesy that the negro will yet be lynched not only in the shadow of the Bunker Hill Monument but on the campus of your beloved Princeton. Already there have been burnings of human beings in the bleeding State of Old John Brown, and in the city where lie the remains of Abraham Lincoln. During the past 30 years nearly 3,000 negroes have been lynched in various parts of the country. Scores of these have been burned at the stake. Even the bodies of women have been fed to the flames. Thousands of localities in the majority of the States of the Union have experienced these outrages. Our fair land of liberty is blotted over with these foul spots which can not be washed out by all of the waters of the ocean. It is not easy to calculate the number of persons who have been involved in these lynchings, either as participants or as acquiescent lookers-on, all of whom were potential murderers. So general and widespread has become the practice that lynching may well be characterized as a national institution, to the eternal disgrace of American democracy.

Lynching can not be confined to the negro race. Hundreds of white men have been the victims of lawlessness and violence. While these words are flowing from my pen news comes over the wire that a labor agitator has been lynched in the State of Montana. Although the negro is at present the chief victim of lawlessness, like any other evil disease it can not be limited by racial lines.

It is but hollow mockery of the negro when he is beaten and bruised and burned in all parts of the Nation and flees to the National Government for asylum, to be denied relief on the ground of doubtful jurisdiction. The black man asks for justice and is given a theory of government. He asks for protection and is confronted with a scheme of governmental checks and balances.

Mr. President, you are Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. You express the voice of the American people in the great world conflict which involves practically the entire human race. You are the accepted spokesman of the world democracy. You have sounded forth the trumpet of democratization of the nations, which shall never call retreat. But, Mr. President, a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A doctrine that breaks down at home is not fit to be propagated abroad. One is reminded of the pious slaveholder who became so deeply impressed with the plea for foreign missions that he sold one of his slaves to contribute liberally to the cause. Why democratize the nations of the earth if it leads them to delight in the burning of human beings after the manner of Springfield, Waco, Memphis, and East St. Louis while the Nation looks helplessly on? You add nothing to the civilization of the world nor to the culture of the human spirit by the technical changes in forms of government. The old adage still remains true:

For forms of government let fools contest;
Whate'er is best administer'd is best.

If democracy can not control lawlessness, then democracy must be pronounced a failure. The nations of the world have a right to demand of us the workings of the institutions at home before they are promulgated abroad. The German press will doubtless gloat with ghoulish glee over American atrocities against the negro. The outrages complained of against the Belgians become merciful performances by gruesome comparison. Our frantic wall against the barbarity of Turk against Armenian, German upon Belgian, Russian upon Jew, are made of no effect. It can not be said that these outbreaks are but the spontaneous ebullitions of popular feeling, without governmental sanction or approval. These outrages occur all over the Nation. The Nation must be responsible for what it permits. Sins of permission are as reprehensible as sins of commission. A few years ago a Turkish ambassador was handed his passport by you for calling attention to the inconsistency between our national practice and performance. The Nation was compelled, with a spirit of humiliation, to accept the reproach which he hurled into our teeth: "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." Every high-minded American must be touched with a tinge of shame when he contemplates that his rallying cry for the liberation of humanity is made a delusion and a snare by these racial barbarities.

It is needless to attempt to place the blame on the helpless negro. In the early stages of these outbreaks there was an attempt to fix an evil and lecherous reputation on the negro race as lying at the basis of lynching and lawlessness. Statistics most clearly refute this contention. The great majority of the outbreaks can not even allege rapeful assault in extenuation. It is undoubtedly true that there are imbruted and lawless members of the negro race, as there are of the white race, capable of committing any outrageous and hideous offense. The negro possesses the imperfections of his status. His virtues as well as his failures are simply human. It is a fatuous philosophy, however, that would resort to cruel and unusual punishment as a deterrent to crime. Lynching has never made one negro virtuous nor planted the seed of right doing in the mind of a single American citizen. The negro should be encouraged in all right directions to develop his best manly and human qualities. Where he deviates from the accepted standard he should be punished by due process of law. But as long as the negro is held in general despite and suppressed below the level of human privilege, just so long will he produce a disproportionate number of imperfect individuals of evil propensity. To relegate the negro to a status that encourages the baser instincts of humanity and then denounce him because he does not stand forth as a model of human perfection is of the same order of ironical cruelty as shown by the barbarous Teutons in Shakespeare, who cut off the hands and hacked out the tongue of the lovely Lavinia and then upbraided her for not calling for perfumed water to wash her delicate hands. The negro is neither angelic nor diabolical, but merely human, and should be treated as such.

The vainglorious boast of Anglo-Saxon superiority will no longer avail to justify these outrages. The contact, adjustment, and attrition of various races of mankind constitute a problem which is coterminous with the ends of the earth. The lighter and stronger races are coming into contact with the weaker and darker ones. The stronger breeds of men are relating themselves to the weaker members of the human family in all the ends of the earth. How does it happen that in the United States alone, of all civilized lands, these atrocious outrages are heaped upon the helpless negro? The English nation has the largest colonial experience and success since the days of the Roman Empire, and has come into relationship with the various weaker breeds of men in all parts of the world. But everywhere under English jurisdiction law and order prevail. In the West Indies, where negroes outnumber the whites 20 to 1, rape and lynching have scarcely yet found a place in the local vocabulary. In Brazil, under a Latin dispensation, where a more complex racial situation exists than in the United States, racial peace and good will prevail. Belgium furnishes the only parallel of civilized nations in the atrocious treatment of a helpless people placed in their charge. But even the Belgians were forced to modify the rigors of their outrageous régime in the Congo under the bombardment of moral sentiment of the more enlightened nations of the world. America enjoys the evil distinction among all civilized nations of the earth of taking delight in murder and burning of human beings. Nowhere else do men, women, and children dance with ghoulish glee and fight for ghastly souvenirs of human flesh and mock the dying groans of the helpless victim which sicken the air while the flickering flames of the funeral pyre lighten the midnight sky with their dismal glare.

Mr. President, the American conscience has been touched and quickened by the East St. Louis outbreak as it has never been before. Press and pulpit have tried to forget these outrages. At each fresh outbreak they would lash themselves into a spasm of virtue and exhaust the entire vocabulary of denunciation, but forthwith would lapse into sudden silence and acquiescent guilt. By some fatuous delusion they seem to hope that the atrocities of Springfield, Wilmington, Waco, Atlanta, Memphis, and a thousand other places of evil report would never be repeated nor the memory rise up to condemn the Nation. But silence and neglect merely result in compounding atrocities. The East St. Louis outbreak convinces the Nation, as it has never been before, that the time for action has come. The press is not content with a single editorial ebullition, but by repeated utterances insists that the Nation shall deal with its most malignant domestic evil. Reproach is cast upon your contention for the democratization of the world in face of its lamentable failure at home. Ex-President Roosevelt, who is the greatest living voice now crying aloud for individual and national righteousness, has openly proclaimed, in dramatic declaration, that these outbreaks make our moral propaganda for the liberation of mankind but a delusion and a snare. Mr. President, can this Nation hope to live and grow in favor with God and man on the basis of a lie? A nation with a stultified conscience is a nation with stunted power.

Democracies have frequently shut their eyes to moral inconsistencies. The democracy of Greece conferred privilege upon a mere handful of freemen in the midst of ten times their own number of slaves. The Greek philosophers and statesmen were supremely unconscious of this moral obliquity. The Declaration of Independence, which declared for the equality of all men, was written by a slaveholder. The statesmen of the period, however, hoped that slavery would be of short-lived duration and would effect its own solution in the process of time. But Thomas Jefferson was keenly sensitive of the moral inconsistency of this attitude and declared that he trembled when he considered that God is just and that His justice would not slumber forever. Abraham Lincoln is perhaps the only great statesman of democracy who was absolutely consistent in his logical attitude and moral sincerity. The Nation believed in his moral integrity. He uttered no word of cryptic meaning. The people heard him gladly, because the words that fell from his lips were not the coinage of his intellect but the mintage of his heart. The embattled hosts under his high command marched to victory with the Battle Hymn of the Republic resounding in their souls:

As He died to make men holy,
Let us die to make men free.

To them this phrase had no remote and deferred meaning, but was immediately applicable to their black brother in chains. It was not a barren ideality, but a living impulse. You have given the rallying cry for the present world crisis. But this shibboleth will be robbed of instant meaning and power unless it applies to the helpless within our own gates. If the sons and grandsons of the heroes who battered down the walls of slavery a half century ago could be made to feel with unreserved certainty a renewal of the moral energy which urged their fathers to that high resolve, they would with heightened enthusiasm for humanity demolish the Teutonic bulwarks of oppression across the seas.

Doctrine is more than deeds if it be sound doctrine. Deeds are the outgrowth of doctrine. Doctrine lives forever with persistent potentiality. Doctrine rules the world or throws it into confusion. The power of words is far greater than the meaning of the author. It makes no difference what lay in the minds or practice of the statesmen of Greece. They planted the seeds of democracy, and all mankind will become the beneficiary of the sowing. The intendment of the signers of the Declaration of Independence boots but little. That document will stand for all time as the gospel of human liberty. When you speak of the democratization of the world and the liberation of mankind you are setting up a standard to which the whole world must rise in the ages to come, despite its attitude at the present time. It may be far from the purpose of our present-day statesmen to admit the negro into this democracy on terms of equality with the rest. But, in spite of the purpose of this statesmanship, this must be the ultimate goal of human democracy. A democracy of race or class is no democracy at all. It is with projected imagination that the negro will endure until these high-sounding phrases have borne their full fruition. Any other class of the American people, under the strain of distress to which the negro has been subjected, would imitate Job's distracted wife and curse the white God and die. The negro will neither curse nor die, but grin and live—albeit beneath that grin is a groaning of spirit too deep for utterance. The negro says to his country, "Though you slay me, yet will I serve you."

The negro's patriotism is vicarious and altruistic. It seems to be an anomaly of fate that the negro, the man of all men who is held in despite, should stand out in conspicuous relief at every crisis of our national history. His blood offering is not for himself or for his race, but for his country. This blood flows like a stream through our national history, from Boston Commons to Carrizal. Crispus Attucks was the first American to give his blood as an earnest of American independence. The negro was with Washington in the dark days of Valley Forge, when the lamp of national liberty flickered almost to extinguishment. The black troops fought valiantly with Jackson behind the fleecy breastworks at New Orleans. Two hundred thousand black boys in blue responded to the call of the immortal Lincoln for the preservation of the Union. The negro was the positive cause of the Civil War and the negative cause of the united Nation with which we face the world to-day.

The reckless daring of negro troops on San Juan Hill marked the turning point in that struggle which drove the last vestige of Spanish power from the western world. It was but yesterday that we buried with honor at Arlington Cemetery the negro soldiers who fell face forward while carrying the flag to the farthest point in the heart of Mexico in quest of the bandit who dared place impious foot on American soil. In complete harmony with this marvelous patriotic record, it so happened that it was an American negro who proved to be the first victim of ruthless submarine warfare after you had distinctly announced to Germany that such outrage would be considered tantamount to war. In all of these ways has the negro shown, purposely or unconsciously, his undeviating devotion to the glory and honor of the Nation. Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his country.

In the midst of the world war for the democratization of mankind the negro will do his full share. I have personally always striven to urge the negro to be patriotic and loyal in every emergency. At the reserve officers' training camp in Fort Des Moines there are over 100 young colored men who have come under my instruction. The devilry of his fellow men can not devise iniquities horrible enough to drive him from his patriotic devotion. The negro, Mr. President, in this emergency will stand by you and the Nation. Will you and the Nation stand by the negro?

I believe, Mr. President, that to the victor belongs the spoils, especially if these spoils be human liberty. After this war for the liberation of mankind has been won through the negro's patriotic participation, he will repeat the lines of the old familiar hymn somewhat louder than ever:

Behold a stranger at the door,
He gently knocks, has knocked before,
Has waited long, is waiting still,
You treat no other friend so ill.

As a student of public questions I have carefully watched your attitude on the race problem. You have preserved a lukewarm aloofness from the tangled issues of this problem. In searching your writings one finds little or no reference to this troubled phase of American life. It seems that you regard it as a regrettable social malady to be treated with cautious and calculated neglect. There is observable, however, a passive solicitude. You have kept the race problem in the back part of your mind. Your letter to Bishop Walters during your first campaign for the Presidency, expressing a generous concern for the welfare of the race, though of a general and passive character, caused many negroes to give you their political support. Under the stress and strain of other pressing issues and the partisan demands of your political supporters you have not yet translated this passive purpose into positive performance. There is, however, something of consolation in the fact that while during your entire career you have never done anything constructive for the negro, you have never done anything destructive against him. Your constructive opportunity is now at hand. The time has come to make lawlessness a national issue as a war measure, if not from any higher consideration. As a patriotic and military necessity, I suggest that you ask the Congress of the United States to invest you with the power to prevent lynching and to quell lawlessness and violence in all parts of the country during the continuance of the war. Or at least you might quicken the conscience of the Nation by a stirring message to Congress calling attention to this growing evil which is gnawing at the vitals of the Nation. It is entirely probable that before the war is over you will have to resort to some such measure to control internal disturbances on other accounts. It is inconceivable that this Nation should spend billions of dollars and sacrifice the lives of millions of its citizens without domestic uprising and revulsion. In such a time it becomes necessary for the President to exercise all but dictatorial power. The country is willing to grant you anything you ask which, in your judgment, would promote the welfare of the Nation in this crisis. You asked Congress to grant indiscriminate use of the Panama Canal as a means of securing international good will and friendship, and it was granted. In face of the impending conflict, you demanded that Congress should grant the eight-hour demand of the laboring men, and it was done. The suffragists who guard your going in and coming out of the White House were duly convicted under process of law, but were immediately pardoned by you to avoid embarrassment in this war emergency. You asked for billions of dollars and millions of lives to be placed at your disposal for the purpose of carrying on the great conflict, and it was willingly granted. The people have willingly placed in your hands more power than has ever been exercised by any member of the human race, and are willing to trust you in the use of that power. I am sure that they will grant this additional authority during the continuance of the present war in order to secure the unqualified patriotic devotion of all of the citizens and to safeguard the honor of democracy and the good name of the Republic.

Mr. President, negroes all over this Nation are aroused as they have never been before. It is not the wild hysterics of the hour, but a determined purpose that this country shall be made a safe place for American citizens to live and work and enjoy the pursuits of happiness. Ten thousand speechless men and women marched in silent array down Fifth Avenue in New York City as a spectral demonstration against the wrongs and cruelties heaped upon the race. Negro women all over the Nation have appointed a day of prayer in order that righteousness might be done to this people. The weaker sex of the weaker race are praying that God may use you as the instrument of His will to promote the cause of human freedom at home. I attended one of these 6 o'clock prayer meetings in the city of Washington. Two thousand humble women snatched the early hours of the morning before going to their daily tasks to resort to the house of prayer. They literally performed unto the Lord the burden of their prayer and song, "Steal Away to Jesus." There was not a note of bitterness nor denunciation throughout the season of prayer. They prayed as their mothers prayed in the darker days gone by, that God would deliver the race. Mr. President, you can help God answer their prayer. May it not be that these despised and rejected daughters of a despised and rejected race shall yet lead the world to its knees in acknowledgment of some controlling power outside of the machinations of man? As I sat there and listened in reverent silence to these 2,000 voices as they sang—

On Christ, the Solid Rock, I stand
All other ground is sinking sand—

I could not but think of the godless war which is now convulsing the world—a war in which Christian hands are dyed in Christian blood. It must cause the Prince of Peace to groan as in His dying agony when He gave up the ghost on the cross. The professed followers of the Meek and Lowly One, with heathen heart, are putting their trust in reeking tube and iron shard. God uses the humbler things of life to confound the mighty. It may be that these helpless victims of cruelty and outrage will bring an apostate world back to God.

Mr. President, 10,000,000 of your fellow citizens are looking to you and to the God whom you serve to grant them relief in this hour of their deepest distress. All moral reforms grow out of the people who suffer and stand in need of them. The negro's helpless position may yet bring America to a realizing sense that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Yours, truly,

KELLY MILLER.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have received a copy of resolutions passed by a branch of the National Woman's Party of Tennessee, which they desire to be presented to the Senate. While I am not in sympathy with the movement or the resolutions, I present them and ask that they may be printed in the Record without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Whereas the women of Russia and of England have been enfranchised as a war measure; and

Whereas the women of the United States are just as desirous of freedom as are the women of the allied nations; and

Whereas we feel that more fervid response would be made by women who are already giving loved ones and personal service for their country if the United States were made an ideal democracy: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we women, meeting this 24th day of August, 1917, at the Hotel Atkin, Knoxville, Tenn., under the auspices of the National Woman's Party, insist upon the recognition of American women as a war measure and that we urge the President of the United States to make this possible by speaking to the party leaders; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President, to the party leaders in both Houses of Congress, to Senator JOHN K. SHIELDS and to Hon. RICHARD AUSTIN, with the request to the former that it be read into the record of the Senate and to the latter that it be read into the record of the House.

L. CROZIER FRENCH,

State Chairman Tennessee Branch National Woman's Party.

RED RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 2816) granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River, and I submit a report (No. 128) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, after the word "Oklahoma" and the comma at the end of line 7, to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co., or its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River at Sacras Ferry, Cooke County, Tex., and Love County, Okla., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOBILE BAY BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 2813) to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala., and I submit a report (No. 127) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "Alabama" and the comma, to insert "at a point or points suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, operate, and maintain a bridge or bridges and trestles over and across the navigable channels of the mouth of Mobile River from Bay Port, in township 4 south, range 2 east, on the east shore of the waters of Mobile Bay, in Baldwin County, Ala., on a direct line, to a point on Blakely Island, in Mobile County, on the east shore of Mobile River, opposite the municipal docks of the city of Mobile, Ala., at a point or points suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, and repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE KANAWHA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2774) granting the consent of Congress to the Gilmer-Pittsburgh Coal Co. to construct a bridge across the Little Kanawha River, and I submit a report (No. 126) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF LAND AND NAVAL FORCES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back adversely the bill (S. 2717) prescribing rules for the Government and regulation of the land and naval forces during the period of the existing war with Germany, and I submit a report (No. 125) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have the bill placed on the calendar?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I dislike to ask for its indefinite postponement in the absence of the Senator who introduced it. I therefore ask that it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar with the adverse report to the committee.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HUSTING:

A bill (S. 2868) providing for the appointment of officers in the military forces of the United States; and

A bill (S. 2869) to grant citizenship to certain persons discharged from the military service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 2870) to prohibit the selling, manufacturing, and importing of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii unless the qualified electors thereof repeal the provisions hereof; to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2871) to provide for a division of municipal research and reference in the Bureau of Census, Department of Commerce; to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2872) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Oney; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 2873) to establish a fish hatchery on Spiritwood Lake in North Dakota; to the Committee on Fisheries.

A bill (S. 2874) granting a pension to William H. Turner, (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. SHERMAN) (by request):

A bill (S. 2875) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Cal.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 2876) granting an increase of pension to Melvin C. Wolf (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 2877) authorizing the appointment of Augustus C. Hart as a first lieutenant of Cavalry in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; ordered to lie on the table.

RECEPTIONS TO FOREIGN MISSIONS (S. DOC. NO. 87).

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 130) which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives on the occasions of the receptions given to the war missions of France, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Belgium, and Japan, 1917, be printed as a Senate document.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have an article from The Annalist, a reputable paper published in the city of New York, on the subject of the War Department, entitled "Tremendous energy running to waste," which is a very valuable contribution to the literature upon the subject. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Annalist, Aug. 6, 1917.]

TREMENDOUS ENERGY RUNNING TO WASTE—FIFTY MILLIONS OF HORSE-POWER LOST DAILY THROUGH FAILURE TO UTILIZE AVAILABLE WATER POWER—NEW MOVE IN CONGRESS TO UNLOCK THESE RESOURCES.

Once again a movement is gathering force to utilize the more than fifty millions of horsepower that is running to waste in American streams. Four-fifths of the possible electric energy that could be developed from water power in this country must be developed on lands belonging to the Federal Government, which are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, or on navigable streams, which are controlled by the Secretary of War. The agitation in favor of conservation of natural resources resulted in restrictions so severe that resources were not only conserved but reserved. Present laws permitting the utilization of these sites for hydroelectric plants provide that any permit is revocable at the pleasure of the Federal department concerned, and the possibility of this summary action has tended to scare capital away.

Last year a determined movement was made to pass laws which should offer opportunities for capital to develop this water power under Federal control. The Shields bill, which passed the Senate, and the Myers bill, which passed the House, established practically identical regulations respectively for navigable streams and for public lands; but neither was enacted into law. Last month Senator THOMAS F. WALSH, of Montana, introduced a bill into the Senate which embodies most of last year's Myers bill, and legislation to cover navigable streams is to be introduced into the House.

The provisions of the legislation sought from the present Congress are, briefly, as follows:

"Permits for the erection of hydroelectric plants may be issued to individuals, corporations, States, or municipalities for 50 years.

"These contracts are irrevocable, but may be canceled by legal proceedings if the permittee fails to comply with the provisions of the act or the conditions of the permit.

"At expiration of the term the United States may take over the entire plant or any severable and complete unit at a value determined, which shall not include the value of public lands, rights of way, franchises, good will, or prospective revenues; or it may renew the permit to the original holder; or in the event that such an arrangement can not be made may issue the permit to some one else, who shall buy the plant under the same conditions.

"Rental shall be paid which may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be based on the net horsepower, and of this rental one-half shall be paid to the State in which the energy is developed.

"Permits must provide for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development of the water power, subject to market conditions.

"Rates are determined by the public-service commission of the State in which the power is generated and used, and when more than one State is involved, by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"In case facilities are not adequately utilized by the permittee other persons may be allowed to develop them, with due regard to his interests.

"State laws regarding distribution of water are to be observed in all permits, and there is provision for the determining by Federal courts of what particular rights, if any, the States of Colorado and New Mexico have in the Rio Grande."

The Shields and Myers bills, which sought to bring about this result last year, were vigorously opposed by Gifford Pinchot and his school of conservationists. Perhaps the one of their many arguments which attracted most attention was that the grant would in practice be perpetual. Advocates of the bill, however, maintained that there was nothing in it which forbade the Government to condemn a plant and take it over, paying just compensation, in case there were valid reasons for doing so, and contended that the fear that it would never be possible to get the case out of the courts involved fundamental distrust of the Federal judicial system.

The bills were not brought to fruition last year for many reasons, chief of which apparently was the pressure of other legislation necessitated by the preparedness program and the military operations on the Mexican border. And the detail in which the development of water power most acutely touched the question of preparedness was settled by the passage of the law appropriating $20,000,000 for a Federal nitrate plant.

The development of the industry of extracting nitrogen from the air by powerful electric motors has gone furthest in Germany, where the serious results of dependence on foreign nitrates for essential components of high explosives was realized long before the war. The world's greatest and, in fact, almost sole supplies of natural nitrates have come from the great deposits in the Chilean Provinces conquered from Bolivia and Peru in the war of 1879. To the Germans, faced with the possibility of war with a superior naval power, it became evident that this supply probably would be cut off at once, and that it would be necessary to provide a substitute for the nitrogen which was essential in the manufacture of munitions.

Scandinavian processes providing for the fixing of the loose nitrogen in the air had been developed, but had not been found of great commercial value in competition with the Chilean product. The Germans set up huge electric generators run by water power, and used these processes to lay in a supply of nitrates which averaged a commercial value of 60 per cent, as against 12 per cent of valuable matter in the Chilean mineral.

Meanwhile the shortage of shipping, the possibility of the exhaustion of the Chilean fields, and the necessity in any case of a long voyage up the western coast of the American Continent made American officials realize the necessity of providing in this country some substitute for the Chilean mineral, and the discussion of this brought out the great value of water power in establishing suitable plants for the fixing of nitrogen. But this is only one of the many ways in which the enormous waste of water power is reducing the efficiency of the United States.

Nitrates are essential in fertilizer no less than in ammunition making. The low acreage of American crops in most districts is attributed very largely by agricultural experts to the lack of fertilizer, or rather to the American habit of using insufficient fertilizer. In 1911 this country, according to a bulletin issued recently by the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, used 28 pounds of fertilizer per acre of improved land; Great Britain used 152, Germany 214, and Belgium 448.

The report of the German department of agriculture for 1913, according to the same authority, showed that 2,000,000 tons of fertilizer had resulted in increasing crops by 63,000,000 tons. "The German farmer," says the pamphlet, "practically used his land as an agent for transforming fertilizer into product, while the American farmer tries to get products out of his starving land without feeding it sufficient plant food."

Phosphates are numerous enough in America, and with the cutting off of the German supplies of potash chemical invention has made large potash deposits in America and Canada workable for the first time. But nitrogen must come either from Chile or the air, and with extensive water-power electric plants many people believe it can be obtained more cheaply, as well as more certainly, from the air.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul is driving its transcontinental trains across the Rockies under electric power obtained from hydroelectric plants. For 450 miles, from Harlowton, Mont., to Avery, Idaho, the main line has been electrified, and the process is being extended to Seattle, 500 miles farther west. John D. Ryan, president of the Montana Power Co., has said that the price of electric power is less than one-third of the cost of the coal for operation over the same line, and that, in addition, one-third of the road's freight cars, used in hauling coal from its own mines for its own uses, had been freed. The Butte, Anaconda & Pacific has also electrified 80 miles of its line, again at a saving of two-thirds of the cost of coal.

The States where most of the water power of the country can be developed are also the ones where there is most lumber available for the manufacture of wood pulp. If the water power is unlocked, electric plants for the manufacture of paper can be built close to the lumber supply and paper provided far more cheaply than is now possible. At present great quantities of pulp are being imported from Canada, and were imported from Norway and Sweden until recently, these being countries which allow more development, both of forests and of water power, than the United States. Indeed, one of the most ominous results of the present policy of forbidding the development of water power in this country has been the building of plants in Norway and Canada by American power companies which were unable to extend their facilities at home.

A valuable by-product of the development of water power on streams now classed in the somewhat optimistic terminology of the Government as "navigable," but which require constant appropriations for a long time before much effect is visible, is expected to be the rendering of stretches of them actually navigable by the construction of dams for the gathering of water. It has been estimated that long stretches of inland waterways which would otherwise need much expenditure of Government money before they would float vessels of any importance can be opened up by this incidental effect of private enterprise.

And this touches upon perhaps the most important phase of water-power development—the conservation of fuel.

Since the Shields and Myers bills were discussed in Congress the United States has entered upon a great war, a war which will probably be won or lost by the success of America and her allies in solving the problem of transportation. Ships are the first essential, but adequate handling of commerce in the United States is of very great importance. Many of the supplies which we are shipping to Europe have to be carried a great distance across the country. This causes a high strain on the railroads, an almost constant shortage of freight cars, and resultant difficulty in handling shipments of goods, which disarranges internal trade and leads to prolonged delays and difficulties.

The development of internal waterways suggested above would take at least some of the burden of freight transportation off the railroads. The utilization of water power in the production of energy would save enormous quantities of coal which could be used to meet the needs of France and Italy and to supply the new ships which all the allied countries are building. And the electrification of railroads would not only save coal but would release the large numbers of coal cars now required to carry fuel not only for the roads themselves but for industries which could be operated by water power as well. In a struggle which necessitates intensive development of the nation which is to win this country can not afford to let an enormous source of energy go to waste.

This summary is not complete without including the possibilities of producing current for municipal uses at a lower rate than is possible with steam-operated plants in regions near enough to the source of power to make its transmission profitable. This is a facet of the case of less national importance than the vital demands of national efficiency in the production of food and munitions and the conservation of fuel, but it is of great importance in many localities, particularly on the Pacific coast.

California, Washington, and Oregon have between them some 44 per cent of the potential water horsepower of the country and only about 4½ per cent of their total has been developed. Yet already many of the municipalities get their light and power from these plants, which have the advantage of sharp slopes and consequent development under high heads, with the result that the initial cost of installation of plant will be less here than in many other parts of the country.

Much stir has been made over the alleged centralization of the control of present developed water power. But those who favor development point out that the company controlling the largest supply at present has only about 6 per cent of the total developed, and that the huge possibilities of development on Government land make any monopoly very unlikely. Certainly unification of plants makes for economy to a large degree, and the advocates of the Walsh bill and other measures for opening up the water power of the Nation declare that the provisions of the act and of the regulations which can be made by the Department of the Interior to carry it into effect will adequately safeguard the public interest.

Meanwhile an estimate made by the Water Power Development Association reaches the conclusion that while 25.2 per cent of the maximum potential water horsepower on land not requiring Federal permits has been developed, only 3.9 per cent has been developed on land where they are required, a sufficient indication of the reluctance of capital to invest under the present conditions of uncertainty.

In the tables appended the totals of developed horsepower follow the estimates of O. C. Merrill, Chief Engineer of the Forest Service. The estimates of total maximum horsepower were compiled by the Water Power Development Association; they are slightly larger than Mr. Merrill's estimates and slightly less than that of the Geological Survey made in 1908.

This maximum is based further on the assumption that it represents the amount to which the sites would be developed in practice, and that such development would reach a capacity equivalent to the lowest flow during the six high-water months of the year. Development in practice has always equaled and frequently exceeded the theoretical maximum.

DEVELOPED AND UNDEVELOPED AND WASTING WATER POWER OF THE NATION.

In the following tables all the New England States, except Maine, are grouped together, as most of their important streams drain one or more States, and the five are so grouped in official data.

The methods employed by the Geological Survey give no horsepower capable of development in Delaware and Louisiana, but in actual practice some development has taken place:

Potential water horsepower of the United States.

Place.	Maximum potential water horsepower.	Federal permits required.	Per cent.	Federal permits not required.	Per cent.
United States.....	60,713,200	46,913,200	77.2	13,800,000	22.8
Maine.....	916,000	76,000	8.3	840,000	91.7
New Hampshire.....
Vermont.....
Massachusetts.....	901,000	60,000	6.7	841,000	93.3
Rhode Island.....
Connecticut.....
New York.....	4,242,000	3,035,000	71.6	1,207,000	28.4
Pennsylvania.....	849,700	283,300	33.4	566,400	66.6
New Jersey.....	117,600			117,600	100.0
Maryland.....	210,500	14,000	6.5	196,500	93.5
Virginia.....	976,000	150,000	15.4	826,000	84.6
West Virginia.....	892,000	409,000	45.8	483,000	54.2
North Carolina.....	1,090,000	275,400	25.2	814,600	74.8
South Carolina.....	766,000	40,700	5.3	725,300	94.7
Georgia.....	699,900	243,000	34.8	456,900	65.2
Florida.....	23,100	8,000	34.6	15,100	65.4
Alabama.....	1,070,000	643,100	60.1	426,900	39.9
Mississippi.....	71,000			71,000	100.0
Tennessee.....	832,000	483,900	58.3	348,100	41.7
Kentucky.....	210,400	89,500	42.6	120,900	57.4
Ohio.....	201,000	35,700	17.7	165,300	82.3
Indiana.....	133,000			133,000	100.0
Illinois.....	441,000	143,400	32.5	297,600	67.5
Michigan.....	332,000			332,000	100.0
Wisconsin.....	758,000	155,000	20.5	603,000	79.5
Minnesota.....	560,000	264,000	47.2	296,000	52.8
Iowa.....	433,000	229,000	52.9	204,000	47.1
Missouri.....	184,000	60,300	32.8	123,700	67.2
Arkansas.....	69,000	30,000	43.5	39,000	56.5
Texas.....	625,000	120,000	19.2	505,000	80.8
Oklahoma.....	235,500	19,500	8.3	216,000	91.7
Kansas.....	317,500	53,400	16.8	264,100	83.2
Nebraska.....	414,000			414,000	100.0
North Dakota.....	234,000			234,000	100.0
South Dakota.....	95,000	10,000	10.5	85,000	89.5
Montana.....	4,890,000	4,610,000	94.3	280,000	5.7
Wyoming.....	1,470,000	1,410,000	96.0	60,000	4.0
Colorado.....	1,925,000	1,785,000	92.8	140,000	7.2
New Mexico.....	497,000	452,000	91.0	45,000	9.0
Arizona.....	1,930,000	1,885,000	97.7	45,000	2.3
Utah.....	1,490,000	1,413,000	94.8	77,000	5.2
Idaho.....	2,910,000	2,780,000	95.5	130,000	4.5
Nevada.....	312,000	292,000	93.6	20,000	6.4
California.....	8,865,000	8,355,000	94.3	510,000	5.7
Oregon.....	7,505,000	7,320,000	97.5	185,000	2.5
Washington.....	9,900,000	9,700,000	97.1	200,000	2.9

Developed water horsepower in the United States and the several States.

Place.	Maximum potential water horsepower.	Water horsepower developed.	Per cent of development.
United States.....	60,713,200	5,321,699	8.8
Maine.....	916,000	277,589	30.0
New Hampshire.....
Vermont.....
Massachusetts.....	901,000	424,384	47.1
Rhode Island.....
Connecticut.....
New York.....	4,242,000	799,530	18.8
Pennsylvania.....	849,700	168,583	19.9
New Jersey.....	117,600	9,947	8.5
Maryland.....	210,500	3,289	1.6
Virginia.....	976,000	94,229	9.7
West Virginia.....	892,000	23,787	2.7
North Carolina.....	1,090,000	99,105	9.1
South Carolina.....	766,000	227,012	29.6
Georgia.....	699,900	217,555	31.2
Florida.....	23,100	7,030	30.4
Alabama.....	1,070,000	82,466	7.7
Mississippi.....	71,000
Tennessee.....	832,000	97,835	11.3
Kentucky.....	210,400
Ohio.....	201,000	19,948	9.9
Indiana.....	133,000	8,091	6.1

Developed water horsepower in the United States, etc.—Continued.

Place.	Maximum potential water horsepower.	Water horsepower development.	Per cent of development.
Illinois.....	441,000	54,401	12.3
Michigan.....	332,000	213,111	64.2
Wisconsin.....	758,000	233,569	30.8
Minnesota.....	560,000	229,258	40.9
Iowa.....	433,000	159,431	36.8
Missouri.....	184,000	20,670	11.3
Arkansas.....	69,000	2,200	3.2
Texas.....	625,000	6,777	1.1
Oklahoma.....	235,500	1,758	.7
Kansas.....	317,500	11,688	3.7
Nebraska.....	414,000	10,799	2.6
North Dakota.....	234,000	80	.....
South Dakota.....	95,000	13,053	13.7
Montana.....	4,890,000	202,895	4.1
Delaware.....	.....	54	.....
Louisiana.....	.....	160	.....
Wyoming.....	1,470,000	2,544	.2
Colorado.....	1,925,000	92,303	4.8
New Mexico.....	497,000	552	.1
Arizona.....	1,330,000	33,630	1.7
Utah.....	1,490,000	96,734	6.5
Idaho.....	2,910,000	152,360	5.2
Nevada.....	312,000	13,320	4.3
California.....	8,865,000	722,125	8.2
Oregon.....	7,505,000	156,763	2.1
Washington.....	9,990,000	331,134	3.3

Development at public and private sites compared.

Place.	Maximum requiring Federal permits.	Per cent developed.	Maximum not requiring Federal permits.	Per cent developed.
United States.....	46,913,200	3.9	13,800,000	25.2
Maine.....	76,000	.....	840,000	33.0
New Hampshire.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Vermont.....	60,000	.3	841,000	50.4
Massachusetts.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Rhode Island.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Connecticut.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
New York.....	3,035,000	11.7	1,207,000	40.7
Pennsylvania.....	283,300	41.7	566,400	8.9
New Jersey.....	.....	.....	117,600	8.5
Maryland.....	14,000	.....	196,500	1.7
Virginia.....	150,000	19.3	826,000	7.9
West Virginia.....	409,000	2.8	483,000	2.5
North Carolina.....	275,400	3.3	814,600	11.1
South Carolina.....	40,700	29.5	725,300	29.6
Georgia.....	243,000	44.5	456,900	24.0
Florida.....	8,000	70.0	15,100	9.5
Alabama.....	643,100	10.9	426,900	2.9
Mississippi.....	.....	.....	71,000	.....
Tennessee.....	463,900	9.05	398,100	14.0
Ohio.....	35,700	3.5	165,300	11.3
Kentucky.....	89,500	.....	120,900	.....
Indiana.....	.....	.....	133,000	6.1
Illinois.....	143,400	28.2	297,600	4.7
Michigan.....	.....	.....	332,000	64.2
Wisconsin.....	155,000	41.2	603,000	28.1
Minnesota.....	204,000	41.8	296,000	40.0
Iowa.....	229,000	65.5	204,000	4.6
Missouri.....	60,300	33.2	123,700	.5
Arkansas.....	30,000	.....	39,000	5.6
Texas.....	120,000	.....	505,000	1.3
Oklahoma.....	19,500	.....	216,000	.8
Kansas.....	53,400	.....	264,100	4.4
Nebraska.....	.....	.....	414,000	2.6
North Dakota.....	.....	.....	234,000	.....
South Dakota.....	10,000	84.0	85,000	5.5
Montana.....	4,610,000	1.3	280,000	50.7
Wyoming.....	1,410,000	.1	60,000	2.6
Colorado.....	1,785,000	4.2	140,000	12.6
New Mexico.....	452,000	.....	45,000	1.2
Arizona.....	1,885,000	1.3	45,000	20.0
Utah.....	1,413,000	3.2	77,000	67.2
Idaho.....	2,780,000	2.4	130,000	65.5
Nevada.....	292,000	1.1	20,000	51.2
California.....	8,355,000	3.9	519,000	77.9
Oregon.....	7,320,000	.4	185,000	69.3
Washington.....	9,700,000	1.0	290,000	81.0

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 5271. An act authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Gerry	Jones, Wash.
Beckham	Culbertson	Husting	Kendrick
Brady	Curtis	Johnson, Cal.	Kirby
Brandegee	Fletcher	Johnson, S. Dak.	Knox

La Follette	Page	Sheppard	Trammell
Lodge	Poindexter	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
McCumber	Pomerene	Smith, Md.	Vardaman
McNary	Ransdell	Smoot	Warren
Martin	Robinson	Sterling	Williams
New	Saulsbury	Stone
Norris	Shafroth	Swanson

Mr. HUSTING. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] is necessarily absent.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness. I will state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. The Secretary will call the list of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. GORE, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to their names when called.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORE], is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. KING, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. SHIELDS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR TENNESSEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If there be no further morning business, morning business is closed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2705) to create the aircraft board and provide for its maintenance.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Texas to withhold that motion in order that I may have corrected a clerical error which occurred in a bill which passed the Senate on yesterday.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the request temporarily.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, on yesterday Senate bill 1836 was passed creating a district judge for the middle district of the State of Tennessee. A clerical error had crept into the bill whereby the words "southern district" were used instead of the words "middle district." I desire to move that the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, so that I may move an amendment to substitute the word "middle" for the word "southern."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the vote by which the bill (S. 1836) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is agreed to. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move that in section 3, page 2, line 7, to strike out the word "southern" and to substitute the word "middle" for it, so as to read "the middle district in said State."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIRCRAFT BOARD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2705) to create the aircraft board, and provide for its maintenance.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 7, before the word "board," to strike out "air" and to insert "aircraft," so as to make the clause read:

That for the purpose of expanding and coordinating the industrial activities relating to aircraft or parts of aircraft produced for any purpose in the United States and to facilitate generally the development of air service, a board is hereby created to be known as the Aircraft Board, hereinafter referred to as the board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 9, before the word "compensation," to strike out the words "serve without" and insert the words "receive a"; and in the same line, after the word "compensation," to insert "of $7,500 each per annum," so as to make the clause read:

The board shall elect one of its civilian members as president thereof, and said board and tenure of office of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war. The civilian members of the board shall receive a compensation of $7,500 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "empowered," to strike out "under the direction and control of, and as authorized by, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, on behalf of the Departments of War and Navy"; in line 16, after the words "by the," to strike out "respective departments" and to insert "Departments of War and Navy, respectively"; and in line 22, after the word "accessories," to strike out "Provided, That the board may make recommendations as to contracts and their distribution in connection with the foregoing, but every contract shall be made by the already constituted authorities of the respective departments," so as to make the clause read:

The board is hereby empowered to supervise and direct, in accordance with the requirements prescribed or approved by the Departments of War and Navy, respectively, the purchase, production, and manufacture of aircraft, engines, and all ordnance and instruments used in connection therewith, and accessories and materials thereof, including the purchase, lease, acquisition, or construction of plants for the manufacture of aircraft, engines, and accessories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 7, after the word "fix," to strike out the words "the compensation thereof; it" and to insert "their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board"; in line 13, after the word "necessary," to insert the word "office"; in line 16, after the word "enumerated," to strike out the word "above" and to insert "in this paragraph"; and in line 23, after the words "available for," to strike out "the above purpose" and to insert "these purposes," so as to read:

The board is also empowered to employ, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, such clerks and other employees as may be necessary to the conduct of its business, including such technical experts and advisers as may be found necessary, and to fix their salaries. Such salaries shall conform to those usually paid by the Government for similar service: Provided, That by unanimous approval of the board higher compensation may be paid to technical experts and advisers. The board may rent suitable offices in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, purchase necessary office equipment and supplies, including scientific publications and printing, and may incur necessary administrative and contingent expenses, and for all of the expenses enumerated in this paragraph there shall be allotted by the Chief Signal Officer of the Army for the fiscal year 1917 and 1918 the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, from any appropriation now existing for or hereinafter made to the Signal Corps of the Army, and such appropriation is hereby made available for these purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas the purpose of limiting the authority of the board to purchase supplies and equipment to the purchase of office supplies and equipment. Why the amendment by inserting the word "office"? It seems to me that there might be very important reasons for purchasing other equipment and other supplies. A board of this importance certainly can be trusted with some discretion in the matter.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This paragraph refers to the necessary office equipment of the board. In another section the board is empowered to take such steps and to assemble such airplane equipment as may be advisable to make its work effective, under the direction of the Departments of War and the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me, notwithstanding that, that there is an express limitation. Even though power is conferred in another section limiting the authority of acquiring equipment and supplies to the purchase of office equipment and supplies, a specific limitation would control.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have no objection to having the word "office" go out. The meaning would remain practically the same.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The amendment to which the Senator from Washington refers will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 13, before the word "equipment," the Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to insert the word "office," so as to read: "purchase necessary office equipment and supplies," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an absolute limitation on the authority of the board in acquiring supplies and equipment and undoubtedly would cripple the activities of the board.

Mr. BRADY. Well, Mr. President, that provision only applies to office equipment. This board consists of members selected from the Navy and the Army, with authority to recommend to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy just what purchases shall be made. I think the Senator from Washington will find upon investigation that it was after considerable discussion and thought that the word "office" was inserted. The committee desire to give this board the power and authority to buy office equipment and things of that character, without having to refer the matter to the Secretary of War and to the Secretary of the Navy. If the Senator will read the bill carefully, he will find that the Aircraft Board is to make recommendations to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, just as in the case of other boards connected with the Council of National Defense. I know it is the purpose of the Senator from Washington to make the bill as effective as possible, but I am quite sure that if he had opportunity and time thoroughly to study the matter he would agree with the committee that authority should be limited to the purchase of office equipment as provided in the measure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am willing to accept the supervisory control of the War Department and the Navy Department; but, while I do not care to make too much of an issue over it, it seems to me to be an unwise limitation and one that will hamper and cripple the activities of a really great board as it is proposed to be constituted by this bill.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I merely want to make an inquiry; and upon the answer to it, it seems to me, this whole question turns. If it is not intended to vest in this board the power to make purchases of equipment and other material for the construction of aeroplanes, then I think "office" is a very necessary word to insert in the clause of the bill which gives them authority to purchase equipment. If we do not limit it by the word "office," there will a confusion arise as to the power of this board, which, it seems to me, might be construed by implication to extend to the purchase of all kinds of material necessary for the construction of aeroplanes. If such authority is not intended to be vested in the board, then I think the word "office" ought to remain in the provision.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania analyzes the bill exactly as I understand it and as the committee understood it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Pennsylvania is correct.

Mr. BRADY. The Aircraft Board will make recommendations, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, in all matters relating to aircraft; but as to office supplies and things of that character it was not desired that the board should have to go to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy to secure permission to make such purchases. For that reason, after due consideration and discussion, the word "office" was placed in the provision before the word "equipment" by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. The Chair will, therefore, put the question. Those in favor of the motion of the Senator from Washington to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed "no." The noes have it, and the motion is rejected.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from Texas, having the bill in charge, whether the plan heretofore considerably discussed of establishing a department of aeronautics has been put aside in view of the probable passage of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is the best that can be done under the present circumstances in that direction.

Mr. KING. It is not contemplated, then, to revive that subject and pass a bill establishing a department of aeronautics?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at this time.

Mr. KING. So that this will be the complete legislation upon that subject during this session so far as the Senator is now advised?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance."

FOREIGN DECORATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2796) to permit American citizens to wear medals or decorations received from certain foreign countries on entering the military or naval service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "war," to strike out "with" and insert "against," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That American citizens who have received, since August, 1914, decorations or medals for distinguished service in the armies or in connection with the field service of those nations engaged in war against the Imperial German Government, shall, on entering the military or naval service of the United States, be permitted to wear such medals or decorations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the first paragraph it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That any officer or enlisted man of the military or naval forces of the United States is hereby authorized to accept and wear any medal or decoration heretofore bestowed or that may hereafter, during the war against Germany, be bestowed by the government of any of the nations now engaged with the United States in war against the Imperial German Government.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection, Mr. President, to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. Can the authority granted by this bill be construed to include any title or order that may accompany a medal or decoration?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; this bill simply permits American soldiers and sailors who have received military medals for service in the field, like our aviators and ambulance drivers, to retain them and not be deprived of them when they return to the service of their own country, as many of them are doing.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. This bill does not in terms authorize our officers and soldiers to receive these decorations, does it?

Mr. LODGE. Did the Senator listen to the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, which was added to the bill?

Mr. KNOX. I did not catch that part of it.

Mr. LODGE. That covers that point.

Mr. KNOX. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, owing to the amendments which have been put on, I think the title should be amended by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the title, the words "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the title will be amended as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

SELECTIVE DRAFT OF ALIENS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate joint resolution 84, authorizing the drafting of aliens, except alien enemies, into the military service of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) authorizing the drafting of aliens, except alien enemies, into the military service of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

Resolved, etc., That in the execution of the selective draft authorized by the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States"—

(1) All aliens resident in the United States for more than one year who are not subjects of the enemy country, and have not declared their intention to become citizens, shall be subject to selective draft for military service pursuant to all the remaining provisions of the above act in the same manner as citizens of the United States, except so far as otherwise provided in the ensuing paragraphs.

(2) Subjects of such countries other than those allied with the enemy country shall be exempt from the draft if any treaty now in force with such countries exempts its subjects in this country from compulsory or other military service, unless the diplomatic representative of such treaty country shall have waived the provision of such treaty for the purpose of the present war; and aliens who claim the benefit of exemption under such treaties and the present paragraph shall be allowed to depart from the United States within 90 days from the date of the allowance of their claim of exemption.

(3) Subjects of any country allied with the enemy country shall be classified by race or nationality or otherwise, and specific classes not deemed suitable for military service under paragraph (1) above may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be utilized for other necessary purposes during the present emergency.

(4) Aliens not alien enemies who, because of treaty stipulations or act of Congress, are not permitted to become citizens of the United States, shall be exempt from compulsory or other military service except as volunteers.

SEC. 2. That any person not an alien enemy who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and who is eligible to become a citizen under existing law, may be enlisted in any military or naval force of the United States authorized to be raised or maintained by voluntary enlistment and, if otherwise qualified, may be appointed and commissioned an officer of any military or naval force maintained by the United States.

SEC. 3. That no person who, while a citizen of the United States and during the existing war in Europe, entered the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war, shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service.

SEC. 4. That any person who heretofore has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States as provided by existing law, and who is serving in the military or naval forces of the United States at the termination of the existing war, and any such person who before the termination of the existing war may have been discharged honorably from the military or naval service of the United States on account of disability incurred in line of duty, shall, if he applies to the proper court for admission as a citizen of the United States, be relieved from the necessity of proving that immediately preceding the date of his application he has resided continuously within the United States five years at least and within the State or Territory where such court is at the time held one year at least.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this joint resolution was very carefully prepared in the first instance, and later it was submitted to the War Department for the consideration of the Judge Advocate General. After he had had it under consideration for a while he suggested certain recommendations for changes in the bill as originally presented. I have examined those amendments, and I suggest consideration of those which meet my approval. There are only two of these, and I do not propose to offer the others suggested by him.

The first is on page 3 of the measure, under paragraph 4, to strike out the words "or other," in line 19, and the words "except as volunteers," in the same line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the words "or other," and in the same line to strike out the words "except as volunteers," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

Aliens not alien enemies who, because of treaty stipulations or act of Congress, are not permitted to become citizens of the United States shall be exempt from compulsory military service.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the reasons for that, as stated by the Judge Advocate General, are as follows: He states that in this paragraph the word "except as volunteers" are needless, and will perhaps create a superfluous doubt, because, by public ruling of the office of the Judge Advocate General which is now being acted upon throughout the country by local boards, aliens who decline to claim exemption, and who thus in effect volunteer, are accepted for service. Therefore this expression, "except as volunteers," may be well omitted from paragraph 4.

Then with respect to the words "or other," which I suggest should be stricken out, the Judge Advocate General says that the reason is that the only military service so far as draft exemption is concerned is compulsory military service; with these conclusions I agree, and I think those words might be properly stricken out. I therefore offer these two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I have not had time because of important committee engagements to examine the amended bill now before the Senate. Does the bill as amended provide for compulsory military service by aliens residing in the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does for those who are not alien enemies.

Mr. STONE. I am not speaking of alien enemies. I am speaking of aliens generally.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will read subdivision "(2)" of the first section, I think he will find his question answered. That subdivision reads:

Subjects of such countries other than those allied with the enemy country shall be exempt from the draft if any treaty now in force with such countries exempts its subjects in this country from compulsory or other military service, unless the diplomatic representative of such treaty country shall have waived the provision of such treaty for the purpose of the present war, and aliens who claim the benefit of exemption under such treaties and the present paragraph shall be allowed to depart from the United States within 90 days from the date of the allowance of their claim of exemption.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, a short while ago the Committee on Foreign Relations reported a bill which was agreed to by the Senate requesting the President, through diplomatic channels, to ascertain from the friendly governments engaged in the war whether there would be objection to this Government requiring military service of their nationals residing here on the same terms and conditions as such service might be required of citizens of the United States. That was absolutely right and proper, for that course would necessitate some arrangement between foreign governments and our own with respect to the matter in hand. We have treaties with a few countries covering this subject. I thought I had in my desk a list of those treaties, and I have been looking for it, but am not able to find it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. We have specific treaties on that point, prohibiting the compulsory military service of the nationals of each party to the treaty, with Italy, Japan, and, I think, one other country. That existing in those three treaties, of course, the Senator is aware, by the favored-nation clause, is imported into all the other treaties of amity and commerce.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is absolutely correct. I was about to add, when I referred to the fact that we had treaties with several countries of the kind the Senator from Massachusetts indicates, that the favored-nation clause would automatically, so to speak, operate with respect to all other friendly nations. Of course, Mr. President, if the nations with whom we have such treaties should agree to the thing sought to be done here—that is to say, to incorporate their nationals resident in this country into our military service—there could be no objection; it would be done with their approval.

But going beyond that, I wish to say for myself, and I speak earnestly and for the future good of American citizens, that under the general principles of international law—and I have been examining the subject somewhat recently; I examined it when the resolution addressed to the President requesting him to take this matter up diplomatically, to which I have referred, was pending. It is an act of unfriendliness, and therefore not regarded with favor, to compel the nationals of other countries, resident in this country as of right, to go into the military service of the United States under compulsion. I had prepared some data upon that subject, with references to authorities, and had laid them here in my desk, knowing that this bill was pending; but I am unable to find the brief. I do not know what has become of it, but it is gone.

So now I merely state in a general way that, without being able to submit to the Senate in a more detailed and definite form the authorities upon which I predicate this opinion, any legislation the purpose of which is to compel the nationals of a friendly nation resident in the United States to enter the military service of the United States is violative of those principles of comity which exist between nations and govern their relations to each other under the principles of international law, unless the nations whose nationals are affected shall themselves consent to it; and this, I say, is so whether there be a treaty or not. In the absence of any treaties upon the subject, I believe it would be violative of the recognized rules of international law to enact a statute of this character. I have no doubt of it. And this we ought not to do, especially as we are standing forth as the champions of international law and the defenders of treaty obligations.

Mr. President, I am not going to say more, and I am in a measure indifferent as to what you may do with this bill; but I do not wish it passed without making this statement of my convictions and this protest against what I consider most unwise legislation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Missouri in his statement in regard to the comity of nations and the general principles of international law, although, as he knows, there has been some dispute about the question; but I agree with his view entirely. I do not think there can be any difference of opinion as to the necessity of scrupulous observance of the sanctity of treaties; and, as I just stated, having a specific prohibition of the compulsory enlistment of aliens in our treaties with two or three nations, it is imported into the other treaties by the favored-nation clause.

I should be the very last to suggest anything that by any possibility could be considered an abrogation by Congress of a treaty through an act of legislation. One of the great features and objects of this war is to maintain the sanctity of treaties which have been torn up, violated, and disregarded by the German Empire. Therefore, no bill that in the least trenches upon either the proper comity of friendly nations with each other or still more upon treaties would receive my support.

In my judgment, Mr. President, this measure is entirely and perfectly guarded in those respects. Clause 4 of the amended draft of the committee provides that:

Aliens not alien enemies who, because of treaty stipulations or act of Congress, are not permitted to become citizens of the United States, shall be exempt from compulsory or other military service as volunteers.

That is one provision. In clause 2:

Subjects of such countries other than those allied with the enemy country shall be exempt from the draft if any treaty now in force with such countries exempts its subjects in this country from compulsory or other military service, unless the diplomatic representative of such treaty country shall have waived the provision of such treaty for the purpose of the present war.

It is within the power of any one of the friendly countries with whom we are engaged in fighting against the Imperial German Government to give us this authority to apply the selective draft or to withhold it. If they withhold that assent, of course nothing can be done under the joint resolution. If they grant their assent, that is a diplomatic settlement. I have hoped ever since the declaration of war that this matter would have been disposed of by diplomatic arrangement, as it could have been.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. Of course, I agree with the Senator in this, for I have already said myself that where a treaty exists between this Government and some other which specifically exempts the nationals of the other nation from military service here, that treaty obligation must be complied with by this Government. I agree further with the Senator that the foreign treaty-making power may waive that right of its nationals here, which, in effect, would at least change the treaty to that extent.

The Senator says that if the foreign nations with whom we have treaties of this kind do make this waiver that that is a diplomatic settlement of the whole question. I submit to my friend from Massachusetts this question: Suppose there had been no such treaty at all with Italy or Japan or, I think, two other countries, as I recall—

Mr. LODGE. Yes; two others.

Mr. STONE. The names of which I can not at this moment state. Suppose there had been no treaty of this kind with any country, then could we, the United States, under the general principles of international law which are generally recognized, take the national of a foreign government resident here and compel him to enter the service?

I submit to the Senator this thought: If we should do that, how could we ever again protest against other nations doing the same thing with our nationals resident in their countries? How could we keep the Mexican Government, for example, from taking an American citizen residing there and putting him in the military service of that Government if we by our own act foreclose our right to invoke the general principles of law which govern the relations of one sovereignty to another?

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a slightly different case, because here we are speaking of the allied nations. As a matter of fact, the treaties which contain the express provision and those which have it by importation, owing to the favored-nation clause, cover practically all countries.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. Is it the intention of those supporting this measure to provide that no German citizen may be drafted into the military service of the United States, but that all Austrians and all Bulgarians and all Turks shall be so drafted, whether exempted by treaty or not?

Mr. LODGE. We have excluded alien enemies.

Mr. FALL. Then is it the purpose as to all other nationalities who are not allied with the enemy, with Germany? We have not declared war against Austria and we have not declared war against Bulgaria, nor have we declared war against Turkey. Those are all allies of the enemy. There are various other countries that are not allied with the enemy. The citizens of such other countries who are not allied with the enemy are exempted if they choose to claim exemption under the provision of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. But, Mr. President—

Mr. FALL. Pardon me just a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator has not read the provision.

Mr. FALL. I want to state what I understand. I have read it, but I may have misunderstood it. The subjects of all neutral countries which are not allied with the enemy, who should be treated, either by "importation," as the Senator says, or by direct treaty, can plead exemption from this measure; the subjects of Germany can plead exemption, but the subjects of Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey can not plead exemption.

Mr. LODGE. I think the paragraph covers it.

Mr. FALL. I do not believe so.

Subjects of any country allied with the enemy country shall be classified by race or nationality or otherwise, and specific classes not being suitable for military service under paragraph (1) above may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be utilized for other necessary purposes during the present emergency.

You provide an absolute draft for all Austrians, all Bulgarians, and all Turks, and in your discretion you either use them in military service or any other service, and do not make any such provision for citizens of any other country.

Mr. LODGE. We do not include alien enemies because we are not willing to put them in. We exclude them because we do not want them.

Mr. FALL. I am asking the object of the bill and whether I understand it correctly. The Senator does not seem to think that I have read it, but this is clearly what the bill says about it. Although you have treaties with Austria and treaties with Bulgaria and treaties with Turkey, the exemption from military service contained in those treaties does not operate as an exemption under this bill.

Mr. LODGE. They must be one or the other. If they are not our enemies then they are included; they can be taken, but they can not be taken under paragraph 2 unless their diplomatic representative consents.

Mr. FALL. All subjects of those countries other than the allied countries of Germany, Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey. Those are by the distinct provision of subsection 2 exempted. So to-day, if this bill becomes a law, it stands exactly in this position, that no subject of Germany, the enemy of this country, can be drafted. The Senator says, of course, we do not want them in the service. Then, no subject of any other country than those allied with Germany which have treaty provisions with us can be drafted unless those treaty provisions are waived, but so far as the allies of Germany are concerned, whether we have treaty provisions or not, and whether such treaty provision is waived or not, those people and those alone are people in the United States who as aliens are subject to this draft.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator, I think it was the purpose of this measure to draft those who are allied with the alien enemies as well as other aliens in the country who are not enemy aliens? The Senator knows that in some countries there are alliances with Germany, yet there are people in such countries who are absolutely in sympathy with the allies. They can be drafted, and some of them want to fight. I wish to say to the Senator that some of them have proposed to organize a sort of foreign legion, although subjects of Germany, to assist the allies of this country.

Mr. LODGE. Poles and Bohemians in large number.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The purpose was to draft all that class of people in the service, under subdivision 3:

Subjects of any country allied with the enemy country shall be classified by race or nationality or otherwise, and specific classes not deemed suitable for military service under paragraph (1) above may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be utilized for other necessary purposes during the present emergency.

So you see that the purpose of it was to utilize them in any way that the Government saw fit.

Mr. FALL. That is exactly what I am asking. I wanted to know what the intention was. The effect of it is just exactly as I have explained it. It appears that that was the intention; in other words, that any citizen of a neutral country can claim exemption under a treaty provision unless his representative waives that exemption for him; that any citizen of Germany, of course, can claim exemption, because we do not want them in the Army; and that no citizen of Austria or Bulgaria or Turkey can claim exemption under the provisions of this act, but we reserve to ourselves the right to say whether we will put them in the front line as a military unit or whether we will put them to work in munitions factories or on farms or for some other purpose. He is absolutely subject to draft, but you have not the same provision with reference to other citizens as to draft in other lines.

Mr. LODGE. I think we ought.

Mr. FALL. As the Senator says, I am inclined to think we ought. I have been in favor from the beginning of subjecting to the draft in this country every able-bodied citizen from 18 to 45 years and then putting him at such work as we choose to have him do, but that he should be subject first to military call, no matter what his business is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, to return to the point I was making, in what is to me of supreme importance, I think this measure is protected. So far as our treaty agreements go, our treaty agreements either directly or by imputation cover the whole field. I started to say this could have been done and can be done by diplomatic arrangement by an exchange of notes or protocols at any time. It has not yet been done, but I hoped it would have been done long ago.

There is a very great and bitter injustice in the present state of things, especially through the Northern States, where the bulk of the foreign-born population is. Those resident aliens, not alien enemies, are counted for the basis for the quota for which a given district is liable, and then the American citizens have to furnish that quota alone. I know one district in Brooklyn, as was stated here by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], where they made a registration including aliens, friendly aliens, and American citizens, and the result was that the quota assigned to that district on that basis took every American citizen in the district to fill it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. I simply wanted to say that that is the case up in northwestern Indiana. In Lake County, for instance, in Gary and East Chicago, where are the plants of the United States Steel Corporation and the other big steel plants, their employees are made up in very large part of foreigners, and when you come to exempt them under the terms of the draft act and apply it only to the American citizens it has taken nearly all the young men of American birth from those particular towns. There are scarcely any of them left. None of the aliens have been taken.

Mr. LODGE. That is the case all through the districts where there is a large foreign immigration. There is a case in Connecticut. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] will correct me if I am wrong, but broadly it is this: In four factories in one town there were, in round numbers, 7,000 persons employed. They happened to be equally divided. There are 3,500 American citizens and there are 3,500 who are foreigners. They count the whole 7,000, and that, roughly speaking—I am using rough figures as an illustration—would mean that 7,000 men must furnish 700 soldiers to the draft. What is the result? The 3,500 American citizens furnish the whole 700 of the draft. They have to furnish the entire 700 out of those of their number between 21 and 31 years of age.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will yield, as he desired to be corrected if he was not accurate in stating it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator makes the statement as I made it on the floor some weeks ago. I did not have the paper before me at the time, but my impression is that instead of being three or four thousand, referring to the population of the city of New Britain, there were 7,000 registered, and the proportion was 3,500 aliens.

Mr. LODGE. I got the proportion right. The injustice, I think, is too apparent to need discussion.

Moreover, Mr. President, see the effect it has upon foreign-born citizens, men who come to this country, who have taken out their citizenship papers in order to become Americans and mean to stay here. They find themselves called upon to go to war—and they go. I will do them the justice to say, very readily, but they think it is very unjust. I have had letters from them from Boston; I will not mention the race, but one of the allies. They say: "We have come here and become citizens, and our next-door neighbors, who have not become citizens, are left at home, and we are obliged to go to the front. We are ready to go to the front, but we think they ought to take their chance, too." That feeling is broadly spread. There is a sense of bitter injustice in the community where these things have occurred. I know it is the case in my State; I hear of it from many other States; and it is an injustice.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I make a suggestion to the Senator there?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Since this joint resolution was introduced I have received resolutions from numerous societies that I did not know existed in nearly every State in the Union advocating the enactment of this resolution, both from the standpoint of expediency and justice to our own young men who are called to the colors.

Mr. LODGE. It is the case everywhere.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. The condition referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts prevails in the cities of Cleveland, Youngstown, and Canton. My attention has been called to several precincts. I think there is one point in the city of Cleveland in which the aliens outnumber the natives and naturalized citizens more than two to one. That would indicate very clearly that the great number of citizens would be subject to draft and the aliens excluded from it. I have been wondering since this matter has been up for discussion whether it would not be possible in this very measure to add a section under which proper credit could be given to the various localities in future drafts for the excess number called under the first draft. It seems to me that in that way we could equalize the burden of military service.

Mr. LODGE. Well, we do, in a sense, but we do not remedy the injustice by doing that.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that.

Mr. LODGE. It still remains on the American citizen to furnish not only his own quota, but the quota of the alien who never has become a citizen.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Massachusetts is exactly right about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. There are two districts in the State of Utah where there will not be a sufficient number of American citizens to fill the first draft, and after the first draft is filled there will not be an American citizen between the ages of 21 and 31 left in those districts.

Mr. LODGE. That is true, Mr. President. I have had letters from men both native born and naturalized, but all American citizens alike, saying, "We have been drafted; we go, and we go readily, but the men who are living in this country, who are protected by its laws, who are furnished with education by its schools, are going to step in and take our places in the factory or anywhere else, and they boast that they are going to do it." That makes a bitter feeling, and I think a justly bitter feeling. It seems to me incredible that nothing at all should be done about it. I know that some of the allies are anxious to have us apply the selective draft to their citizens and residents here; that they will be only too glad to have that done. They do not want their citizens or subjects to remain in the United States and escape service in our Army or in their armies by sheltering themselves under their foreign citizenship. They want us to apply the selective draft. Why it has not been done I can not conceive.

We have taken the proper step, it seems to me, the first and eminently proper step, of asking the President to proceed to remedy this situation. It can be done by diplomatic arrangement and proclamation of the President without a word of law. It has not been done. The attempt in this joint resolution is, paying every regard to treaties and to international law, to try to bring the question directly to the Governments with whom we are engaged in fighting Germany. That is all it proposes to do. If it does that, those friendly Governments may give us an opportunity to apply the selective draft, which they want to see us apply to their subjects or citizens.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to hear the Senator from Massachusetts speak of the action taken by Congress, to which he has just alluded—the resolution which we passed some time ago requesting the President to begin negotiations, at least with the friendly powers, to see if they could not get their citizens who are located here into the Army. Can the Senator give us any information about how far those negotiations have proceeded, if they have proceeded at all, and what the result has been?

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing about it. We have received no information here of any steps having been taken.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the committee get any information on that subject?

Mr. LODGE. Not to my knowledge. So far as I know, nothing has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. It might be well for us to have that information.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure whether the resolution to which the Senator from Nebraska refers was a joint resolution or a Senate resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it was a joint resolution. I am not sure, if it was a joint resolution, whether it has passed the other House.

Mr. LODGE. I am not sure whether or not it passed the House.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator refer to what was known as the McCumber resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. It was introduced as a joint resolution, but was finally changed to a Senate resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Being a Senate resolution, then, it has gone to the President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is Senate resolution No. 108.

Mr. LODGE. I now recall that it was a Senate resolution; so it must have gone to the President at once, and still nothing has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course the object of the resolution was to remedy the situation of which the Senator from Massachusetts is speaking, and which this bill attempts to remedy, which I think everybody concedes ought to be remedied by some action somewhere.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be remedied.

Mr. NORRIS. The only point I wanted to make was that I do not desire that we shall run at cross purposes with any negotiations which the President may be now taking.

Mr. LODGE. We could not run across the negotiations, because nothing could be done except through the Executive. The very matter of the diplomatic representatives waiving the right must be done through the Executive. The matter all lies in his hands.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator in that connection that I predicted when the so-called McCumber resolution was passed that we would not get anywhere with it. I have had this matter up with the State Department, and they simply advise me that they have taken it up with some of the diplomatic representatives interested in the subject, but thus far no results have been achieved.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, there are some of the nationals of our allies that are insisting that their citizens domiciled here be subjected to the draft, and there are others who oppose this course; so that, even amongst the allies, their citizens here, their nationals, differ as to what ought to be done, some favoring and some opposing the draft and others insisting that, if they are to be drafted at all, they ought to be drafted into the military service of their own countries.

Mr. LODGE. Well, let them go home and be drafted into their own armies.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The trouble is that those domiciled here differ as to what ought to be done. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that if we do not do this now, having fully protected our treaty provisions, the same condition that exists now will continue indefinitely.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am interested in what the Senator from Oregon says in regard to the negotiations of the State Department, but I do not think it is a point here as to what the nationals of those countries think. Of course, we could not submit to the citizens of a foreign country the law which we propose to pass; we must pass on that; but the representatives, the ambassadors from those foreign countries, I suppose have authority to speak for the countries which they represent.

I take it that there is not any objection from any of them—at least from those representing the countries which are allied with our Government—to any action along this line. In fact, I suppose they are all in favor of some action that would be effective by which this great inequality could be remedied. It seems to me that the very statement of the case is sufficient to demand a remedy of some kind, although there might be disagreement as to just what would be the proper steps to take to bring it about; but at least we could not consult with the citizens representing those countries. If they would rather be drafted into their own armies, it of course is still open to them to go into their own countries and enlist in their armies.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me disabuse the mind of the Senator from Nebraska with reference to one thing. I did not intend to convey the impression that we or anybody here should consult with the nationals of the different countries; that would be a physical impossibility; but the Senator knows that there are very prominent nationals of all of these countries here, on one side appealing to their ambassador for one condition to prevail, and another side, just as powerful in its influence, appealing that another course should prevail. So their ambassadors may well hesitate and halt between two opinions. I do not say that that is the fact, but I conceive that that condition might prevail.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator on that point, Does he know of any nationals, prominent or otherwise, who are appealing to their ambassadors to prevent, if possible, any settlement of the situation that would keep them out of military service?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I do not know of any such, but I do know that I have been addressed upon the subject by nationals of other countries making the claims which I have outlined. I know, too, that nothing whatever has been accomplished under the McCumber resolution which passed the Senate some weeks ago.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, however prominent or otherwise, or however numerous these nationals may be, if they are objecting to Congress taking any action that could be legally taken by which they could be compelled to bear the burdens of war the same as our own citizens must bear them that we ought to pay no attention to such objectors, because, as I look at it and as it seems to me everybody who looks at it fairly must realize, there is a great injustice existing under the law now. It is perfectly outrageous, it seems to me, that citizens, for instance, of England or Italy should remain in this country and be protected from service while American citizens must go to the war to do the fighting, the aliens taking the positions at home which the Americans must give up and enjoying the fruits of the sacrifices which the American citizens must make.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I stated a few moments ago that I thought I had in my desk the brief which I have prepared on this subject and that it had been mislaid or had gone—I did not know how; whether it dropped out or whether I had taken it out; but I find that it was in my committee room, and it has been sent to me. So the fact that it was not in my desk was my own act.

Mr. President, I want to say just a few words, and then I am through with this subject. I agree with what the Senator from Nebraska and the other Senators who have spoken have said about men coming here from foreign countries, living under our laws and protection, enjoying most of the privileges of citizenship, and yet taking no part in defense of our country, or, what is still worse, no part in the defense of the country to which they owe allegiance, but withholding themselves entirely from all form of service that they may enjoy industrial, civil, and social advantages that appertain to them, while our own citizens are taken for military service and sent to fight not only the battles of this land but the battles of the country to whose sovereignty the aliens owe allegiance. Of course there can be but one view with respect to the bad feature of that situation. It is undoubtedly an evil; but, Mr. President, I do ask Senators to pause when they come to remedy that evil and to be careful that they do not set a precedent which later may come home to plague us.

One thing we have already stood for, and that is the protection of American citizens in any country in the world. Mr. President, if we have citizens of our country residing in foreign countries, European or Asiatic or American, not under express treaty provisions, but under the general rules and principles which govern the relations which nations bear to each other, and the government of the country where they are temporarily resident takes them by force and compels them to render military service in that country, to imperil their lives and undergo hardships, I think, sir—and surely I profoundly hope, sir—that the Government of the United States would resent such conduct on the part of the foreign nation and reach out its arm to protect its citizens.

Things of that kind, sir, have occurred already in our history; they have occurred in Prussia, in Russia, and in Italy, especially with respect to American naturalized citizens who emigrated from those countries where the doctrine of expatriation is not recognized. Yet we have stood against such a procedure and have opposed it, and I think we did well to do so. Do we propose now to enact a law which will be thrust in our faces when this war is over and some American citizen is compelled to take up arms in defense of the colors and fight the battles in a foreign land where he happens to be a resident? We may protest, but this law will be put in our faces with the statement "You did it yourselves."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What objection is there to an American citizen serving under compulsion in a foreign army? If he goes to a foreign land and there spends his life, accumulates a fortune, raises a family, and enjoys the benefits and privileges of that country, why should he not serve it in an emergency? I think he ought to be compelled to serve if that country's life is at stake, just as I think the citizens or subjects of other countries ought to be compelled to serve here if our country's life or the liberty of the citizen is at stake.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it may be that a case can be selected here and there of some man who has spent his whole life in a foreign country and who it may be said, sentimentally, ought to serve that country—I say this as a matter of sentiment, not as a matter of law or right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator just once more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This bill adopts the rule that President Lincoln laid down in the Civil War. He took the position that, as a matter of comity, it might be well not to draft nationals of other countries in the service, but it was attempted to be done, anyhow; and the President, through his Secretary of State, adopted the rule of giving these nationals 65 days to get out of the country if they did not want to serve. Now, this bill gives them 90 days; so that if a man does not want to serve and still wants to enjoy the blessings of liberty of American citizens who are compelled to serve, he can go out of the country; he has 90 days in which to do it, and he can go wherever he wants to go.

Mr. STONE. And we can send him out of the country.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; that is not in here.

Mr. STONE. No; not in this bill, but we can pass a law and authorize deportation. If there be no treaty between this Government and another that forbids it, we would have a right under the general rules of international law to deport. We can send these men home to their own countries. Whenever, in the opinion of the Government of the United States, their presence here is not acceptable, we can send them out of the country, send them to Italy, send them to France, or to England, or wherever they belong. But, Mr. President, there is no kind of doubt—I state this with positive conviction—that, aside from any question involving a treaty, to pass this law is to set aside the established rules of international law that have hitherto governed nations with respect to this matter. I fear it is a dangerous precedent you are about to set, and that what we get out of it temporarily will not compensate us for the future danger we shall incur. At most we would get but little out of it now, while none can tell what trouble it may bring to us hereafter.

I suppose the Senate will pass the bill. The sentiment of the Senate is that way. Sentimentally I feel the same way myself. Personally, I should like to have this sort of thing done as much as any of you, but I fear to set a precedent of this kind.

Mr. President, I should be glad if I could be present when the vote is taken to record my vote against this bill, but that is impossible, as I am obliged now to go to an important meeting of the Finance Committee. I wish to have this statement appear in the Record, that if I were here I should vote against the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am very glad that this bill has been brought before the Senate. I was one of those Senators who called the attention of the Senate to this situation several weeks ago.

The percentage of aliens in the State of Connecticut, I was surprised to ascertain, is 36.6 per cent. More than one-third of the population is alien. That is accounted for, I think, largely by the large number of aliens who have come into our manufacturing establishments from Italy and Canada and the southeastern countries of Europe. As the law stands at present, the situation is that in the case of men working right at the same bench in a large factory, the American citizen is drawn and marched off to the training cantonments, while the alien there, who has just as much protection from the law and the benefit of our Government as the American citizen, stays there at the bench and jokes and makes fun of the American citizen who is drawn into the Army and has to go away and maintain the government of the alien who is working at the same bench with him. So that under the operation of this law, so far as the citizen is concerned, if we win the war it is a great deal better to be an alien in America than it is to be an American citizen. You get all the benefits of the country and escape the great duty of defending the country. The American citizens are to go out and fight, bleed, and die to preserve the alien and his family in their enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness in this country; and the alien who is here is to take the job of the American who goes away and defends his family.

So of course it is a perfectly impossible situation, and not only in Connecticut but, as the Senator from Massachusetts has described, and the Senator from Ohio, and other Senators, it is the cause of the greatest dissatisfaction among the people, not only among those who are drafted, but among those who are registered and subject to the next draft, and it is the cause of an intense feeling of resentment among the families and friends of all those men who are marched off to a foreign land to fight for those who either can not or will not volunteer and who are exempt from being drafted.

I am very much in favor of this bill, and I hope for its speedy passage.

Mr. President, I want to send to the desk now a proposed amendment, and ask the chairman of the committee to advise me whether he will consider it as an amendment to the bill, particularly for the purpose of suggesting the subject to the conference committee. I will not state it, because its nature will appear when the Secretary reads it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. In the future operation of the said selective-draft act of May 18, 1917, credit shall be given the several States or localities or districts for the increased number of citizens heretofore drawn, which excess or increase was caused by the fact that aliens were registered in computing the number subject to the draft but were not themselves subject thereto.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to that; but I should like the amendment to be confined to those who are exempted under the provisions of the bill, because in the future operation of the draft this bill will apply to a great many who will be taken who are not now taken under the draft. I would want it to apply only to those aliens who are not subject to the draft under the pending measure and who live in certain communities and by their numbers affect the number of Americans who go into the service.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I drew the amendment here at the desk hurriedly, and I am at a loss just at this instant to see how to change the phraseology of it to meet the Senator's view. All I want is to get it into conference.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment, because I think it will work equitably if it is properly framed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. I simply want it to be the basis of such perfected amendment as the conferees may decide upon.

Mr. President, while I have the floor I want to ask the Senator as to the meaning or the effect, on page 2 of the bill, in line 24, of the word "such," the third word in the line. The portion of the paragraph to which I refer reads as follows:

Subjects of such countries other than those allied with the enemy country shall be exempt from the draft if any treaty now in force with such countries exempts its subjects in this country from compulsory or other military service.

I can not see to what the words "subjects of such countries" refer. If it said "subjects of countries other than those allied with the enemy country shall be exempt," I would understand what it meant.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would be just as effective if the word "such" were left out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator thinks so, I move to strike out the word "such."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think that would confuse the phraseology.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want to confuse it at all. I only want to understand it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it is approaching the hour of 2 o'clock; but I think, if the Senator will allow me, that the words "such countries" refer back to all countries except the enemy country; and then you have it classified. All countries except the enemy country, and then subjects of such countries—that is, all countries except the enemy country—other than those allied with the enemy country. That makes a new subject. There is the enemy country, then, and those allied with the enemy country, and then subjects of all other countries; and the expression "such countries" there is necessary to qualify that unless the entire words are stricken out, which I shall move—to strike out the words "other than those allied with the enemy's country," leaving it "subjects of such countries"—that is, all countries but the enemy country. I shall make a motion to that effect, and I understand that the committee have no objection to it; and then I shall offer an amendment to perfect section 3, if I have the opportunity. I am frank to say that I do not see how we shall be able to get through with the joint resolution by 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think we are limited to 2 o'clock. There is no unfinished business now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not move to strike out the word "such," and content myself with having called attention to it so that the conference committee may consider it later.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, as I understand, this amendment has been accepted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it is pending. It has been offered.

Mr. FALL. Then I will wait until it is acted upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not ask for a vote on it immediately; only in due time—that is all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator refer to the word "such"?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I have withdrawn that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to accept the other amendment.

Mr. FALL. I so understood.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But there has to be a vote on it anyway, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out from the word "countries," line 24 of page 2, down to the word "shall" in line 25; that is, the words "other than those allied with the enemy country." In other words, my object is to put the subjects of Austria, of Bulgaria, and of Turkey in exactly the same position that the subjects of Germany are in, and then to put the German subjects in exactly the same position that the subjects of all other countries would be in, by offering an amendment to subdivision "(3)" on page 3 which I will now suggest, as it is necessary for the Senate to understand the purpose of my motion. I propose to strike out the last five words in line 10—that is, "country allied with the enemy"—and to insert in lieu thereof "enemy or allied enemy country," so that as amended the paragraph will read:

Subjects of any enemy or allied enemy country shall be classified by race or nationality or otherwise, and specific classes not deemed suitable for military service under paragraph (1) above may, under regulations prescribed by the President, be—

There I move to insert the words "drafted and"— be drafted and utilized for other necessary purposes during the present emergency.

I think that will cover entirely the object of the committee generally and enable us to classify Germans as well as Austrians, Bulgarians, and Turks, whether their diplomatic representatives agree to it or not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to those amendments, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question. Perhaps it is not cognate to the matter that he is discussing.

Suppose that the representatives of the States just mentioned by the Senator refuse, through diplomatic negotiations, to consent to their nationals serving in the Army, or to abrogate the treaties that now exist?

Mr. FALL. That is to say, citizens of neutral States?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Or of other States.

Mr. KING. Austria, of course, is a neutral State now, technically, and so is Bulgaria.

Mr. FALL. Well, we are classifying the enemy and the allied enemy countries.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. FALL. And we are proceeding to violate all international law in doing so, so long as we have not declared war upon those countries. There is no earthly question about that. It is simply a question of our arrogating to ourselves the right, for practically the first time in the history of all civilized nations, of forcing the citizens of another nation, either a nation with which we are at war or a nation with which we are not at war, into the service of our country. There is no question about that.

Mr. KING. I can understand that those who are our allies, the representatives of Italy and of France and of Japan, would doubtless, through diplomatic negotiations, consent that their nationals within our country should be drafted into the Army; but it is quite likely that the representatives of Austria and of Bulgaria and of Turkey will not consent to the application of this statute.

Mr. FALL. Precisely.

Mr. KING. Now, what I was about to ask the Senator is this: In the event that we fail in diplomatic negotiations to obtain from them a waiver of present treaty rights, does the Senator think that the Government, by force, should draft those men, or compel them to leave the jurisdiction of the United States?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator is asking my opinion. I am going to vote for this bill, and it does exactly that thing.

Mr. KING. The Senator feels that that would, of course, be flying in the teeth of a positive treaty that we have with those nations?

Mr. FALL. Well, of the favored-nation clause, at least, with Austria. We have no direct treaty with Austria, and we have no treaty with Bulgaria, because Bulgaria is not a nation with which we have entered into a treaty, except purely as to commercial relations recently.

Mr. KING. I am assuming that we have treaty relations.

Mr. FALL. We have the favored-nation clause.

Mr. KING. And they could take refuge under the favored-nation clause, and seek the same protection that would be given to the nationals of other countries?

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly. This would be an additional cause for a declaration of war on the part of Austria or any of those countries. Very often I do not agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], but his construction of the law is absolutely right. There is no question in the world about it. We are violating the comity of nations; we are violating international law; then we are violating treaty law, either directly, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts used the expression, imported by the favored-nation clause. There is no question about the fact that we are violating it; but we are in a peculiar condition in this country, Mr. President; and, if the Senator will allow me, I will explain why I shall vote for this, although I realize that it is in violation—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to ask him one other question, then he may answer that and proceed with his explanation, which I shall be very glad to hear. Does the Senator think that under this bill the nationals of the countries I have just mentioned could be forced into the Army; or would they not have the alternative of leaving the jurisdiction of the United States, having 90 days within which to accomplish that fact?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the subjects of neutral countries not allied with the enemy under the provisions of this bill have the option of leaving the country. The subjects of countries allied with the enemy have not that option. If my amendment is adopted, it will put the enemy in the same class; but if the joint resolution is passed as it stands here to-day, those subjects have no option of leaving the country in 90 days. This is a very peculiar bill. It violates every principle of international comity of nations and treaties. There is no question about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? We have not much time, and by remaining silent I do not want to be held as accepting that statement of the Senator. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Well, Mr. President, I do not know why we can not proceed. Is there any reason that the Senator can advance why we can not proceed along right now until a little after 2 o'clock?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, I will say to the Senator that I have no disposition at all to crowd this joint resolution through. The unfinished business comes up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FALL. I am in favor of the passage of the joint resolution, and I do not want to jeopardize its passage to-day, but I do not want to stultify myself by voting silently for a violation of international law. I have been a lawyer in my time, and I have some little pride of legal opinion. So I would prefer, if the Senator consents, that I may be allowed to explain my position on the subject.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection in the world.

Mr. FALL. Thank you.

Mr. President, this country is now in a world war where its very existence is at stake, in my judgment. Our national life is a forfeit as the result of this war. The United States of America is in a different position from that occupied by any other country engaged in the war. It is an entirely different position. The United States of America since the formation of our Government has been a place of refuge for the peoples of all other countries of the world, political and other refugees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to set aside this bill until half past 2 so that we may possibly finish the pending joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana asks that the bill be temporarily laid aside until half past 2. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Mexico will proceed.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, not only have we been the place of refuge to which political refugees and those persecuted may come from all the countries of the earth and receive protection, but we have also been exploited by citizens of the other nations of the world until we are not a homogeneous people in any sense of the word. The consequence is that conditions just such as those referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Ohio, and others have arisen, where we have districts, precincts, municipalities, counties all over our country largely inhabited by citizens of other countries or citizens of the United States of the first or second generation. Among these, of course, are a large number of citizens of other countries who have neither declared their intention to become citizens of this country nor displayed any intention ever to declare such an intention, and many of them have declared their intention and are not citizens yet.

We have found all manner of difficulty in dealing with this problem throughout the Western as well as the Eastern States. We are in danger to-day here at home in dealing with people resident within this country. Drastic measures of self-preservation are always justifiable, even if they go to the extent of a violation of international treaty obligations or the comity of nations or international law. Because of the fact that I realize we are confronted with a condition which it is absolutely necessary for us to meet, just as necessary for us to meet on American soil as it is for us to meet the Germans on French soil at the first line of defense, and because anything is justifiable in defense of the life of a nation exactly as it is justifiable in defense of the life of an individual if in violation of domestic law, I stand ready to vote for this measure. It is absolutely necessary that some measure of this character should be enacted into legislation and left to the administration to handle to enable it to cope with the conditions existing here in the United States. I am in favor of meeting it, meeting it frankly, at the same time avowing that, in so far as the diplomatic department and the administration of the Government has control of the condition as it exists, the Congress of the United States, at least, is going to place in the administration the power to regulate conditions here in the United States as it becomes necessary.

For that reason I shall vote for the joint resolution with the amendments. I understand the amendments which I have suggested have been accepted. I should like to have a vote taken upon them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments to the amendment of the committee will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment is, on page 2, lines 24 and 25, to strike out the words "other than those allied with the enemy country."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me ask the Senator again, so that I may vote intelligently upon the amendment, what was it he said he thought the word "such," before "countries," refers to in the twenty-fourth line?

Mr. FALL. The word "such" there refers to all countries except enemy countries.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It must refer to some previous language in the joint resolution.

Mr. FALL. It refers to the second line of the first subdivision, in lines 17 and 18.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will not the Senator read to what it refers?

Mr. FALL (reading)—

All aliens resident in the United States for more than one year who are not subjects of the enemy country.

Then they must be subjects of any other country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has read the words "subjects of the enemy country." In line 24 it says "subjects of such countries."

Can that refer to the enemy country?

Mr. FALL. All aliens are generally classified—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The word "aliens" is simply used here as applied to aliens residents of the United States not subjects of the enemy country. "Such" can not refer to aliens. It refers to the country.

Mr. FALL. Of which the aliens are citizens, naturally.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does not say so.

Mr. FALL. It does not say so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Therefore I think that word is confusing if it is intended to refer to those aliens.

Mr. FALL. There are two classifications made—one is of those who are citizens or subjects of the enemy country; the other, of aliens subjects of all other countries. Then there is an exception to the latter classification which is intended to be provided in subsection 2—that is, between the alien subjects of the allied enemy countries and the alien subjects of neutral countries.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But subsection 1 does not create two classes of aliens. It only refers—

Mr. FALL. It does clearly refer to the classes of aliens who are exempt from military service distinctly by subsection 1 as subjects of the enemy country. All others are subject to the provisions of subsection 1, except as they are excepted by the provisions of subsection 2.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language of subsection 1 is as follows:

All aliens resident in the United States for more than one year who are not subjects of the enemy country and have not declared their intention to become citizens shall be subject to selective draft for military service pursuant to all the remaining provisions of the above act in the same manner as citizens of the United States, except so far as otherwise provided in the ensuing paragraphs.

I submit there is only one class of people spoken of there—that is, aliens resident in the United States not subjects of the enemy country—and I submit that the words in line 24, subsection 2, "subjects of such countries" are inapt language in which to describe those who are mentioned in subsection 1, if it is intended to refer to those.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think clearly that the Senator passing upon the construction of this language would readily understand it. It would not be apt language, but clearly the intention of the legislature, which is to be arrived at by the construction of the statute, can be ascertained. In other words, if the subjects of enemy country under subsection 1 shall be exempt from the selective-draft provision the alien citizens of all other countries shall be subject to some form of selective draft, and then the provision exempting certain aliens, providing how they may be exempted, follows. So I think that "such countries" there refers to citizens of all other countries than enemy countries. I think that will be the construction the Senator will put upon it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the conference committee will improve the draft so that it will not become a matter of—

Mr. FALL. Construction.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of discussion, and that each gentleman shall have to arrive at his own construction.

Mr. FALL. Of course the Senator, as an attorney, knows that there never was an act of a legislature in the world that could be perfected by a conference committee that lawyers would not object to the construction.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But there are various degrees of efficiency. I think some language is more subject to difference of views than others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 10, strike out the words "country allied with the" and after the word "enemy" insert "or allied enemy," so as to read: "Subjects of any enemy or allied enemy country shall be classified," and so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 3, line 14, before the word "utilized" to insert the words "drafted and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe that completes the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question: Is the joint resolution retroactive in the sense that in the first draft, the first selection, those who would come within the terms of the joint resolution may now, notwithstanding this late date, be drafted into the Army?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not certain as to that. If they are registered, I presume they might be subject to the next call, but I doubt if the statute would be retroactive. These men are of course already registered.

Mr. KING. I presume that in practically all the precincts or political subdivisions from which the selections have been made the full quota has been obtained and therefore it would be impossible to—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Apply it to the present draft.

Mr. KING. To apply the measure to the aliens who may be within those precincts. I wish to ask the Senator one other question: Does he assent to the broad statement made by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] that the joint resolution does violate treaties that we have with existing countries and the principles of international law and the comity which governs nations with respect to matters of this character?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I stated that I dissented entirely from that proposition notwithstanding the Senator from New Mexico is considered one of the best international lawyers in the Senate. As a matter of fact, I am in line with the view of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] upon that subject. I think so far as the treaties with other nations are concerned the nationals are absolutely protected under the bill.

If I were not so anxious to see the joint resolution disposed of during the morning hour, I would discuss it at length. This subject is not one of first impression. It was discussed at very great length at The Hague peace conference; and while some favored an absolute prohibition of required military service of resident aliens, the validity of municipal legislation of certain States which on occasion requires such service was distinctly recognized. No resolution was passed, but the conference expressed its solemn wish in the premises in substance as follows:

* * * que les Puissances règlent, part des conventions particulières, la situation, au point de vue des chargés militaires des étrangers établis sur leurs territoires.

In other words, they left it to the nations, practically undetermined as to what their views were on the subject, simply expressing a hope as to what should be done. But, in any event, I feel that there is no violation of international law, and, so far as treaty obligations are concerned; they are absolutely protected under the terms of the joint resolution.

In this connection, as a part of my observations, I desire to have printed the report of the committee upon the joint resolution. It gives the countries with which we have treaties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 94, 65th Cong., 1st sess.]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs has given careful consideration to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) authorizing the drafting of aliens, except alien enemies, into the military service of the United States, which was referred to the committee on July 18, 1917, and report it back to the Senate with amendments with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

Section 1 deals with the drafting of aliens into the military service of the United States. The total number registered under the provisions of the selective draft act of May 18, 1917, was 9,649,938, of which 1,229,259 were classified as aliens. According to the summary sheets in the office of the Provost Marshal General, this latter number does not include those subjects of foreign countries who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States but who have not completed their citizenship here. There are, therefore, a large number of registrants not classified as aliens who, under treaty stipulations, if exercised, would be exempt from compulsory or other military service. Below is given a table showing the total number of registrants by States and Territories and the number of such registrants classified as aliens:

	Total of all registered.	Aliens.	Alien enemies.
Alabama.....	181,614	1,183	77
Arizona.....	35,932	14,652	193
Arkansas.....	149,444	517	75
California.....	297,532	67,464	3,948
Colorado.....	88,874	9,323	472
Connecticut.....	159,955	58,631	1,111
Delaware.....	21,864	2,883	92
District of Columbia.....	31,930	1,569	79
Florida.....	84,683	5,682	208
Georgia.....	231,418	1,224	120
Idaho.....	41,117	3,970	176
Illinois.....	672,498	95,145	6,051
Indiana.....	255,145	13,651	1,149
Iowa.....	216,299	11,714	1,822
Kansas.....	148,849	6,404	296
Kentucky.....	190,225	940	186
Louisiana.....	157,454	2,958	208
Maine.....	60,407	10,196	58
Maryland.....	121,345	7,603	896
Massachusetts.....	359,323	103,014	1,508
Michigan.....	374,220	70,099	2,750
Minnesota.....	221,715	24,599	1,971
Mississippi.....	139,525	557	45
Missouri.....	293,825	10,992	1,008
Montana.....	88,273	11,790	687
Nebraska.....	118,407	5,251	998
Nevada.....	12,038	3,733	77
New Hampshire.....	37,642	9,507	79

	Total of all registered.	Aliens.	Alien enemies.
New Jersey.....	302,742	77,372	4,956
New Mexico.....	32,202	4,324	108
New York.....	1,060,693	235,538	30,965
North Carolina.....	203,096	532	34
North Dakota.....	65,007	7,205	615
Ohio.....	568,635	89,909	4,138
Oklahoma.....	159,211	2,947	219
Oregon.....	62,922	6,234	480
Pennsylvania.....	834,389	180,754	5,455
Rhode Island.....	53,458	15,043	128
South Carolina.....	128,039	447	58
South Dakota.....	58,251	2,666	417
Tennessee.....	189,573	987	72
Texas.....	413,852	27,024	1,043
Utah.....	41,952	7,145	344
Vermont.....	27,098	3,508	56
Virginia.....	181,826	2,575	179
Washington.....	108,330	16,001	791
West Virginia.....	119,978	10,521	470
Wisconsin.....	238,384	23,522	3,401
Wyoming.....	22,848	3,353	329
Porto Rico.....	104,550
Indians.....	6,001
National parks.....	85	4	2
United States.....	9,780,685	1,275,902	80,538

Under the selective-draft law quotas from the States and Territories and subdivisions were based upon the estimated population thereof, and in many subdivisions the registration returns showed a very large percentage of registrants classified as aliens. In some cases the percentage of those classified as aliens exceeds 65 per cent of the total number registered. This situation works a hardship on the citizen population of a community, and the man who under the laws of his native country may be obligated to render military service is resting here answerable to no one.

If this measure is immediately enacted into law it will be possible to include aliens coming within its provisions in the first call under the selective-draft law. Local boards in all the States are now passing upon the claims for exemption of all individuals included in the first call. Aliens having been registered, they are included in the number summoned for examination before the local boards, and if exempted on account of being aliens they are given certificates of exemption, which, under the President's regulations, can be revoked should the cause of exemption no longer exist. However, if the entire quota of a given local board is completed before the enactment of this measure it might be impracticable to disturb the quota as determined upon in that particular area.

Paragraph 2 of section 1 exempts from the draft subjects of any country other than alien enemies and those of countries allied with the enemy country with which the United States has treaty obligations, unless the diplomatic representative of such treaty country waives the provisions of such treaty for the purpose of the present war. No alien of any such country now exempt from military service by treaty would be drafted except by waiver of treaty provisions by the diplomatic representative of such country.

Below is given the provisions of existing treaties relating to military service, prepared in the Legislative Reference Division of the Library of Congress:

ARTICLES OF TREATIES IN FORCE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES RELATING TO MILITARY SERVICE.

A. EXEMPTIONS IN FAVOR OF ALL CITIZENS.

Argentine Republic. Treaty of 1853:

ART. 10. The citizens of the United States residing in the Argentine Confederation, and the citizens of the Argentine Confederation residing in the United States, shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether by sea or by land, and from all forced loans, requisitions, or military exaction; and they shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatever, to pay any ordinary charges, requisitions, or taxes greater than those that are paid by native citizens of the contracting parties, respectively.

Congo. Treaty of 1891:

ART. 3. The citizens and inhabitants of each of the high contracting parties shall be exempt, in the territories of the other, from all personal service in the army, navy, or militia, and from all pecuniary contributions in lieu of such.

Costa Rica. Treaty of 1851:

ART. 9. The citizens of the United States residing in the Republic of Costa Rica, and the citizens of the Republic of Costa Rica residing in the United States, shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, either by sea or by land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions; and they shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay other ordinary charges, requisitions, or taxes greater than those that are paid by native citizens of the contracting parties, respectively.

Honduras. Treaty of 1864:

ART. 9. The citizens of the United States residing in the Republic of Honduras, and the citizens of the Republic of Honduras residing in the United States, shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, either by sea or by land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions; and they shall not be compelled, under any pretext whatsoever, to pay other ordinary charges, requisitions, or taxes greater than those that are paid by native citizens of the contracting parties, respectively.

Italy. Treaty of 1871:

ART. 3. They shall, however, be exempt in their respective territories from compulsory military service, either on land or sea, in the regular forces, or in the national guard, or in the militia. They shall likewise be exempt from any contributions whatever, in kind or in money, to be levied in compensation for personal services.

Japan. Treaty of 1894:

ARTICLE 1. The citizens or subjects of either of the contracting parties residing in the territories of the other shall be exempt from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether in the army, navy, national guard, or militia; from all contributions imposed in lieu of personal service; and from all forced loans or military exactions or contributions.

Paraguay. Treaty of 1859:

ART. 11. The citizens of the United States of America residing in the territories of the Republic of Paraguay, and the citizens of the Republic of Paraguay residing in the United States of America, shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whatsoever, whether by sea or land, and from all forced loans or military exactions or requisitions; and they shall not be compelled to pay any charges, requisitions, or taxes other or higher than those that are or may be paid by native citizens.

Serbia. Treaty of 1881:

Citizens of the United States in Serbia and Serbian subjects in the United States shall be reciprocally exempted from all personal service, whether in the army by land or by sea; whether in the national guard or militia; from billeting; from all contributions, whether pecuniary or in kind, destined as a compensation for personal service; from all forced loans, and from all military exactions or requisitions. The liabilities, however, arising out of the possession of real property and for military loans and requisitions to which all the natives might be called upon to contribute as proprietors of real property or as farmers, shall be excepted.

Spain. Treaty of 1902:

ART. 5. The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall be exempt in the territories of the other from all compulsory military service, by land or sea, and from all pecuniary contributions in lieu of such, as well as from all obligatory official functions whatsoever.

Switzerland. Convention of 1850:

ART. 2. The citizens of one of the two countries, residing or established in the other, shall be free from personal military service; but they shall be liable to the pecuniary or material contributions which may be required, by way of compensation, from citizens of the country where they reside, who are exempted from the said service.

Tonga. Treaty of 1886:

ART. 9. All citizens of the United States residing in the Tonga Islands, and Tongan subjects residing in the United States, shall be exempted from all compulsory military service whether by sea or land, and from all forced loans, military requisitions, and quartering of troops.

B. EXEMPTIONS IN FAVOR OF CONSULAR OFFICERS ONLY.

Austria-Hungary. Consular convention of 1870:

ART. 2. The consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents, their chancellors, and other consular officers, if they are citizens of the State which appoints them, shall be exempt from military billeting, from service in the militia or the National Guard, and other duties of the same nature.

Belgium. Consular convention of 1880:

ART. 3. Consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents, citizens of the State by which they are appointed, shall be exempt from military billeting, from service in the Regular Army or Navy, in the militia, or in the National Guard.

Brazil. Treaty of 1828:

ART. 30. It is likewise agreed that the consuls, their secretaries, officers, and persons attached to the service of consuls, they not being citizens or subjects of the country in which the consul resides, shall be exempt from all public service.

Colombia. Consular convention of 1850:

ART. 5 (3). The consuls and their chancellors or secretaries shall be exempt from all public service and from contributions, personal and extraordinary, imposed in the country where they reside. This exemption does not comprehend the consuls or their chancellors or secretaries who may be natives of the country in which they reside.

Denmark. Convention of 1826:

ART. 10. It is likewise agreed that the consuls and persons attached to their necessary service, they not being natives of the country in which the consul resides, shall be exempt from all public service.

France. Consular convention of 1853:

ART. 2. The consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, or consular agents of the United States and France shall enjoy in the two countries exemption from military billeting, from service in the militia or the national guard, and other duties of the same nature.

Greece. Consular convention of 1902:

ART. 3. Consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents, citizens of the State by which they are appointed, shall be exempt from military billeting, from a service in the regular army or navy, in the militia, or in the national guard.

Netherlands. Consular convention of 1878:

ART. 3. The respective consuls general, vice consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, consular agents, consular pupils, and consular clerks of the high contracting parties, being citizens or subjects of the country which has appointed them shall be exempted from military billeting and contributions, and from all military service by land or by sea, whether in the regular army, in the national or civic guard, or in the militia.

Roumania. Consular convention of 1881:

ART. 3. Consuls general, consuls, vice consuls, and consular agents, citizens of the State by which they are appointed, shall be exempt from military billeting, from service in the regular army or navy, in the militia, or in the national guard.

Paragraph 3 of section 1 would enable this Government to classify the subjects of any country allied with the enemy country not deemed suitable for military service, and to utilize their services for other necessary purposes.

Paragraph 4 of section 1 exempts from the operation of the draft subjects of a country who are not permitted to become citizens of the United States.

Section 2 authorizes the enlistment in the military or naval forces of the United States of any person not an alien enemy who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and if otherwise qualified appointment and commission as an officer.

There are in the military service of the countries now at war with the enemy country a large number of American citizens who have taken an obligation or oath which has the effect of expatriating them. Being engaged on the same side of the conflict as the United States and having entered the service of these countries before the United States declared war, these men, some of whom have risen to high rank in foreign armies, are unable to enter the military service of the United States. This country ought to be in a position to avail itself of the experience and services of these men, and section 3 will restore them to their former status as American citizens.

Section 4 will grant the rights of citizenship to aliens who have prior to the approval of the act declared their intention of becoming citizens and who serve throughout the existing emergency in the military or naval forces of the United States, or who may be discharged on account of disability incurred in the line of duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to draft certain aliens into the military service of the United States, and for other purposes."

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4960) to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The next amendment was in section 6, page 15, line 22, before the word "President," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the"; on page 16, line 5, after the words "of the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; in line 10, before the word "shall," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President," and insert "President"; in line 11, before the word "may," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; in line 12, after the word "clerks," to insert "attorneys"; in line 15, after the word "act," to strike out "and he may in his discretion accept the voluntary services of individuals therefor"; in line 21, before the word "shall," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; and on page 17, line 2, after the word "thereof," to strike out "Provided, That no person shall be appointed who is liable to be drafted into the military service of the United States," so as to make the clause read:

Sec. 6. That the President is authorized to appoint, prescribe the duties of, and fix the salary (not to exceed $5,000 per annum) of an official to be known as the alien property custodian, who shall be empowered to receive all money and property in the United States due or belonging to an enemy, or ally of enemy, which may be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to said custodian under the provisions of this act; and to hold, administer, and account for the same under the general direction of the President and as provided in this act. The alien property custodian shall give such bond or bonds, and in such form and amount, and with such security as the President shall prescribe. The President may further employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and fix the compensation of such clerks, attorneys, investigators, accountants, and other employees as he may find necessary for the due administration of the provisions of this act: Provided, That such clerks, investigators, accountants, and other employees shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law: Provided further, That the President shall cause a detailed report to be made to Congress on the 1st day of January of each year of all proceedings had under this act during the year preceding. Such report shall contain a list of all persons appointed or employed, with the salary or compensation paid to each, and a statement of the different kinds of property taken into custody and the disposition made thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 17, line 9, after the words "as the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the"; in line 12, before the word "may" to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; in line 14, after the word "stockholder," to strike out "who is" and insert "known to be or whom such corporation, association, company, or trustee has reasonable cause to believe to be"; in line 18, after "United States," to insert a comma; and in line 21, after "United States," to insert a comma, so as to make the section read:

Sec. 7. (a) That every corporation incorporated within the United States, and every unincorporated association, or company, or trustee, or trustees within the United States, issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests, shall, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and within 60 days after the passage of this act, and at such other times thereafter as the President may require, transmit to the alien property custodian a full list, duly sworn to, of every officer, director, or stockholder known to be or whom such corporation, association, company, or trustee has reasonable cause to believe to be an enemy or ally of enemy resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any ally or any nation with which the United States is at war, together with the amount of stock or shares owned by each such officer, director, or stockholder, or in which he has any interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the top of page 18, to insert:

The President may also require a similar list to be transmitted of all stock or shares owned on February 3, 1917, by any person now defined as an enemy or ally of enemy, or in which any such person had any interest; and he may also require a list to be transmitted of all cases in which said corporations, association, company, or trustee has reasonable cause to believe that the stock or shares of February 3, 1917, were owned or are owned by such enemy or ally of enemy, though standing on the books in the name of another: Provided, however, That the name of any such officer, director, or stockholder shall be stricken permanently or temporarily from such list by the alien property custodian when he shall be satisfied that he is not such enemy or ally of enemy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 15, to strike out:

Any person in the United States holding or having custody or control of any property, beneficial or otherwise, alone or jointly with another or others, for or on behalf of an enemy or ally of enemy, and any person in the United States indebted in any way to an enemy or ally of enemy shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe, and within 30 days after the passage of this act, or within 30 days after such property shall have come within his custody or control, or after such debt shall have become due, report the fact to the alien property custodian by written statement under oath, containing such particulars as said custodian shall require.

And insert:

Any person in the United States who holds or has or shall hold or have custody or control of any property, beneficial or otherwise, alone or jointly with others, of, for, or on behalf of an enemy or ally of enemy, or of any person whom he may have reasonable cause to believe to be an enemy or ally of enemy, and any person in the United States who is or shall be indebted in any way to an enemy or ally of enemy, or to any person whom he may have reasonable cause to believe to be an enemy or ally of enemy, shall, with such exceptions and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, and within 30 days after the passage of this act, or within 30 days after such property shall come within his custody or control, or after such debt shall become due, report the fact to the alien-property custodian by written statement under oath, containing such particulars as said custodian shall require. The President may also require a similar report of all property so held, of, for, or on behalf of, and of all debts so owed to, any person now defined as an enemy or ally of enemy, on February 3, 1917: Provided, That the name of any person shall be stricken from the said report by the alien-property custodian, either temporarily or permanently, when he shall be satisfied that such person is not an enemy or ally of enemy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 4, before the word "may," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to make the clause read:

The President may extend the time for filing the lists or reports required by this section for an additional period not exceeding 90 days.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 6, to strike out:

(b) If any property, money, or other property so held or so owned shall have been, after the beginning of the war, conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to, for the account or benefit of or in trust for an enemy by any person not holding a license under the provisions of this act, with knowledge or with reasonable cause to believe that such was the nature of the transaction, such assignment, conveyance, transfer, delivery, or payment shall be void: Provided, That the foregoing provisions of this subsection (b) shall not apply to any payment of money or delivery of property made prior to the passage of this act in performance or in satisfaction of an obligation or right incurred or created prior to the beginning of the war, where such payment or delivery was made to an agent or trustee appointed prior to the beginning of the war, and who at the time of such payment or delivery had authority to receive the same and there was no reasonable ground to believe that such agent or trustee intended to transmit, or to connive in the transmission of, such money or property to an enemy during the continuance of the war: Provided further, That no person shall by virtue of any assignment, indorsement, delivery, or transfer of any debt, obligation, or chose in action, made or to be made in his favor by or on behalf of an enemy or ally of enemy, have any rights or remedies against the debtor, obligor, assignor, indorser, or the person delivering the same, unless under license as provided in this act or was made before the beginning of the war.

And insert:

(b) Nothing in this act contained shall render valid or legal, or be construed to recognize as valid or legal, any act or transaction constituting trade with, to, from, for or on account of, or on behalf of for the benefit of an enemy performed or engaged in since the beginning of the war and prior to the passage of this act, or any such act or transaction hereafter performed or engaged in except as authorized hereunder, which would otherwise have been or be void, illegal, or invalid at law. No conveyance, transfer, delivery, payment, or loan of money or other property, in violation of section 3 hereof, made after the passage of this act and not under license as herein provided shall confer or create any right or remedy in respect thereof; and no person shall by virtue of any assignment, indorsement, or delivery to him of any debt, bill, note, or other obligation or chose in action by, from, or on behalf of, or on account of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy have any right or remedy against the debtor, obligor, or other person liable to pay, fulfill, or perform the same unless said assignment, indorsement, or delivery was made prior to the beginning of the war or shall be made under license as herein provided; and any person who knowingly pays, discharges, or satisfies any such debt, note, bill, or other obligation or chose in action shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed to violate section 3 hereof: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall prevent the carrying out, completion, or performance of any contract, agreement, or obligation originally made with or entered into by an enemy or ally of enemy where, prior to the beginning of the war and not in contemplation thereof, the interest of such enemy or ally of enemy devolved by assignment or otherwise upon a person not an enemy or ally of enemy, and no enemy or ally of enemy will be benefited by such carrying out, completion, or performance otherwise than by release from obligation thereunder.

Nothing in this act shall be deemed to prevent payment of money belonging or owing to an enemy or ally of enemy to a person within the United States, not an enemy or ally of enemy, for the benefit of such person or of any other person within the United States, not an enemy or ally of enemy, if the funds so paid shall have been received prior to the beginning of the war and such payments arise out of transactions entered into prior to the beginning of the war, and not in contemplation thereof: Provided, That such payment shall not be made without the license of the President, general or special, as provided in this act.

Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the prosecution of any suit or action at law or in equity in any court within the United States by an enemy or ally of enemy prior to the end of the war, except as provided in section 10 hereof: Provided, however, That an enemy or ally of enemy licensed to do business under this act may prosecute and maintain any such suit or action so far as the same arises solely out of the business transacted within the United States under such license and so long as such license remains in full force and effect: And provided further, That an enemy or ally of enemy may defend by counsel any suit in equity or action at law which may be brought against him.

Mr. RANDELL. On behalf of the committee I ask leave to submit an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "provided" and the semicolon in line 4, page 22, insert "or unless, if made after the beginning of the war and prior to the date of passage of the act, the person to whom the same was made shall prove lack of knowledge and of reasonable cause to believe on his part that the same was made by, from, or on behalf of, or on account of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On behalf of the committee I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Insert a new paragraph at the end of subsection (b) of section 7 of page 23, line 15, as follows:

Receipt of notice from the President to the effect that he has reasonable ground to believe that any person is an enemy or ally of enemy shall be prima facie defense to anyone receiving same, in any suit or action at law or in equity brought or maintained, or to any right or set-off or recoupment asserted by, such person and based on failure to complete, or perform since the beginning of the war any contract or other obligation. In any prosecution under section 15 hereof, proof of receipt of notice from the President to the effect that he has reasonable cause to believe that any person is an enemy or ally of enemy shall be prima facie evidence that the person receiving such notice has reasonable cause to believe such other person to be an enemy or ally of enemy within the meaning of section 3 hereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 17, before the word "President," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce, by direction of the," and in line 18, after the words "belonging to," to strike out "an enemy or ally of enemy or which the Secretary of Commerce, after investigation, shall determine is owing to or belongs to an enemy or ally of enemy, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the alien-property custodian, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe. And if not so required, any person, not an enemy, or ally of enemy, who owes to an enemy, or ally of enemy, any money or other property, or to whom any obligation or form of liability is presented for payment, may, at his option, pay, convey, transfer, assign, or deliver to the alien-property custodian said money or other property so due, with such exceptions and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce, with approval of the President, shall prescribe," and insert "or held for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, which the President after investigation shall determine is so owing or so belongs or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the alien-property custodian," so as to read:

(c) If the President shall so require, any money or other property owing or belonging to or held for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, which the President after investigation shall determine is so owing or so belongs or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the alien-property custodian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 13, to insert:

(d) If not required to pay, convey, transfer, assign, or deliver under the provisions of subsection (c) hereof, any person not an enemy or ally of enemy who owes to, or holds for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, any money or other property, or to whom any obligation or form of liability to such enemy or ally of enemy is presented for payment, may, at his option, with the consent of the President, pay, convey, transfer, assign, or deliver to the alien-property custodian said money or other property under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 1, before the word "No," to strike out "(d)" and insert "(e)," and in line 3, after the words "by the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to make the clause read:

(e) No person shall be held liable in any court for or in respect to anything done or omitted in pursuance of any order, rule, or regulation made by the President under the authority of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 5, after the word "payment," to insert "conveyance, transfer, assignment"; in line 6, after the word "property," where it occurs the first time, to insert "made"; in the same line, after the word "custodian," to strike out "which this act authorizes" and insert "hereunder"; in line 9, after the word "making" to strike out "such payment or delivery" and insert "the same"; in the same line, after the words "extent of," to strike out "such payment or delivery" and insert "same"; in line 12, before the word "may" to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; in line 15, after the word "shall," to insert "in case of payment to the alien property custodian of any debt or obligation owed to an enemy or ally of enemy"; in line 18, after the word "obligation," to strike out "respecting,"; in line 19, after the word "security," to insert "therefor in which such enemy or ally of enemy had any right or interest"; in line 21, after the word "property," to strike out "custodian for, the payment or delivery of the moneys so paid or property so delivered, with like force and effect as if they, respectively, were attorneys duly appointed by the obligee or owner" and insert "custodian, with like effect as if he or they, respectively, were duly appointed by the enemy or ally of enemy, creditor, or obligee"; on page 26, line 2, before the word "shall" to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; and in line 5, after the words "in all," to strike out "United States courts or other," so as to make the section read:

Any payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery of money or property made to the alien-property custodian thereunder shall be a full acquittance and discharge for all purposes of the obligation of the person making the same to the extent of same. The alien-property custodian and such other persons as the President may appoint shall have power to execute, acknowledge, and deliver any such instrument or instruments as may be necessary or proper to evidence upon the record or otherwise such acquittance and discharge, and shall, in case of payment to the alien-property custodian of any debt or obligation owed to an enemy or ally of enemy, deliver up any notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness or obligation, or any security therefor in which such enemy or ally of enemy had any right or interest that may have come into the possession of the alien-property custodian, with like effect as if he or they respectively were duly appointed by the enemy or ally of enemy, creditor, or obligee. The President shall issue to every person so appointed a certificate of the appointment and authority of such person, and such certificate shall be received in evidence in all courts within the United States. Whenever any such certificate of authority shall be offered to any registrar, clerk, or other recording officer, Federal or otherwise, within the United States, such officer shall record the same in like manner as a power of attorney, and such record or a duly certified copy thereof shall be received in evidence in all courts of the United States or other courts within the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 13, to strike out:

SEC. 8. That any person, not an enemy, or ally of enemy, holding a mortgage, pledge, or lien on or other right in the nature of security in property of an enemy, or ally of enemy, may, after default, dispose of such property, under such rules and regulations and after such notice as the Secretary of Commerce, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe; and such notice shall have in all respects the same force and effect as if duly served upon the enemy, or ally of enemy, personally: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall require that notice shall be given in any case in which by law or by the terms of the contract by which such mortgage, pledge, lien, or other right was created, no notice was, prior to the passage of this act, required; and that in case where by law or the terms of such contract notice is required, no longer period of notice is or shall be required: And provided further, That if on any such disposition a surplus shall remain after the satisfaction of such mortgage, pledge, lien, or other right in the nature of security, notice of that fact shall be given to the Secretary of Commerce pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and such surplus shall be held subject to the further order of the Secretary of Commerce.

That any contract entered into prior to the beginning of the war between any citizen of the United States or any corporation organized within the United States and an enemy or ally of enemy, the terms of which provide for a termination thereof upon notice from such citizen or corporation, may be terminated by like notice served by such citizen or corporation upon the alien property custodian, and said notice so served shall have in all respects the same force and effect as if duly served upon the enemy or ally of enemy personally, in accordance with the terms of the contract.

And insert:

SEC. 8. (a) That any person not an enemy or ally of enemy holding a lawful mortgage, pledge, or lien, or other right in the nature of security in property of an enemy or ally of enemy which, by law or by the terms of the instrument creating such mortgage, pledge, or lien, or right, may be disposed of on notice or presentation or demand, and any person not an enemy or ally of enemy who is a party to any lawful contract with an enemy or ally of enemy, the terms of which provide for a termination thereof upon notice or for acceleration of maturity on presentation or demand, may continue to hold said property, and, after default, may dispose of the property in accordance with the laws of the State or may terminate or mature such contract by notice or presentation or demand served or made on the alien property custodian in accordance with the law and the terms of such instrument or contract and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe; and such notice and such presentation and demand shall have,

in all respects, the same force and effect as if duly served or made upon the enemy or ally of enemy personally: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall require that notice or presentation or demand shall be served or made in any case in which, by law or by the terms of said instrument or contract, no notice, presentation, or demand was, prior to the passage of this act, required; and that in case where, by law or by the terms of such instrument or contract, notice is required, no longer period of notice shall be required: Provided further, That if, on any such disposition of property, a surplus shall remain after the satisfaction of the mortgage, pledge, lien, or other right in the nature of security, notice of that fact shall be given to the President pursuant to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and such surplus shall be held subject to his further order.

(b) That any contract entered into prior to the beginning of the war between any citizen of the United States or any corporation organized within the United States, and an enemy or ally of an enemy, the terms of which provide for the delivery, during or after any war in which a present enemy or ally of enemy nation has been or is now engaged, of anything produced, mined, or manufactured in the United States, may be abrogated by such citizen or corporation by serving 30 days' notice in writing upon the alien property custodian of his or its election to abrogate such contract.

(c) The running of any statute of limitations shall be suspended with reference to the rights or remedies on any contract or obligation entered into prior to the beginning of the war between parties neither of whom is an enemy or ally of enemy, and containing any promise to pay or liability for payment which is evidenced by drafts or other commercial paper drawn against or secured by funds or other property situated in an enemy or ally of enemy country, and no suit shall be maintained on any such contract or obligation in any court within the United States until after the end of the war, or until the said funds or property shall be released for the payment or satisfaction of such contract or obligation: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the suspension of the running of the statute of limitations in all other cases where such suspension would occur under existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 30, line 17, before the word "notice," to strike out "statement or"; in line 19, after the word "require," to strike out "and, if said person so filing notice shall," and insert "and the President, if application is made therefor by the claimant, may, with the assent of the owner of said property and of all persons claiming any right, title, or interest therein, order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery to said claimant of the money or other property so held by the alien property custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States or of the interest therein to which the President shall determine said claimant is entitled: Provided, That no such order by the President shall bar any person from the prosecution of any suit at law or in equity against the claimant to establish any right, title, or interest which he may have in such money or other property. If the President shall not so order within 60 days after the filing of such application, or if the claimant shall have filed the notice as above required and shall have made no application to the Secretary of Commerce, said claimant may"; in line 13, before the word "months," to strike out "three" and insert "six"; in line 20, after the word "claimed," to insert "and if suit shall be so instituted"; in line 24, after the word "custodian," to insert a comma; on page 32, line 3, before the word "assignment," to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "assignment," to insert "or delivery"; and in line 7, after the word "terminated" to strike out:

Provided, That if any property belonging to an enemy or ally of the enemy insurance company be delivered to the alien-property custodian or deposited in the Treasury of the United States under the provisions of this act, and any insurance company not an enemy or ally of the enemy shall claim any right, title, or interest in such property which has been so delivered to the alien-property custodian or to the Treasurer of the United States, such insurance company not an enemy or ally of the enemy may institute suit in equity in the District Court of the United States for the district in which the principal office of such company is located, or in the Court of Claims, for the purpose of establishing its right, title, or interest and procuring a decree thereon, and such court may thereupon, on proper showing, direct that the property in the custody of the alien-property custodian or in the Treasury of the United States to which such company may show itself to be thus entitled, be delivered to such company, and such case may be heard and determined and the property delivered before the end of the war. The alien-property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall be made party defendant to such suit.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That any person, not an enemy or ally of enemy, claiming any interest, right, or title in any money or other property which may have been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien-property custodian hereunder, and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States, or to whom any debt may be owing from an enemy or ally of enemy, whose property or any part thereof shall have been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien-property custodian hereunder, and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States, may file with the said custodian a notice of his claim under oath and in such form and containing such particulars as the said custodian shall require; and the President, if application is made therefor by the claimant, may, with the assent of the owner of said property and of all persons claiming any right, title, or interest therein, order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery to said claimant of the money or other property so held by the alien-property custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States or of the interest therein to which the President shall determine said claimant is entitled: Provided, That no such order by the President shall bar any person from the prosecution of any suit at law or in equity against the claimant to establish any right, title, or interest which he may have in such money or other property. If the President shall not so order within 60 days after the filing of such application, or if the claimant shall have filed the notice as above required and shall have made no application to the President, said claimant may, at any time before the expiration of six months after the end of the war, institute a suit in equity in the district court of the United States for the district in which such claimant resides; or, if a corporation, where it has its principal place of business (to which suit the alien-property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall be made a party defendant), to establish the interest, right, title, or debt so claimed, and if suit shall be so instituted then the money or other property of the enemy or ally of enemy against whom such interest, right, or title is asserted or debt claimed shall be retained in the custody of the alien-property custodian, or in the Treasury of the United States, as provided in this act, and until any final judgment or decree which shall be entered in favor of the claimant shall be fully satisfied by payment or conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery by the defendant or by the alien-property custodian or Treasurer of the United States on order of the court, or until final judgment or decree shall be entered against the claimant, or suit otherwise terminated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 9, to strike out:

That if any property belonging to a loyal citizen of the United States who, by virtue of his residence in a foreign country, comes within the definition of the word "enemy" as used in this act is delivered to the alien property custodian or deposited in the Treasury of the United States under the provisions of this act, and the owner thereof afterwards removes to a neutral country or returns to the United States; or if it is ascertained that such owner was not in fact, by virtue of his residence when this act takes effect, properly included within the definition of the word "enemy" as used herein; or if by inheritance from or by will duly executed by one who comes within the definition of the word "enemy" as used herein, a citizen of the United States residing therein becomes entitled to all or any part of or interest in any property which has been so delivered to the alien property custodian or to the Treasurer of the United States, the Secretary of Commerce may, upon application, by or on behalf of such person and proper showing of facts, authorize and direct the return to him, in such manner as the Secretary shall determine, of any such property or any part or interest therein to which he may be so entitled. If the Secretary of Commerce does not grant such application within three months after the same is made, the person so entitled may institute a suit in equity in the district court of the United States for the district in which such person resides or in the Court of Claims for the purpose of establishing his right and procuring a decree thereon, and such court may thereupon, on proper showing, direct that the property in the custody of the alien property custodian or in the Treasury of the United States, to which the claimant may show himself to be thus entitled, be delivered to him, and such case may be heard and determined and the property returned before the end of the war. The alien property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall be made party defendant to such suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 35, line 1, after the word "law," to insert "and fees for attorneys or agents for filing and prosecuting such applications"; in line 7, before the word "period," to strike out "prescribed"; and in the same line, after the word "period," to insert "prescribed by law," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 10. That nothing contained in this act shall be held to make unlawful any of the following acts:

(a) An enemy, or ally of enemy, may file and prosecute in the United States an application for letters patent, or for registration of trademark, print, label, or copyright, and may pay any fees therefor in accordance with and as required by the provisions of existing law and fees for attorneys or agents for filing and prosecuting such applications. Any such enemy, or ally of enemy, who is unable during war, or within six months thereafter, on account of conditions arising out of war, to file any such application, or to pay any official fee, or to take any action required by law within the period prescribed by law, may be granted an extension of nine months beyond the expiration of said period, provided the nation of which the said applicant is a citizen, subject, or corporation shall extend substantially similar privileges to citizens and corporations of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 22, after the words "to the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; and in line 23, after the word "prosecute," to insert "and to pay the fees required by law and customary agents' fees, the maximum amount of which in each case shall be subject to the control of the President," so as to make the clause read:

(b) Any citizen of the United States, or any corporation organized within the United States, may pay to an enemy or ally of enemy any tax, annuity, or fee which may be required by the laws of such enemy or ally of enemy nation in relation to patents and trade-marks, prints, labels, and copyrights; and any such citizen or corporation may file and prosecute an application for letters patent or for registration of trademark, print, label, or copyright in the country of an enemy, or of an ally of enemy, after first submitting such application to the President and receiving license so to file and prosecute, and to pay the fees required by law and customary agents' fees, the maximum amount of which in each case shall be subject to the control of the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 5, after the words "patent or," to insert "to use any trade-mark, print, label, or"; in line 7, after the word "enemy," to insert "resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any ally or any nation with which the United States is at war"; in line 22, before the word "copyrighted," to insert "trade-mark, print, label, or"; in line 24, after the word "license," to insert "including the fixing of prices"; in line 25, after the word "which," to strike out "it" and insert "such license"; and on page 37, line 3, after the word "provided," to insert: "Such license shall be a complete defense to any suit at law or in equity instituted by the enemy or ally of enemy owners of the letters patent, trade-mark, print, label or copyright, or otherwise, against the licensee for infringement or for damages, royalty, or other money award on account of anything done by the licensee under such license, except as provided in subsection (f) hereof," so as to make the clause read:

(c) Any citizen of the United States or any corporation organized within the United States who desires to manufacture, or cause to be manufactured, a machine, manufacture, composition of matter, or design, or to carry on, or cause to be carried on, a process under any patent or to use any trade-mark, print, label, or copyrighted matter owned or controlled by an enemy or ally of enemy resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident within the territory, or a subject or citizen residing outside of the United States, of any ally or any nation with which the United States is at war, at any time during the existence of a state of war may apply to the Federal Trade Commission for a license; and said commission is hereby authorized to grant such a license, nonexclusive or exclusive as it shall deem best, provided it shall be of the opinion that such grant is for the public welfare, and that the applicant is able and intends in good faith to manufacture, or cause to be manufactured, the machine, manufacture, composition of matter, or design, or to carry on, or cause to be carried on, the process or to use the trade-mark, print, label, or copyrighted matter. The Federal Trade Commission may prescribe the conditions of this license, including the fixing of prices and the rules and regulations under which such license may be granted and the fee which shall be charged therefor, not exceeding $100, and not exceeding 1 per cent of the fund deposited as hereinafter provided. Such license shall be a complete defense to any suit at law or in equity instituted by the enemy or ally of enemy owners of the letters patent, trade-mark, print, label, or copyright, or otherwise, against the licensee for infringement or for damages, royalty, or other money award on account of anything done by the licensee under such license, except as provided in subsection (f) hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 36, beginning in line 14, I move to strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 36, line 14, after the word "and," I move to strike out the words "said commission" and to insert "the President," so that it will read: "and the President is hereby authorized to grant such a license."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 36, at the beginning of line 23, I move to strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission" and to insert "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 37, line 12, after the word "license," to insert "and of the prices received"; in line 15, after the word "custodian," to strike out "(or to such other officer as the President shall direct)"; in line 19, before the word "copyrighted," to insert "trade-mark, print, label or"; in line 21, after the word "inventions," to insert "trade-marks, prints, labels"; in line 24, after the word "custodian," to strike out "(or by such other officer as the President shall direct)"; on page 38, line 2, after the word "patent," to insert "trade-mark, print, label"; and in line 5, after the word "custodian," to strike out "or such other officer as the President shall direct," so as to make the clause read:

(d) The licensee shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a full statement of the extent of the use and enjoyment of the license, and of the prices received in such form and at such stated periods (at least annually) as the commission may prescribe; and the licensee shall pay at such times as may be required to the alien property custodian not to exceed 5 per cent of the gross sums received by the licensee from the sale of said inventions or use of the trade-mark, print, label, or copyrighted matter, or, if such commission shall so order, 5 per cent of the value of the use of such inventions, trade-marks, prints, labels, or copyrighted matter to the licensee as established by the Federal Trade Commission; and sums so paid shall be deposited by said alien property custodian forthwith in the Treasury of the United States as a trust fund for the said licensee and for the owner of the said patent, trade-mark, print, label, or copyright registration as hereinafter provided, to be paid from the Treasury upon order of the court, as provided in subdivision (f) of this section, or upon the direction of the alien property custodian.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 37, in lines 10 and 11, I move to strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission" and insert "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 37, line 14, I move to strike out the word "commission" and to insert "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 37, lines 19 and 20, I move to strike out the words "such commission" and to insert "the President."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 37, in lines 22 and 23, I move to strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission" and to insert the word "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, line 10, after the word "patent," to insert "trade-mark, print, label," so as to make the clause read:

(e) Unless surrendered or terminated as provided in this act, any license granted hereunder shall continue during the term fixed in the license, or in the absence of any such limitation during the term of the patent, trade-mark, print, label, or copyright registration under which it is granted. Upon violation by the licensee of any of the provisions of this act, or of the conditions of the license, the Federal Trade Commission may, after due notice and hearing, cancel any license granted by it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On page 38, line 14, I move to strike out the words "Federal Trade Commission" and to insert "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, line 16, after the word "patent," to insert "trade-mark, print, label"; in line 25, after the word "invention," to insert "trade-mark, print, label"; on page 39, line 3, after the word "custodian," to strike out "(or with such other officer as the President shall direct)"; in line 14, before the word "may," to strike out "fact" and insert "facts"; in line 17, after the word "custodian," to strike out "(or such other officer as the President shall direct)"; and in line 22, after the word "custodian," to strike out "(or such other officer as the President shall direct)," so as to make the clause read:

(f) The owner of any patent, trade-mark, print, label, or copyright under which a license is granted hereunder may, after the end of the war and until the expiration of the year thereafter, file a bill in equity against the licensee in the district court of the United States for the district in which the said licensee resides, or, if a corporation, in which it has its principal place of business (to which suit the Treasurer of the United States shall be made a party), for recovery from the said licensee for all use and enjoyment of the said patented invention, trade-mark, print, label, or copyrighted matter: Provided, however, That whenever suit is brought, as above, notice shall be filed with the alien property custodian within 30 days after date of entry of suit; Provided further, That the licensee may make any and all defenses which would be available were no license granted. The court on due proceedings had may adjudge and decree to the said owner payment of a reasonable royalty. The amount of said judgment and decree, when final, shall be paid on order of the court to the owner of the patent from the fund deposited by the licensee, so far as such deposit will satisfy said judgment and decree; and the said payment shall be in full or partial satisfaction of said judgment and decree, as the facts may appear; and if, after payment of all such judgments and decrees, there shall remain any balance of said deposit such balance shall be repaid to the licensee on order of the alien property custodian. If no suit is brought within one year after the end of the war, or no notice is filed as above required, then the licensee shall not be liable to make any further deposits, and all funds deposited by him shall be repaid to him on order of the alien property custodian. Upon entry of suit and notice filed as above required, or upon repayment of funds as above provided, the liability of the licensee to make further reports to the Federal Trade Commission shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the words "Federal Trade Commission," in line 1, page 40, should be stricken out and the word "President" substituted.

Mr. RANDELL. That is right. I ask that that amendment be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "Federal Trade Commission," and insert "President."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 40, line 14, after the word "patent," to insert "trade-mark, print, label"; and in line 17, after the word "war," to insert: "Provided, That no final judgment or decree shall be entered in favor of such enemy or ally of enemy by any court except after 30 days' notice to the alien-property custodian," so as to make the clause read:

(g) Any enemy, or ally of enemy, may institute and prosecute suits in equity against any person other than a licensee under this act to enjoin infringement of letters patent, trade-mark, print, label, and copyrights in the United States owned or controlled by said enemy or ally of enemy, in the same manner and to the extent that he would be entitled so to do if the United States was not at war: Provided, That no final judgment or decree shall be entered in favor of such enemy or ally of enemy by any court except after 30 days' notice to the alien-property custodian.

Mr. REED. I desire to inquire whether there is any place in the bill specifying the character of notice to be given?

Mr. RANDELL. I do not know that any provision in the bill specifies as to that.

Mr. REED. If not, it would seem to me that some language ought to be placed in the bill to cover that. If not, I am afraid it will lead to all kinds of difficulties and disputes.

Mr. RANDELL. I think there would be no objection to making such a correction as the Senator indicates, and if he has an amendment prepared, I will be glad to have him present it.

Mr. REED. I will try to prepare an amendment to cure it.

Mr. RANDELL. There is nothing in the bill along that line, and there is absolutely no objection to adopting the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. It might benefit the bill if it were made more specific in that respect. I will ask the Senator to prepare the amendment and we can return to that portion of the bill later.

Mr. REED. I will try to prepare it in a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment can be agreed to now, and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri can be added later.

Mr. REED. With the understanding that I reserve the right to offer the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill in paragraph (g) simply provides that the notice shall be given "to the alien-property custodian."

Mr. RANDELL. It does not say how it shall be given, and I think it would probably be well to specify as to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 40, line 21, after "(h)," to strike out:

Except as provided in this section, nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the prosecution or maintenance of any suit or action at law or in equity by an enemy or ally of enemy in any court within the United States, prior to the end of the war: Provided, however, That an enemy or ally of enemy may defend by counsel any suit in equity or action at law which may be brought against him.

So as to make the clause read:

(h) All powers of attorney heretofore or hereafter granted by an enemy or ally of enemy to any person within the United States, in so far as they may be requisite to the performance of acts authorized in subsections (a) and (g) of this section, shall be valid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 7, to insert:

(i) Whenever the publication of an invention by the granting of a patent may, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents, be detrimental to the public safety or defense, or may assist the enemy or endanger the successful prosecution of the war, he may order that the invention be kept secret and withhold the grant of a patent until the end of the war: Provided, That the invention disclosed in the application for said patent may be held abandoned upon it being established before or by the commissioner that, in violation of said order, said invention has been published or that an application for a patent therefor has been filed in any other country, by the inventor or his assigns or legal representatives, without the consent or approval of the commissioner or under a license of the President.

When an applicant whose patent is withheld as herein provided and who faithfully obeys the order of the Commissioner of Patents above referred to shall tender his invention to the Government of the United States for its use, he shall, if he ultimately receives a patent, have the right to sue for compensation in the Court of Claims, such right to compensation to begin from the date of the use of the invention by the Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that yesterday we passed in the Senate a bill almost identical with that amendment.

Mr. RANDELL. Does the Senator allude to the amendment inserting paragraph (i)?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; the entire amendment. The bill to which I refer will be found on page 6936 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at the bottom of the first column. I do not at all wish to oppose the adoption of this amendment, embracing paragraph (i), if upon consideration the Senator wants to press it, only we ought not to have both provisions enacted into law, because, while they are almost identically the same, the bill passed by the Senate yesterday leaves the issuing of the license to the Secretary of Commerce and states "as provided by law." So there must be some existing law upon the subject, leaving it to the Secretary of Commerce, whereas the amendment of the committee would leave it to the President. As I have said, I do not object at all to the Senate adopting this amendment, but I hope the conference committee will consider the bill that was passed by the Senate yesterday and see that there shall not be any ultimate conflict between the two; that is all.

Mr. RANDELL. I will say to the Senator that the conferees will certainly give very careful consideration to it. I understand that the measure passed by the Senate yesterday has not been passed by the House. The bill we have under consideration now, of course, has already passed the House, and will probably be enacted into law in a very few days. This is a most important provision. Whether it goes in this bill or the other bill does not matter materially, so long as it does become a law.

Now, in regard to giving this power to the President rather than to the Secretary of Commerce, as provided in the other bill, I will say that all of the powers under the pending bill are placed in the hands of the President. It was thought best that that should be done. Many very complicated questions will arise under this bill, and the committee came to the conclusion that it was best to vest all these powers in the President, and to allow him to operate through the various governmental agencies as he deems best. I really think it would be better if this power to grant licenses or to withhold publication of patents were vested in the President rather than in the Secretary of Commerce, as the President has general charge of the enforcement of the regulations under this bill, and they are all closely allied. They are all war measures.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree entirely with everything that the Senator has said, Mr. President, and I am almost tempted to move to reconsider the action of the Senate in passing the bill which was passed yesterday; but I have no objection to this amendment at all. I only want to make sure that the House does not pass the other bill; that is all.

Mr. RANDELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought yesterday when that bill was up that perhaps it was not advisable to pass it, but the Senator from Massachusetts asked to have it considered when it was reached on the calendar, and I did not object, although I knew this provision was in the pending bill. This is a better provision, I think, than the one passed yesterday, and is in conformity with the other provisions of this bill, covering the same point exactly as in the bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is almost verbatim a copy of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely, but the provision in this bill conforms to its other provisions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. When the Senator from Massachusetts comes on the floor I have no doubt he will have no objection to a reconsideration of our action yesterday in passing the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps that can be done. I thought at the time that inasmuch as that was a Senate bill it probably would not get through the House until this bill was acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before that amendment is agreed to, I will say that I thought the Senator had an amendment to offer to it.

Mr. RANDELL. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that on page 41, line 9, the words "Commissioner of Patents" should be stricken out and the word "President" inserted, so as to let the President determine when the public safety is involved? The amendment reads now:

(i) Whenever the publication of an invention by the granting of a patent may, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents, be detrimental to the public safety or defense—

That ought to be left to the President.

Mr. RANDELL. I believe the Senator's suggestion is a good one, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to it. If he will move such an amendment, I will assent to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that change should be made in view of the other changes which have been made in the bill. I may say that personally I have not been in favor of making the changes that have been made here. It was stated, I think, the other day why this was done. When the bill came over here from the House it required certain things to be done by the Secretary of Commerce, which I think were very proper; and under the law as it now exists these duties and responsibilities ought to have been placed upon him. Then it placed certain duties and responsibilities upon the Secretary of the Treasury, which, under existing law, I think it was very proper should be reposed in him; but after the bill was reported to the Senate, even by our committee, it developed that there was some controversy between a couple of Cabinet officers, and, therefore, to avoid that trouble we decided to throw the burden on the President and let him decide as between them. To that I have not made any serious objection, though I do not think it ought to have been done. I simply take the opportunity to say this at this point; but in view of the action of the Senate in confirming the recommendation of the committee, I move on page

41, line 9, to strike out the words "Commissioner of Patents," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "President."

Mr. RANDELL. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. On line 16, on the same page, I think the same change should be made, namely, striking out the word "commissioner" and inserting the word "President." And on lines 20 and 21 striking out the words "commissioner or under a license of the," so that it would read "without the consent or approval of the President."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator, in connection with his last suggestion, that the provision of the amendment there is for establishing before the commissioner that the order was not obeyed. I think it well enough to leave that purely administrative matter of proof to the commissioner and not bother the President about it. That involves no discretion; it seems it involves the determination of a fact as to whether he shall publish it.

Mr. RANDELL. I believe that is a good suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut, and I withdraw my request that the words be stricken out in that place, so that the language will remain just as it is in lines 20 and 21 and as it now is in lines 23 and 24. With those amendments I presume there is no objection to the section.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in lines 23 and 24 the order referred to is an order of the President, and I think the words "Commissioner of Patents" ought to be stricken out in lines 23 and 24.

Mr. RANDELL. There is no objection to that. Strike out "Commissioner of Patents," in lines 23 and 24, and let it read "the President."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if we may return to paragraph 3, on page 40.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us first close up this matter.

Mr. RANDELL. I will ask the Senator from Missouri to allow us to first complete this paragraph.

Mr. REED. Very well; I thought that that had been done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We are going to finish this paragraph before the Senator from Missouri proceeds?

Mr. RANDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then let me suggest that in line 16, inasmuch as the words "Commissioner of Patents," in line 9, have been stricken out and the words "the President" inserted, we had better put in after the word "Commissioner," in line 16, the words "of Patents."

Mr. RANDELL. We have already agreed to strike out the word "Commissioner," in line 16, and have inserted the words "the President."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh!

Mr. RANDELL. It was stricken out on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Senator from Louisiana is incorrect as to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment as it has been amended, so that we may see who is right about it.

The SECRETARY. As amended, the amendment will read:

(1) Whenever the publication of an invention by the granting of a patent may, in the opinion of the President, be detrimental to the public safety or defense, or may assist the enemy or endanger the successful prosecution of the war, he may order that the invention be kept secret and withhold the grant of a patent until the end of the war: Provided, That the invention disclosed in the application for said patent may be held abandoned upon it being established before or by the President that, in violation—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the point where I wanted the words "established before or by the Commissioner" left as they are.

Mr. RANDELL. If we are going to put in the words "the President" in one place, and give him the power, it seems to me, to be consistent, that he ought to be given the power all the way through. I will say that I have no objection at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want it changed unless my point is well taken; but my point is that while it is advisable to have the President determine what is necessary for the public safety and the defense of the country, it is not desirable to have the President determine whether or not an order issued by him has been obeyed, because it can be determined by the Commissioner of Patents whether the applicant for the patent published the invention in defiance of the order of the President just as well as it can be determined by the President himself.

Mr. RANDELL. I will say, Mr. President, that I have no objection. The President certainly would be obliged to act, not only in that matter but in many other matters in this bill, through persons designated by him, and I assume he would designate the Commissioner of Patents. I have no objection to that being put in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana and also to the Senator from Connecticut that the matter in lines 15 and 16 refers to something entirely different from anything either before or after. That reads in this way:

Provided, That the invention disclosed in the application for said patent may be held abandoned—

And so forth. That relates to the abandonment of a patent; and the investigation as to whether it has been abandoned, I think, is very properly to be made by the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is not an investigation as to whether it has been abandoned. It is an investigation as to whether the order not to publish it has been complied with; and if they find that it has not been complied with, then it is abandoned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I see. Well, I think, with the Senator from Connecticut, that the investigation as to whether or not the order has been violated should be made by the Commissioner of Patents rather than by the President.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, there is no objection at all to its remaining as it was; and I move now that it be allowed to remain as it originally was, striking out the word "President," that we have agreed on, and reinserting "Commissioner."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the words "of Patents" ought to be put in there, because they are stricken out above. That should read "Commissioner of Patents."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the words "of Patents" will be inserted after the word "Commissioner"; and, without objection, the amendment as amended will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, referring to paragraph (g), on page 40, I suggest, as the proper amendment to cure what I think is the defect, the following language after the word "custodian" on line 20:

Such notice shall be in writing and may be served in the same manner as civil process of Federal courts.

Mr. RANDELL. That seems to cover the point, Mr. President. I have no objection at all to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 20, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "custodian" and before the period it is proposed to insert—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, without objection. The Senator from Missouri proposes the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the words:

Such notice shall be in writing and may be served in the same manner as civil process of Federal courts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, does the Senator intend that the word "may" there shall have the force of "shall"?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why not say that it "shall" be, then?

Mr. REED. Very well; change it to "shall."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. That completes this section now, I believe.

Mr. POMERENE. What section?

Mr. RANDELL. Section 10. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 4, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

Sec. 11. Whenever during the present war the President shall find that the public safety so requires, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to import into the United States from any country named in such proclamation any article or articles mentioned in such proclamation except at such time or times and under such regulations or orders and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, however, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to have the first part of the amendment stated over again.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought we already had that.

Mr. RANDELL. We have it in regard to exports under the espionage act of June 15 but not as to imports, and it was thought to be absolutely essential in regard to imports also.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, in line 5, it is proposed to change the number of the section from 11 to 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before taking up the next section, I will state that a matter was called to my attention a little while ago in connection with the insurance provision about which I should like a little information.

Mr. RANSDELL. Would the Senator object to our finishing these amendments and then returning to the insurance provision?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; I have no objection.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has also been looking over the insurance section.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought the Secretary was just about to begin a new section.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is about to begin a new section; but it is in the latter part of the bill and the insurance section is section 4, in the first part of the bill. If the Senator has no objection, I should be glad to return to it later.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I have no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 12, before the word "President," to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the," and in line 15, before the word "shall," to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury," and insert "President," so as to make the clause read:

Sec. 12. That all moneys (including checks and drafts payable on demand) paid to or received by the alien property custodian pursuant to this act shall be deposited forthwith in the Treasury of the United States, and may be invested and reinvested by the Secretary of the Treasury in United States bonds or United States certificates of indebtedness, under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe for such deposit, investment, and sale of securities; and as soon after the end of the war as the President shall deem practicable, such securities shall be sold and the proceeds deposited in the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 21, before the words "is authorized," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President"; in line 22, after the word "enemy," to strike out "(under such rules and regulations as may be approved by the President)"; and in line 25, after the word "companies," to strike out "or in the case of tangible personal property," so as to make the clause read:

All other property of an enemy, or ally of enemy, conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the alien property custodian hereunder shall be safely held and administered by him except as herein-after provided; and the President is authorized to designate as a depository or depositaries, of property of an enemy or ally of enemy, any such bank or banks, or trust company or trust companies, other suitable depository or depositaries, located and doing business in the United States as may be recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. The alien-property custodian may deposit with such designated depository or depositaries, or with the Secretary of the Treasury, any stocks, bonds, notes, time drafts, time bills of exchange, or other securities, or property (except money or checks or drafts payable on demand which are required to be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury), and such depository or depositaries shall be authorized and empowered to collect any dividends or interest or income that may become due and any maturing obligations held for the account of such custodian. Any moneys collected on said account shall be paid and deposited forthwith by said depository or by the alien-property custodian into the Treasury of the United States, as hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I assume that the bill is being read first for committee amendments?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to call the Senator's attention, however, to the words in lines 2 and 3, page 43, "as may be recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury." I do not think the President ought to be limited by the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the banks and depositaries that he shall select, and I wanted to suggest to the Senator, as a committee amendment, that he move to strike out those words. That would work as a limitation upon the action of the President.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; I believe that is a good suggestion, Mr. President. It imposes a limitation for which I can not see any real necessity. The Senator would propose to strike out all the words after "United States" on line 2?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. So as to strike out the words "as may be recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, in lines 2 and 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "as may be recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator about the amendment that we adopted a while ago. That amendment was not considered at any committee meeting at which I was present. Will the Senator state, briefly, why we should prohibit imports into this country? I can understand why we should prevent exports from this country to certain countries, but I must say that I do not see any reason now why we should give the President the power to prevent imports into this country.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state to the Senator that this is in almost exactly the same words as the provision in the espionage act.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know; but this relates to imports and that related to exports.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand. I am going to try to explain that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wanted a brief statement of the reason why we should prohibit imports.

Mr. RANSDELL. I can do that best, I believe, by reading a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury addressed to me yesterday. It is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
September 11, 1917.

MY DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: In my judgment it would inure to the public welfare as an exigency of war that the President should be given a power over imports similar to that now exercised by him in respect to exports under Title VII of an act of Congress approved June 15, 1917.

In connection with the control over movements of merchandise in and out of the country is the related question of the control of exports and imports of gold, silver, currency, and written instruments of commerce, which in turn are matters intimately affecting the operations of the Treasury Department in respect to international exchange and the conservation of our gold supply. It may be necessary to regulate the importation of nonessentials of commerce in order to prevent any adverse and objectionable balance of trade involving settlement in gold. Through governmental control of imports it will also be possible to insure the most efficient employment of certain imported raw materials essential to the effective prosecution of the war. It is probable that in the adjustment of trade relations, now so profoundly affected by war conditions, better results could be obtained than are now possible if the Government had control of these matters when dealing with governments that have imposed restrictions upon the exports of raw materials needed by our war industries.

The fundamental question of tonnage is also involved, since it is clear that only by concentrating official control of cargo movements in both directions can we secure the most effective use of available shipping. My convictions on this subject have been confirmed by conferences with and recommendations from the export administrative board which is now administering, under authority of the President, the powers conferred upon him as a war measure in the control of exports.

I therefore recommend that the subject be covered by appropriate legislation giving to the President the necessary powers during the period of the war.

Meantime, I remain, dear Senator,

Cordially, yours,

WILLIAM G. MCADOO.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether this was a committee amendment?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; this was a committee amendment. It was not submitted to the whole committee. It was acted on yesterday. I had no chance to confer with the whole committee. I conferred with some members of the committee, especially with the chairman; and the matter seemed so closely allied to the purposes of the bill, it seemed so necessary to give the President the same power over imports which we had already given him over exports in the espionage act, that I introduced the amendment in conjunction with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I understand by a committee amendment, Mr. President, is an amendment that has been submitted to, and has the support and approval of, a majority of the members of the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This has not that, really, and hence has no status as a committee amendment that should take precedence over the amendments of individual Senators. It has been agreed to, however; and I am inclined to think it is a desirable amendment, in view of the Secretary's letter. But inasmuch as the committee has not formally passed upon it, I may want to look it up further; and I therefore give notice that I reserve it for a separate vote in the Senate in case I should want a separate vote on it. I may not want it at all.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection at all to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is perfectly plain that the right to control imports ought to be placed in the President. For instance, let us assume that a nation so closely allied with our enemy as to be in fact handling its goods were permitted to bring those goods into the United States. Credit would be established here which might be of great value to the enemy. It is not necessary to enlarge on that thought; it will occur to Senators in various forms; and I think we can not be too careful in guarding the ports of the country.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 16, before the word "shall," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to read:

The President shall require all such designated depositaries to execute and file bonds sufficient in his judgment to protect property on deposit, such bonds to be conditioned as he may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 19, to strike out:

The alien-property custodian shall have power to sell any tangible personal property transferred, assigned, or delivered to him hereunder (not including, however, bonds, stocks, or choses in action) which, in his opinion, is likely to be perishable, and he shall deposit the proceeds thereof forthwith in the Treasury of the United States, as hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 44, to insert:

The alien-property custodian shall be vested with all of the powers of a common-law trustee in respect of all property, other than money, which shall come into his possession in pursuance of the provisions of this act; and, acting under the supervision and direction of the President, and under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, may manage such property and do any act or things in respect thereof or make any disposition thereof or of any part thereof, by sale or otherwise, and exercise any rights which may be or become appurtenant thereto or to the ownership thereof, in like manner as though he were the absolute owner thereof, to the end that the interests of the United States in such property and rights or of such person as may ultimately become entitled thereto, or to the proceeds thereof, may be preserved and safeguarded. It shall be the duty of every corporation incorporated within the United States and every unincorporated association, or company, or trustee, or trustees within the United States issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests to transfer such shares or certificate upon its, his, or their books into the name of the alien property custodian upon demand, accompanied by the presentation of the certificates which represent such shares or beneficial interests. The alien property custodian shall forthwith deposit in the Treasury of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, the proceeds of any such property or rights so sold by him.

Any money or property required or authorized by the provisions of this act to be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the alien-property custodian shall, if said custodian shall so direct by written order, be paid, conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the Treasurer of the United States with the same effect as if to the alien property custodian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 14, after the word "order," to insert "of the President as set forth in section nine hereof, or"; in line 18, after the word "shall," to insert "forthwith"; in line 19, after the word "person," to insert "to whom the President shall so order, or"; in line 20, after the word "behalf," to insert "the court shall enter"; in line 21, after the words "judgment or," to strike out "decree shall be entered" and insert "decree"; and in line 24, after the word "order," to insert "of the President or said final judgment or decree," so as to make the clause read:

After the end of the war any claim of any enemy or of an ally of enemy to any money or other property received and held by the alien-property custodian or deposited in the United States Treasury shall be settled as Congress shall direct: Provided, however, That on order of the President as set forth in section 9 hereof, or of the court, as set forth in sections 9 and 10 hereof, the alien property custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall forthwith convey, transfer, assign, and pay to the person to whom the President shall so order, or in whose behalf the court shall enter final judgment or decree, any property of an enemy or ally of enemy held by said custodian or by said Treasurer, so far as may be necessary to comply with said order of the President or said final judgment or decree of the court: And provided further, That the Treasurer of the United States, on order of the alien-property custodian (or such other officer as the President shall direct), shall, as provided in section 10 hereof, repay to the licensee any funds deposited by said licensee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 5, to change the number of the section from 12 to 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 16, after the words "violation of," to strike out "law" and insert "this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That in addition to the facts required by sections 4197, 4198, and 4200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of June 15, 1917, to be set out in the master's and shipper's manifests before clearance will be issued to vessels bound to foreign ports, the master or person in charge of any vessel, before departure of such vessel from port, shall deliver to the collector of customs of the district wherein such vessel is located a statement duly verified by oath that the cargo is not shipped or to be delivered in violation of this act, and the owners, shippers, or consignors of the cargo of such vessels shall in like manner deliver to the collector like statement under oath as to the cargo or the parts thereof laden or shipped by them, respectively, which statement shall contain also the names and addresses of the actual consignees of the cargo, or if the shipment is made to a bank or other broker, factor, or agent, the names and addresses of the persons who are the actual consignees on whose account the shipment is made. The master or person in control of the vessel shall, on reaching port of destination of any of the cargo, deliver a copy of the manifest and of the said master's, owner's, shipper's, or consignor's statement to the American consular officer of the district in which the cargo is unladen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. The provision on page 45 that has just been read is as to the disposition of the property in the hands of the alien-property custodian after the war is over. It provides that the claims presented by aliens may be settled as Congress may direct, and it provides further:

That on the order of the President as set forth in section 9 hereof, or of the court, as set forth in sections 9 and 10 hereof, the alien-property custodian—

Shall pay over. I want to ask the Senator why there should be any alternative authority there. It seems to me that there is no use in arraying the executive department of the Government against the judicial branch of the Government. If the alien comes into court and proves his title to the property or money, and the court orders that it be paid over to him, why should the President have authority to order that it be not paid over?

Mr. RANDELL. As we understood that matter, Mr. President, there are a number of cases which will not go to the courts at all, and where they do not go to the courts the President, acting through the agencies which he may see fit to appoint, will have authority to come to a decision and give an order accordingly. Where the parties are settling their controversy in court, the court will render the order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, I see what the Senator means; yes.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not think there is any conflict at all. It surely was not our intention to bring about any conflict.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think there could be any conflict. That is, I think the order of the court would prevail; but I do not think we should pass a statute—

Mr. RANDELL. I do not think it is possible that there would be any conflict.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator's meaning now.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 5, to change the number of the section from 13 to 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 14, after the words "by the," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That whenever there is reasonable cause to believe that the manifest or the additional statements under oath required by the preceding section are false or that any vessel, domestic or foreign, is about to carry out of the United States any property to or for the account or benefit of an enemy, or ally of enemy, or any property or person whose export, taking out, or transport will be in violation of this act, the collector of customs for the district in which such vessel is located is hereby authorized and empowered, subject to review by the President, to refuse clearance to any such vessel, domestic or foreign, for which clearance is required by law, and by formal notice served upon the owners, master, or person or persons in command or charge of any domestic vessel for which clearance is not required by law, to forbid the departure of such vessel from the port, and it shall thereupon be unlawful for such vessel to depart.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 20, to insert:

The collector of customs shall in each case report to the President the amount of gold or silver coin or bullion or other moneys of the United States contained in any cargo intended for export. Such report shall include the names and addresses of the consignors and consignees, together with any facts known to the collector with reference to such shipment and particularly those which may indicate that such gold or silver coin or bullion or moneys of the United States may be intended for delivery or may be delivered, directly or indirectly, to an enemy or an ally of enemy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 6, to change the number of the section from 14 to 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, at that point I wish to explain that the changes we have already adopted necessitate striking out lines 19 to 25, on page 48, and lines 1 to 6, on page 49, inclusive; and as that provision contains an appropriation of $50,000 to be expended by the Federal Trade Commission which must now be expended by the President, I wish to amend the item in line 6, of section 14, which, as reported from the committee, reads "$400,000," and make it read "$450,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$450,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 9, before the words "for the purpose," to strike out "Secretary of Commerce" and insert "President," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 15. That the sum of $450,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used in the discretion of the President for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for the payment of salaries of all persons employed under this act, together with the necessary expenses for transportation, subsistence, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, miscellaneous supplies, printing to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 18, to insert:

That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used in the discretion of the Federal Trade Commission for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 10 of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for the payment of salaries of all persons employed under section 10 of this act, together with the necessary expenses for transportation, subsistence, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, miscellaneous supplies, printing to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing.

Mr. RANDELL. Now, Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 6, to strike out:

SEC. 15. That whoever shall willfully violate this act or the provisions of any license, rule, or regulation issued thereunder shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both, and the officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation shall be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both, and any property, funds, securities, papers, or other articles or documents, or any vessel, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, concerned in such violation shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 16. That whoever shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act or of any license, rule, or regulation issued thereunder, and whoever shall willfully violate, neglect, or refuse to comply with any order of the President or of the Commissioner of Patents issued in compliance with the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both; and the officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in such violation shall be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both, and any property, funds, securities, papers, or other articles or documents, or any vessel, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture, and equipment, concerned in such violation shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, on line 22, page 49, I do not know whether the changes we have made in the bill previously, in substituting "the President" for "the Commissioner of Patents," would necessitate any change here as to violations of orders of the Commissioner of Patents. I do not know that it would do any harm even if there are no orders that the Commissioner of Patents could make.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not believe it would do any harm to leave it as it is.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 7, to change the number of the section from 16 to 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 17, to change the number of the section from 17 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 19, after the words "shall have," to insert "similar jurisdiction to that granted to district courts of the United States in all suits under sections 9 and 10 hereof, when the claimant or licensee is a resident of, or, if a corporation, has its principal place of business in, the Philippine Islands or the," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 18. That the several courts of first instance in the Philippine Islands and the district court of the Canal Zone shall have similar jurisdiction to that granted to district courts of the United States in all suits under sections 9 and 10 hereof, when the claimant or licensee is a resident of, or, if a corporation, has its principal place of business in, the Philippine Islands or the jurisdiction of offenses under this act committed within their respective districts, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the United States of offenses under this act committed upon the high seas and of conspiracies to commit such offenses as defined by section 37 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, and the provisions of said section for the purpose of this act are hereby extended to the Philippine Islands and to the Canal Zone.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to refer to section 15 again before we pass it finally. I should like to have a word of explanation about the language in the section. Section 15 provides:

That whoever shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act or of any license, rule, or regulation issued thereunder, and whoever shall willfully violate, neglect, or refuse to comply with any order of the President or of the Commissioner of Patents issued in compliance with the provisions of this act, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000.

Mr. President, it is all right to provide that a penalty shall apply to the violation of law, and in these times it may be all right to provide that the penalty shall apply where an order of the President issued pursuant to the law has been violated; but it is going some distance when we provide that a man shall be fined $10,000 for failing to obey some mandate of a Commissioner of Patents. I do not think that language belongs in any law. It is dangerous.

Mr. RANDELL. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, we have already changed subdivision (1) of section 10, appearing on page 41, and placed practically everything in that subdivision in the hands of the President. So I believe, for all practical purposes, there would be no objection to striking out the words in lines 21 and 22 on page 49, "or of the Commissioner of Patents." I believe the President would have full jurisdiction over the subject as we have amended it, and on behalf of the committee I would not raise any objection to striking out those words.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the words "or of the Commissioner of Patents" in lines 21 and 22.

Mr. RANDELL. There is no objection on the part of the committee to striking out the words "or of the Commissioner of Patents."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is, without objection, reconsidered, and the question is on the amendment to the amendment striking out the words in lines 21 and 22 "or of the Commissioner of Patents." Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 8, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 18. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of this act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amendment inserting section 3, page 6, passed over at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me state that matter for the benefit of the Senators who are present. The first part of the section proposed to be inserted reads:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful—

(a) For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President, granted to such person, or to the enemy, or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, to trade, or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting or taking part in such trade, directly or indirectly, for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

The language that I call attention to is found in line 16, "or reasonable cause to believe." I confess that I am somewhat puzzled to know just how the thought in the framer's mind could be expressed with greater safety, but to say that a man can be held because he has merely reasonable cause to believe may be quite a dangerous thing. The question of what is a reasonable cause would be left to a jury.

Mr. POMERENE. On what page is that?

Mr. REED. I am reading from page 7, and I call the Senator's attention to line 16. In a time of great excitement a jury might think something to have been reasonable cause which would never have occurred to the defendant as any cause at all. What might put a man of shrewd temperament and experience upon notice might to an inexperienced man be no notice at all.

The inquiry I make is whether the word "knowledge" is not sufficient, because as a matter of law if a man knows enough to practically amount to proof it is equivalent to knowledge itself of the ultimate fact.

I do not know how I can make this plainer than I have in this somewhat meager statement. A munitions expert might be fully advised with relation to munitions of some dangerous condition because he learned some one fact.

A man unacquainted with that business might not get any notice from the fact. The term "reasonable cause" or the term "reasonable notice" is to be determined by what the ordinary prudent man would have known or understood under the same circumstances. It may be the best phrase possible, but I think we can get along without it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator in this connection that I think his observations are entirely sound. The purpose, I think, was to cover cases where one might have information, might be absolutely advised that the person with whom he is dealing is an enemy or the ally of an enemy, but still he might not know it as a fact. He could only have information to that effect. It might be the whole of his information that he is an enemy or ally of an enemy, and yet he might not have positive knowledge. Would the Senator think this language would fit that so as to take the place both of knowledge or reasonable cause to believe? Just so as to any other person who is an enemy or ally of an enemy. It leaves it open to proof as to whether he is or is not, without requiring proof of actual knowledge.

Mr. REED. Let me examine the context and see how that would fit in.

Mr. POMERENE. May I suggest to the Senators who are discussing this question, would it not improve the language somewhat if they would make it read "with the knowledge or means of knowledge that such other person is an enemy or ally of an enemy"?

Mr. REED. I am afraid not. The Senator suggests "means of knowledge." What does that mean? We are going to try a citizen for this offense. He is charged with possessing the means of knowledge. What are the means of knowledge? It is anything that he could employ to ascertain, to find out. It seems to me that that suggestion would be dangerous.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, it all resolves itself into a question of fact, if he had the means or reasonable means of knowledge which would enable him to inform himself. Every fair-minded citizen ought to be on his guard lest he be doing something which might inure to the benefit of the enemy. I think under normal conditions the criticism of the Senator from Missouri is sound. Possibly the language here is not as explicit as it should be.

Mr. REED. Let me suggest this to the Senator from Ohio and the Senators from Florida and Louisiana. It seems to me that if the section was made to read in this way it would probably cure the defect: "For any person in the United States except," and so forth, "willfully to trade with any other person who is an enemy or ally of enemy of the United States."

Mr. RANDELL. "Willfully" would come after the word "to" in line 13.

Mr. REED. "Willfully to trade or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, any other person who is an enemy or ally of enemy."

Mr. RANDELL. I suggest to the Senator that it come in line 15, after the words "for the benefit of," and then skip down to "for the benefit of an enemy." You do not want to say "any other person who is an enemy," because the whole idea is conveyed in the language "for the benefit of an enemy or an ally of enemy."

Mr. REED. That is entirely correct.

Mr. RANDELL. I am inclined to accept the suggestion to insert the word "willfully" and eliminate the other words. I believe it will go as far as we probably should go.

Mr. REED. "Willfully" means intentionally, of course, and it also—

Mr. POMERENE. The word "knowingly" is used with "willfully."

Mr. REED. I like the word "willfully," because it has a legal meaning. It implies a moral turpitude. It implies that the individual doing it does it with intent and purpose and knowledge. I hope that amendment will be accepted. I will say to Senators nobody can go further than I am willing to go to make this law drastic, but at the same time I should like to make it so that innocent people will not be punished.

Mr. RANDELL. I understand the Senator to use the word "willful" in the sense of intentional.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. To do it intentionally.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL. I see no objection to the insertion of the word "willfully."

Mr. REED. I think "willfully" is a much better word in law.

Mr. POMERENE. Let the amendment be stated at the desk.

Mr. RANDELL. Then, it will read, beginning with line 13, "to willfully trade or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of"; and skip now to line 17, "for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy, or is conducting," and so forth.

Mr. REED. That is all right, except that the word "willfully" should precede the word "to," so as to read, "willfully to trade, or attempt to trade." Then the word "willfully" will qualify the whole clause.

Mr. RANDELL. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7 in the committee amendment, line 13, before the words "to trade," insert the word "willfully"; and on lines 15, 16, and 17 strike out the words "any other person with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is," so that when amended it will read:

For any person in the United States, except with the license of the President granted to such person, or to the enemy, or ally of enemy, as provided in this act, willfully to trade, or attempt to trade, either directly or indirectly, with, to, or from, or for, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy—

And so forth.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, while I, to a certain extent, dislike the phrase to which the Senator from Missouri has alluded, to wit, "reasonable cause to believe," still I hesitate to accept the substitute which he proposes for it. If you strike out of this provision the words "with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe" and make the offense willful trading with an enemy or an ally of an enemy, it is going to be very hard to convict anybody in the way this clandestine trade is conducted through intermediaries and neutrals who are suspected at times. Willfully means that a man actually knows the person is an enemy with whom he is trading and deliberately and willfully makes up his mind to trade with him, to commit an offense.

I venture to say, without accurate knowledge of the statistics on the subject, that a great deal of trade that is very dangerous to this country and very helpful to the enemy is conducted by people who just do not take the pains to make all necessary inquiries—inquiries which they should make—who do not examine into the history and status of the person who comes into their office and wants to buy goods and have them delivered at certain times and places. Much of the trouble with the purchaser or the man who is working for the enemy is caused because he has plenty of cash on hand and pays high prices at once and is willing to make a liberal contract, and the necessary pains are not taken by the would-be seller to make any inquiries which would put him in the position of being a willful offender against the law if he did have the knowledge that he might get.

While, as I have said, I do not exactly like the words "reasonable cause to believe," still this is a criminal statute with heavy fines and penalties, and unless you could prove to a jury of 12 men that the party charged with the offense did really have reasonable cause to believe I do not think there is much danger in anybody getting wrongly convicted in this country, even if there is some war excitement going on. It will be difficult to find 12 men who will send a man to jail and say he really had reasonable cause to believe that he was trading with the enemy unless he did. After all, as a practical administrative matter, is it any more difficult for a jury to decide what was the reasonable cause to believe than it is for them to decide what is reasonable doubt or what is reasonable conduct, what is reasonable care, or any of those questions?

As I said, I think there is considerable force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri. Still we are trying to win a war and to prevent a despicable and contemptible betrayal of our country by people who are willing to take chances to do it, provided they can sneak through on technicalities and not get caught, and do it for money; and pretty drastic provisions of law are necessary to stop it. I venture to say that many a man who does not care anything about his reputation even if he has any other than a bad one if he could go on making great war profits by doing the country an injury and was advised by an astute lawyer in advance that they never could prove that he willfully did it unless he admitted it himself, if he took certain precautions, would continue that trade, who would not take the chance if these words are left in the bill, as they are now. Therefore I am rather inclined not to support the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. RANDELL. I do not think there is any practical force in what the Senator says. The people we are trying to reach by the bill are those who intentionally carry on trade with the enemy. As I understand the word "willfully," it is in that sense as applied to a man who knowingly and intentionally carries on trade with the enemy, hoping to derive great profit from that trade or hoping to benefit the enemy by that trade. The innocent person who trades without any intention of violating the law, without any intention of making any special amount of money or without any intention of benefiting the enemy, is really not the person we are after; it is the guilty man, the man who despite the fact that he lives in this country and owes his loyalty and allegiance to this country deliberately and intentionally carries on trade with an enemy or with the ally of an enemy hoping to derive benefit from it, hoping to give the enemy some benefit of it. He is the man we are after, and we will reach, I think, ninety-nine cases certainly out of every hundred if it is worded this way. There is a possibility that we may seriously injure some innocent people if the other language is put in. I believe I prefer the language suggested by the Senator from Missouri myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to direct a question to the Senator in charge of the bill. The Senator is, of course, very familiar with the bill. I should like to know whether the provisions are broad enough to enable the President, or has he some other authority, whereby he could issue a proclamation to prevent other insurance companies that are issuing marine or war-risk insurance from doing business within the United States during the period of the war.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator mean some other statute or a provision in the pending bill?

Mr. POMERENE. Is there any provision in any other statute or in this bill which would authorize the President to issue a proclamation preventing other insurance companies issuing marine or war-risk insurance from doing business within the United States during the war?

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator mean companies that belong to neutral countries or connected in some way with the enemy?

Mr. POMERENE. Any company that might be giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

Mr. RANSDELL. I know of no provision of that kind.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. RANSDELL. Section 4 is the one relating to insurance, if the Senator wishes to offer an amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to state what is in my mind about this matter. During this afternoon information came to me to the effect that not only insurance companies which were organized under the German Government had been issuing marine insurance and getting information which might be of value to the German Government in the prosecution of the war in connection with the sailing of vessels, but that there are other companies that were nominally organized under the Government of Sweden or under the Russian Government which in fact are operated by German citizens or by men whose sympathies are with the German Government. If that be so, it seems to me that just as much harm could be done our Government and our forces and our commerce if a company of that type were permitted to do business within the United States as would be likely to occur through allowing the German owned and organized companies to do this business.

I think the President should have some power to control that situation, if it does exist. I therefore offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the section conferring upon the President the necessary power to act in the event that he finds such a situation exists.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 5, insert the following paragraph:

The President shall have power, by proclamation, to prevent any company which is engaged in marine or war-risk insurance from doing business within the United States during the war if it is owned or controlled by the nationals of an enemy or of an ally of the enemy, or by others whom the President may have good cause to believe are in connection with said business or by reason thereof giving or enabled to give aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States or their allies.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to have a chance to examine that amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that if the general proposition meets the approval of the Senator to accept it, and if they desire to modify it in conference that can be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. It ought to follow after line 12, instead of line 5, so as to be at the end of the section.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be true.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my attention was called to the same matter. I am in accord with what the Senator from Ohio states, but I go a little farther than he does. It is for that reason that I have written out the amendment which I intend to offer, and which I shall read. I have no desire to move to substitute this amendment, but I should like to have it considered in connection with the one which has been offered by the Senator from Ohio. My amendment is as follows:

Whenever in the opinion of the President the public safety or public interest requires, the President may prohibit any or all foreign insurance companies from doing business in the United States, or the President may license such company or companies to do business upon such terms as he may deem proper.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I like the phraseology of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri better than my own.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if it is intended by his amendment to cover all the insurance companies?

Mr. REED. It covers all. I mean precisely that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Whether they be fire or war or marine insurance companies, it covers all?

Mr. REED. I mean precisely that. Of course, it is not to be presumed that the President will prohibit unless there is a grave cause for doing so, and it is to be presumed if there is a grave cause he will prohibit. Otherwise he may license.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will suggest that this provision would relate to companies in our allied countries as well as in enemy countries. This amendment leaves the power in the President himself, and I do not imagine it would ever be misused. I certainly am in accord with the general idea of the two Senators, for I will say that the committee confined the terms of this bill to enemy and ally of enemy insurance companies. If, however, such a state of affairs exists as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has indicated—and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] seems to corroborate him—we wish to cover such a case as well as others, and I believe this language would cover it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is more comprehensive than my own, and I think I like his phrasing better. I should be very glad, so far as I can, to accept his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask for a moment's delay, Mr. President. [After examining.] The amendment seems to cover the case very well and I am willing to accept it. Where is it proposed that the amendment shall come in?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 12, at the end of section 4, it is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

Whenever in the opinion of the President the public safety or public interest requires, the President may prohibit any or all foreign insurance companies from doing business in the United States, or the President may license such company or companies to do business upon such terms as he may deem proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I do not know that section 3 has ever been agreed to. We passed it over yesterday and we have just inserted one amendment. I have one or two other amendments to section 3. On page 7, line 22, I offer the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to is, without objection, reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment which is now offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 22, in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "or of such person as he may direct."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. RANSDELL. I submit the amendment to the same section which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 23, after the name "United States," it is proposed to insert "or any other owner, master, or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry to transport or attempt to transport from any place to any other place."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. On page 8 I submit the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 8, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "or of such other officer."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. RANSDELL. On the same page, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Have all the amendments which are to be offered to section 3 been submitted?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment which is now presented by the Senator from Louisiana, then, is to section 4?

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg pardon. I think I have offered all the amendments which I desire to offer to section 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, in the absence of objection, section 3 as amended is agreed to. Now, the vote whereby section 4 was agreed to, without objection, will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, page 11, line 8, after the name "United States," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert "to or for the benefit of or on behalf of or on account of an enemy or ally of enemy."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. I now move to reconsider the vote by which section 5 was agreed to; and I offer the amendment to that section which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further amendments to section 4?

Mr. RANDELL. I know of no others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then as amended the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fact that while he has changed the language on line 16 of page 7 of the bill, to strike out the words "with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe" and has inserted the word "willfully" in a prior part of the section, the same language appears in the next paragraph—paragraph (b)—and he has allowed it to stand. This bill, I assume, has been carefully drawn by the Department of Justice, and the effect of those words has been very carefully calculated. Certainly the same language to describe the willful intent should be used in all of the different paragraphs, and I assume the Department of Justice has adopted a uniform plan throughout the whole bill. I do not, therefore, think it is wise to change it in one respect and not in others. I think we were wrong in changing it in the respect we did.

Mr. RANDELL. This does not relate to trading; this relates to transporting, which is a different thing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know that each section relates to its own subject, of course. It seems to me, however, that there is no ground for making such a distinction as appears to have been made by saying in one case that it shall be a crime for a man willfully to trade with an enemy, but that it will not be necessary to prove a willful attempt to transport an actual enemy, but only that the person accused shall have reasonable cause to believe him to be an enemy. However, I do not care to make any motion on the subject.

Mr. RANDELL. I should not object to such an amendment if the Senator wishes to have it inserted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not for the life of me think of suggesting it. I should like to have reconsidered the action by which the Senate adopted the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, but I do not suppose I could succeed if I made the effort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment in section 5, which is found at the top of page 15, Mr. RANDELL proposes to strike out subsection (b), being lines 1, 2, and 3 on that page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is, without objection, reconsidered, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. That will necessitate making the next subsection (b) instead of (c).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to change the designation of the subsection beginning in line 4 to read (b).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. RANDELL. That concludes the committee amendments, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. One moment before we pass from that. I think in line 14, page 15, after the word "completed," the remainder of the section should be stricken out.

Mr. RANDELL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that that be done, because it is covered elsewhere.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is, without objection, again reconsidered. This is the last time that can be done under the rule, as it has been twice reconsidered. Now the Senator from Florida moves the amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out as follows:

Whenever it shall appear to the President that the export of any gold or silver coin or bullion or of any moneys of the United States may result in violation of the provisions of this act, he may cause notice to be served on the parties in interest to withhold such export for a period not exceeding 90 days pending investigation of the facts by him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is, without objection, agreed to; and the amendment as amended is agreed to, without objection.

The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to further amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask what is the reason of the amendment in section 17, on page 50, where the jurisdiction of the courts of the Canal Zone and of the Philippine Islands is provided for? I do not understand the necessity for the committee amendment there, and I am confused by it. I understand the House provision was this:

Sec. 17. That the several courts of first instance in the Philippine Islands and the district court of the Canal Zone shall have jurisdiction of offenses under this act.

The committee has inserted, in italics, a provision which confuses me. I want to read it as the amendment now stands, to see what impression it makes on other Senators:

Sec. 17. That the several courts of first instance in the Philippine Islands and the district court of the Canal Zone shall have similar jurisdiction to that granted to district courts of the United States in all suits under sections 9 and 10 hereof, when the claimant or licensee is a resident of, or, if a corporation, has its principal place of business in, the Philippine Islands or the jurisdiction of offenses under this act committed within their respective districts.

I do not understand the meaning of the expression "or the jurisdiction of offenses under this act," and especially the meaning of the word "or" is obscure. It may be a misprint, or it may mean something that I can not perceive.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I understand the idea was to give these courts the same jurisdiction as the courts of the United States have. I am not sufficiently familiar, I will say to the Senator, not being on the Judiciary Committee, with the courts of the Philippine Islands and of the Canal Zone to understand just why that should be done, but we were advised to have that done by the Department of Justice, which helped us frame the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am on the Judiciary Committee, but I do not think familiarity with the courts of the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone serves to enable one to understand the meaning of the expression the courts "shall have similar jurisdiction to that granted to the district courts of the United States * * * or the jurisdiction of offenses under this act." What is the signification of that word "or."

Mr. RANDELL. Frankly, I do not know.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the word "and" were used, I could understand it, but I wondered if it was a misprint or whether the committee could explain it. If we are conferring jurisdiction on the courts to try these offenses, a great many of them may be committed in the Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands, and we had better be careful to be sure that we are giving the courts there real jurisdiction and are not exacting typographical errors in a provision designed to clothe the courts with jurisdiction.

Mr. RANDELL. On looking over this provision carefully I am inclined to think that the Senator's criticism is correct, that the word "and" was intended, but that word "or" inadvertently slipped in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not make any motion about it, but I will leave it to be considered in conference.

Mr. RANDELL. I think it had better be corrected in conference, I will say to the Senator. I am glad he has called it to my attention, and I will see that it is taken care of. The chairman of the committee suggests that it be corrected now. So I move, Mr. President, that we reconsider the vote by which section 18 was agreed to, and in line 23, on page 50, I move to strike out the word "or" and to insert the word "and."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 50, line 23, after the words "Philippine Islands," it is proposed to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention further to the fact that the committee amendment in lines 21 and 22, it seems to me, would confer jurisdiction upon these courts only when the claimant or licensee is a resident of the Philippine Islands. Why not confer upon the Canal Zone court jurisdiction over its citizens and on the Philippine Islands courts jurisdiction over their citizens? We do not want to give the Canal Zone court jurisdiction over residents in the Philippine Islands. I can hardly believe that the Department of Justice drew this amendment, Mr. President, but I have no suggestion to make.

Mr. RANDELL. It was prepared by the Department of Justice, I will say, and accepted by the subcommittee without very careful scrutiny; that is the trouble with this amendment.

Mr. REED. That is why the amendment is not properly drawn.

Mr. RANDELL. I would like to have further criticism by the Senator from Connecticut. We wish to make this correct if there is anything wrong about it, and we have plenty of time to correct it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought the House provision did all that was necessary, and I read it first to show how clear it was. It reads:

That the several courts of first instance in the Philippine Islands and the district court of the Canal Zone shall have jurisdiction of offenses under this act—

And so forth.

That seemed to me to be enough; but the bill has to go to conference anyway, Mr. President, and I do not particularly object to letting this matter go with the other Senate amendments. I think enough has been said about it so that the conference committee can consult the Department of Justice and report a proper provision.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the idea was that the House provision was broad and general enough to cover ordinary cases, but this particular provision was required by sections 9 and 10 of this act. It was intended specifically to give to the courts in the Philippine Islands and in the Canal Zone jurisdiction of offenses arising under sections 9 and 10 of this act. That is the reason why it was thought best to set it out specifically. It was advised by the representatives of the Department of Justice who appeared before the committee; and I myself think it is better to leave it as it is. I do not think we had better change it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, why should not the Canal Zone and Philippine Islands courts have jurisdiction of all offenses committed under this act as well as those committed under sections 9 and 10 of the act?

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, this amendment is evidently very much confused; it is not in the form, I am sure, that it was when it passed the committee. I do not see any serious necessity for it, and I move that the Senate committee amendment to that section be stricken from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the whole amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to appear at the end of the bill:

The provisions of this act shall become null and void 30 days after the end of the war.

I observe that on page 5 there is a careful definition of what will constitute the end of the war; but there seems to be in the bill nowhere any provision that terminates the powers and obligations of the bill at the end of the war, and as this bill is intended to relate only to the war I offer the amendment.

Mr. RANDELL. We have no objection to the principle of the amendment, but we think it ought to be longer probably than 30 days.

Mr. REED. How much longer?

Mr. RANDELL. At least 90 days, I should say.

Mr. REED. Very well; change it to 90 days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 19. The provisions of this act shall become null and void 90 days after the end of the war.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, might it not be better to say "within a given time after a proclamation of peace to be issued by the President"?

Mr. REED. The term "end of the war" has been defined in the bill, and it is all covered.

Mr. RANDELL. It is defined on page 5, where the President is required through a proclamation to determine the end of the war.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know that I have any objection at all to the amendment; but I remember that in certain sections of the bill the language shows an evident intent that the sections shall be permanent, for such phrases as "whenever the United States is at war the President may do thus and so" are found. That is true also of the espionage bill. I do not know whether it is wise to have this whole framework of legislation dropped within 90 days after the war is concluded. I do not know what the intention of the committee was upon that subject, but certainly where a paragraph starts out by saying "whenever the United States is at war" it looks to a continuance of the provision.

Mr. REED. But there are some parts of the bill where that qualification is not found.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I entirely agree to that.

Mr. REED. Therefore the general clause is necessary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course there is this feature about it, Mr. President. We found when we were suddenly thrown into this war that we were utterly unprepared in legislation designed to prevent espionage, spying, smuggling, and all such things. The previous war measures which we have passed have been designed to fill those gaps permanently, so that whenever we get into war again we will have a set of statutes on the books. This is one of the war measures. Now it is proposed to provide that all the pains and trouble we have been through in enacting this law shall be for nothing as soon as this war is over, and we will have no permanent set of statutes necessary to protect the country. However, if the committee wants to accept the amendment, I can not prevent it, of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide, and will again put the question.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

SEC. 20. That when the United States shall be engaged in war it shall be unlawful for any person or persons in the presence or hearing of the others to utter any disloyal, threatening, violent, scurrilous, defamatory, abusive, or seditious language about the Government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the President of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any other language calculated to bring the United States or the United States Government, or the President of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute; or any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of war; or to advise, urge, or incite any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of such war.

That any person duly convicted of any such foregoing offense shall be for each such offense punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than five years, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not vote in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Montana. This bill is known as the trading-with-the-enemy bill. The purpose of this bill is to mitigate the extreme rigor of the rule of law which prevents any trade or commercial intercourse between countries which are at war with each other. Under the old rule practically every kind of commercial intercourse was prohibited. Some of the courts have said, "We can not have war for arms and peace for commerce. We can not carry on ordinary and normal commercial relations with warring nations." The purpose of this bill, however, is to permit certain commercial relations to be carried on, and I will say that the provisions of the bill are so safeguarded that not a dollar of profit arising from these commercial relations can ever reach Germany or her allies in this war.

The transactions will be beneficial to us; the purpose of this bill is to benefit American citizens by permitting certain trading with the enemy. Briefly, one of the kinds of business is insurance, about which we have heard so much; another is patents which the Germans have taken out in this country, many of their patents being extremely valuable; another is to take over the very valuable property which Germans and people allied to Germany have in this country. We do the unique thing, Mr. President, of placing all of that property, which amounts to a great many million dollars, in the hands of the alien-property custodian and require him to invest that property in United States bonds, and we use that property to fight our enemies, with the understanding that at the end of the war it will be up to Congress to say whether or not we will return that property to its former owners; but while the war is going on we use it as a club with which to belabor them.

The amendment of the Senator from Montana proposes a criminal statute as affecting certain kinds of utterances and expressions; it does not relate in any way to commercial relations, to business transactions, to trading with the enemy. The proposal of the Senator from Montana should be very carefully examined by the Judiciary Committee; it should be reported on by the Judiciary Committee. I am not at all sure but that it is already provided for in the espionage act; it certainly has no place in this bill, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the doctrine in this body that no amendment to a bill shall be adopted unless it is germane to the original text and purpose of the bill is entirely new doctrine to me. I have seen amendments adopted here which had no relation whatever to the original purpose and text of the bill, relating to entirely different subjects. Under our method of procedure it is well known that in the closing days of a session it is almost impossible to get an independent bill through Congress, and I think there is very little chance of getting an independent bill of a minor nature through Congress at this session. The only chance is to have it adopted as an amendment to some other bill. That has been done many times at this session.

The bill which is before us contains penalties, and is in a measure a penal bill, forbidding certain things. The amendment which I have offered is not out of line with the nature of the bill in that respect. It, too, provides penalties for certain things, and surely there is no Senator here who is in favor of any of the things which are forbidden in this amendment. Surely there is no good American citizen who is in favor of any of the things which are forbidden in this amendment. If we are not in favor of them, we must be against them; and if we are against them, we ought to enact a law against them, because there are lots of the things that are forbidden in that amendment going on in this country almost daily, to the detriment of the good and welfare and peace of the country.

It was just a few days ago that the governor of Illinois called out the State troops of that State to go to Chicago and prevent the holding of a meeting in the city of Chicago which was expected to do some of the very things forbidden in this amendment. The governor of Illinois took the law in his hands to the extent of calling out troops to prevent anything of that kind, and the people who were to compose that meeting were driven by force out of the State of Wisconsin and were not allowed to hold their meeting in that State—to the credit of that State, I think—because it was feared that they would do some of the very things that are forbidden in this amendment. They were forbidden to hold their meeting in the State of Minnesota. They were notified that they could not hold it in the State of North Dakota.

Now, if the authorities of the States are sufficiently exercised about these things to prohibit and prevent the holding of meetings in those States for fear that some of these things might be done in those meetings within their borders, it seems to me that Congress ought to be sufficiently interested to adopt an amendment which would prohibit and punish them by law. This would prevent such meetings as Alexander Berkman and Emma Goldman hold and indulge in with their followers in New York City. It would forbid and punish such proceedings as were had at a meeting in San Francisco a few weeks ago, which was broken up by the officers of the law because it was deemed treasonable and contrary to the good and welfare of the country.

The espionage bill does not cover nearly all of the things that are forbidden in this amendment. It does not touch upon nearly all of the things that are touched upon in this amendment. As I understand, the espionage bill, so far as it is of a penal nature and so far as it may prohibit and punish acts and talk of a seditious or disloyal nature, only forbids threats against the President of the United States and opposition to the enforcement of the draft law. I understand that those are the only two features connected with the good and welfare of the Government that it touches upon that are at all touched upon in this amendment.

While it is true that this provision has been introduced as a bill in the Senate, yet it has been suggested to me that it be offered as an amendment to this bill, and I have been advised by those who are interested in its enactment to offer it as an amendment to this bill. I should like to know if there is any Senator here who will read the language of that amendment and say that he is in favor of the doing of any of those things which are forbidden to be done and made punishable by that amendment. If there is one Senator or one loyal American citizen who will say that he favors any one of the things that are forbidden and made punishable by that amendment, I shall be utterly astounded and amazed beyond all measure.

Now, if we are opposed to those things, are we going to be timid about forbidding them? Are we going to be timid about making them punishable? There is a great deal of that sort of thing going on, especially in the western part of the United States. There have been in various Western States disloyal meetings and meetings at which reprehensible language, both about the United States Government and about the prosecution of this war was indulged in openly, publicly, and notoriously; and those things all have a dampening effect on the preparations of the Government for the prosecution of this war. Good citizens do not indulge in them. It is only bad citizens who indulge in them. Why should not the will of the good citizens of this country who are opposed to things of that sort be translated into law to forbid them, so that the sensibilities of the good people of this country will not be offended longer by such conduct and such language as is a disgrace to the country and a detriment to the Government in the prosecution of the war?

I have consulted with a number of Senators about this, and some of them think this provision should be adopted as an amendment to this bill. If the Senators in charge of the bill seriously object to it and think that it has no proper place in this bill and oppose it, and insist that it should not be adopted, I do not wish to press it on them against their will, because I realize that the handling of this bill is in their hands; but I hardly think they would oppose it. I do not want to press the amendment against their will and judgment.

It is true that this same matter has been offered in the form of a bill, referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and by the Judiciary Committee referred to a subcommittee of that committee. By offering it here as an amendment to this bill I mean no disrespect to the Judiciary Committee nor to the eminent Senators who compose the subcommittee to which the bill was referred. I mean no disrespect at all to them and do not wish to cast any reflections upon them or express any lack of confidence whatever in them. But we all know what terribly slow work it is to get a small, independent bill through Congress at this late day of the session.

We know the slow and tedious procedure through which it has to go.

I think there is absolutely no chance for a minor bill to be enacted by Congress from now henceforth at this session, and I believe the need of this legislation is urgent and imminent. Otherwise I should be willing to leave it as an independent measure to the committee to which it has been referred. But under the circumstances that we all know to exist all over this country to-day, and with reports in the newspapers of meetings at which disloyal utterances are made being raided by the police under minor municipal ordinances as disorderly meetings, and such things as that, and having to be handled under city ordinances in an ineffective way, when it is really an offense against the good and welfare of the Government of the United States, and when it is the concern of the United States to prevent these things and not that of city police officers and police ordinances as a subterfuge, I think Congress ought to take cognizance of this state of affairs, because it affects the very life of this Nation—not of the cities and towns of the Nation, but of the United States as a Nation—of the Federal Government. I think this body is the proper body to take cognizance of these things and to enact such a law as this, which I believe is needed, and which I do not believe any American citizen can say would be wrong or violative of any right of individuals. What right has any individual to do any of the things forbidden in this amendment?

So I submit that this amendment is proper, and the conditions existing to-day urgently call for it, and I hope it will not be insistently opposed by the Senators in charge of the bill. If they will read it, they surely can not say that there is anything wrong about it. If there is nothing wrong about it, I think they ought to be willing to have it adopted here, and I hope they will not oppose it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not want to take up time in discussing this matter. I hope we can get a vote on the bill as soon as possible and pass it to-day.

I will simply say that this bill has been very carefully prepared. Four departments of the Government worked on it for weeks, and it has a definite purpose. I do not think we ought to encumber it by putting on new and irrelevant propositions. I do not mean to say that I expressly or impliedly favor the doing or permitting of any of the things that the Senator's amendment proposes to prohibit; but there are a great many good things I am for that I do not want to put in this bill, and there are a great many bad things I am against that I do not want to prohibit in this bill. It seems to me we can not afford to mix up and confuse the various matters that we would like to have legislated upon in one bill.

This is a bill to cover a specific subject, and it is all in harmonious shape, and I hope there will not be added to it amendments that would bring in outside matters that can be taken care of separately and distinctly.

The amendment which the Senator from Montana offers is already in the shape of a bill before the Judiciary Committee.

It probably will be acted on by that committee very soon, and we will be in a position to deal with it here; but I think we ought to deal with it as a separate matter. It is very broad and covers a great many things that ought to be considered, and it seems to me we can not go into it at this time.

I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add in the bill as a new section just prior to the last section the following:

SEC. 20. That during the pendency of the present state of war and until peace shall be concluded and the fact declared by proclamation of the President it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or association to print or publish or cause to be printed or published in the German language any comments respecting the Government of the United States or of any nation with which Germany is at war its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto, without printing or publishing in a column parallel to such matter a true and complete translation of the same in the English language.

Any print or publication in the German language which does not conform to the provisions of this section shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or may, in the discretion of the court, be both fined and imprisoned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the position taken by the Senator having this bill in charge is unquestionably sound. It may be accepted as a rule to guide in legislation that various subjects not correlated and tending to the same end ought not to be included within one bill. It is well known, however, that this great legislative body does not adhere to this rule, and it is a matter of common knowledge that some of the most beneficial legislation, measures remedial and for the public good, have been enacted by attaching them to measures of an entirely different character which were pending and being considered by the Senate. But conceding the wisdom and propriety of the rule requiring the provisions of a bill to be correlated and tending to effectuate a general purpose, I submit that the amendment which I have just offered to the pending measure is not obnoxious to such rule.

The bill under consideration relates to important questions connected with the war. It contains elaborate provisions in respect to trading with the enemy, and interdicts certain acts which, in times of peace, would be entirely legal and desirable. The pending bill is to mitigate the rules of law which prohibit intercourse between the citizens of warring nations and to prescribe the methods under which trade with certain nations may be carried on. It defines, regulates, and punishes certain acts of intercourse between citizens of this country and citizens of nations with which we may be at war. Its purpose is to protect our country and its people. And it deals with the conservation and utilization of enemy property during the war. The amendment which I have submitted is for the purpose of protecting this Nation against the efforts of some who have sought to disturb the peace and tranquillity of certain classes of people within our borders and to hamper the Government in its prosecution of the war.

Some time ago I introduced a bill the title of which is "To prohibit the publication of comments respecting the policy of the Government in German or other foreign language." This measure provided that during the pendency of the present state of war it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in German, or any language other than English, any comments respecting the Government of the United States, its policies, the conduct of the war, and so forth, without printing or publishing in a column parallel to such matter a true and complete translation of the same in the English language. The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee and has received some consideration at the hands of some of the members of that committee, but it has not yet been reported. In my opinion it is not improper to offer as an amendment to the measure now being considered the bill just referred to, but amended in the particulars shown in the proposed amendment just tendered. It has been suggested to me by a distinguished Senator that a number of newspapers, printed and published in this country and in the languages of certain foreign nations, are loyal to the United States and are doing everything within their power to aid our Government in winning the war in which it is engaged. The thought was expressed that it might be unwise, and perhaps unjust, to require these loyal newspapers to conform to the provisions of the bill as introduced. I have ascertained that there are some newspapers printed in Italian, French, and other for-ign languages whose devotion to our country and to the cause which it and the nations with which our country is cooperating can not be challenged. However, it is well known that there are newspapers printed and published in the German language that are disloyal, traitorous, and treasonable. Under the circumstances, I have concluded not to offer the original bill as an amendment to the pending measure, but to so change and alter the same that its terms and provisions will apply only to newspapers printed and published in the German language. It will be observed that the amendment offered does not prohibit the publication of newspapers which may be printed in the German language. It only requires that newspapers printed or published in that language shall, if they contain any comments respecting our Government (or the Governments of the nations cooperating with us in the war), or its policies, international relations, or the state or conduct of the war, or in any matter relating thereto, publish in a column parallel thereto a true and complete translation of the same in the English language.

I have received a large number of communications from American citizens, both native born and some who were born in Germany, insisting that there should be some legislation to curb the activities of the German press of this country. My attention has been repeatedly called to the disloyal utterances of some of the German newspapers of the United States. Protests have been forwarded to me against what has been denominated the laxity of the Federal Government in dealing with newspapers engaged in traitorous and disloyal conduct. I have received communications criticizing the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department for permitting certain foreign publications, particularly German newspapers, to be published or transmitted through the mails. The loyal people of this Nation are opposed to these vipers that exist in our midst, those newspapers that preach treason and disloyalty and that seek in every possible way to spread discontent and sedition among the people. It can be said in passing that the American press has been loyal to our Nation and has rendered patriotic service in this stupendous war. Indeed, it has been an apostle of liberty, and with clear vision has seen the great issues involved in this mighty conflict. It is regrettable that any newspaper that has opposed our country, its aims and its great purpose to defend its honor and the rights of American citizens and preserve the civilization of the age, should receive sufficient support in our country to live for a day. And it must be a matter of sincere regret to those loyal citizens of our country who were born in Germany, or who are the descendants of German parents, to know that there are German newspapers published in the United States that sympathize with the enemy of our country and give aid and comfort to Prussian militarism in its efforts to dominate the world to destroy democracy and conquer this Nation. The situation requires some legislation. These sinister and disloyal newspapers ought not to be permitted to continue their nefarious work. They are seeking in every possible way to oppose the laws of our country, to obstruct the Nation in the prosecution of the war, and to excite the animosity of the American people against some, if not all, of the nations that are joined with us in the conflict with Germany.

It is suggested by the Senator upon my left [Mr. POMERENE] that this intriguing and corroding press seek to lead astray, and do lead astray, many good people who otherwise would be loyal to our country.

Mr. President, there can be no question but that some of the German newspapers of this country have in a treacherous and subtle way attempted to misrepresent the attitude of our country, to place a false construction upon its activities and its motives in entering the war. Comparisons have been instituted between this Nation and Germany, to the disadvantage of our own country. It is incomprehensible to me how men who left Germany to seek a home in this free Republic, and who have enjoyed the blessings of liberty found under our flag, could so far forget their obligations to this Nation as to treacherously assail it when it is wantonly and wickedly assaulted by the nation from which they voluntarily departed. There can be no divided allegiance. Those who have sought refuge under this flag and who have sworn allegiance to this Government must be loyal to it and to its institutions. There is no place in this Republic for traitors or for those who in this hour of stress and at a time when this Nation is carrying the standard of liberty and protecting the Constitution and the flag and the rights of American citizens, as well as the great principles of justice, the triumph of which is imperative if civilization shall endure, fail to give loyal support and render undivided allegiance to our country, its institutions, and the flag. There should be no field for newspapers, no matter the language in which they may be printed or published, that assail our Government, question its motives, denounce its policies, seek to prevent the execution of its laws, and insidiously attempt to alienate the people from the Government and to sap the very foundations of loyalty and of duty. Newspapers engaged in such disloyal and treasonable activities should be suppressed.

I have received many communications urging that a law be passed providing that no newspaper shall be published in this country during the period of the war except in the English language. There is very much to be said in favor of a proposition of that kind, but I am not in favor of a measure so drastic as that. Indeed, I do not think it would be wise or just; but it does seem to me that no one could seriously object to the amendment which I have offered to the pending bill. I appeal to the chairman who has the bill in charge not to oppose it, because it is in consonance with the spirit of the measure which he has championed with so much ability upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he is satisfied that it is not now within the power of the Postmaster General to control such matter? Does he really need the legislation in order to give him the proper authority?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator, I will say that as I understand the situation there is now no law to cover cases of this character. Indeed, the Postmaster General, to whom a copy of the bill was referred, stated to me yesterday that he approved of its terms and purpose.

I might say that this bill was referred to the Department of Justice, and was carefully reviewed there by some of the officials employed in that department; and I have a report in which it is stated that the bill is unobjectionable and within the constitutional power of Congress. As I said a moment ago, it is in consonance with the spirit of the act under consideration, and I see no reason why the amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Personally I have no objection whatever to this amendment. The things it prohibits I detest, and its purpose is entirely in accord with my own feelings. While I believe in freedom of speech, independence of thought, and liberty of the press, I am very much opposed to anything that savors of treachery or sedition. It is my judgment that the matters treated in this amendment are fully covered in the espionage bill, and that the power and authority of the Postmaster General has been exercised along these lines. Really I think the end to be served has been reached by legislation heretofore enacted.

Mr. President, this bill was constructed by the subcommittee with the assistance of representatives from four departments of the executive branch of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury was with us and contributed his wise and sagacious suggestions. The Secretary of Commerce, with his ripe experience in matters of legislation, also contributed to the construction of the measure. The attorneys from the Department of Justice and a representative from the Department of State were also there. We labored assiduously for weeks upon this bill and endeavored to cover every phase and meet every condition or contingency that might arise. We had the advantage of the bill passed by the House with the ripe thought and mature consideration of that distinguished body.

There is a clearly defined policy which we pursued in the construction of this bill preserving all the way through as far as possible order and symmetry so as to make it easy of administration or execution.

After it was finished I was rather proud of the work that somebody else had accomplished, with myself trailing along. I wish that it might pass the Senate as it came from the committee, free from all irrelevant and impertinent amendments. Now, with reference to the amendment proposed by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], after conferring with my colleagues on the committee, the learned Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] and the able chairman of the Commerce Committee [Mr. FLETCHER], I am authorized to state that we have no objections to the proposed amendment, but it strikes me that this bill is not the proper place for it. I am very sure if the Chief Executive had felt that legislation of this character was necessary upon this bill the direct representatives of the President, who were with us during the entire time devoted to deliberations upon the bill, would have called attention to it.

As I said in the beginning, I am not going to oppose the amendment if Senators think it necessary that it should be ingrafted upon the bill. If they think that an evil exists which ought to be corrected, I am perfectly willing that it shall become a part of this measure. The abuses condemned by the amendment I most heartily condemn. The license which it prohibits I would like also to see prohibited. It has just been suggested to me that there are some very loyal Americans who read the German papers, and if you are going to prohibit the printing of a newspaper in a foreign language it might be well to make it embrace other foreign languages. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, it is not the language but the seditious thought or idea itself that ought to be prohibited. But, I repeat, I have no objection to the amendment at all, and if the Senator who proposes it shall insist upon its adoption I shall not vote against it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

There is apparent justice in the position of the Senator—that if Congress prohibits the printing of newspapers other than in the English language, the prohibition ought to be general and not limited to the German press. As I suggested a moment ago, the bill as originally drawn extended to all newspapers not printed in the English language; but out of deference to the suggestions made by Senators that there were a number of newspapers published in the United States in the Bohemian, in the French, in the Italian, and in other languages, which are loyal, and which take the same view that our country takes respecting the great issues and questions now before the world, I concluded, in offering this amendment, to limit its operations to the newspapers published in the German language. Some of the newspapers printed in the German language are a menace to the peace of the people and are filled with disloyal, treasonable utterances. These publications are the ones sought out by this amendment.

Just one other observation. The amendment is not as broad as the Senator intimates. It does not prevent the publication of newspapers in the German language. The object of the amendment and its express provisions are that newspapers printed in the German language, when they comment upon our Government and the nations cooperating with it and its foreign affairs, the conduct of the war, and those questions that are cognate to the war, there shall be published in the English language in parallel columns a true and complete translation of what is published in the German language.

That certainly works no great hardship. It enables those having charge of the Post Office Department readily to discover whether there is anything treasonable and disloyal in the publication. It enables loyal citizens residing in the neighborhood where these papers have circulation to detect more quickly and more readily any disloyal utterances. Unquestionably this requirement will prove a deterrent to subtle and traitorous utterances, and lead to greater moderation and decency upon the part of the proprietors and publishers of the newspapers in question.

So it seems to me there can be no objection whatever to this amendment other than that it is offered to a bill which, technically speaking, relates to a different subject.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator this thought: If these German-language papers will publish their comments on these subjects in the English language and they are loyal to the Government and the Army and the Navy, it will relieve them of a great deal of the consequence of the prejudice which now exists toward them.

Mr. KING. No doubt the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio is correct.

Mr. President, I do not care to take up further time in the presentation of this matter. It seems to me there can be no valid objection to the adoption of this amendment. I have here a number of letters, statements, and excerpts from editorials. I desire to insert only a few of them in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. In some instances I shall omit printing the name of the writer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

AUGUST 15, 1917.

Hon. W. H. KING,
United States Senator, of Utah, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your wise bill introduced to the United States Senate regarding the foreign-language papers impressed me greatly.

Permit me to suggest that in my estimation the bill should include also attacks on the allies of the United States, because they are fighting for a common cause, and any attack upon the allies should be classed as an attack upon the United States.

The publicity traitors in any language under the influence of the German propaganda must stop using ink poison against the liberty of this country.

There is a Greek daily paper published in New York City, the Atlantis, which, while not daring to attack directly the United States, is attacking with venomous language the allies as "brigands and pirates," and consequently poisoning the minds of many of its readers otherwise faithful to this country, and preventing them from enlisting in the United States Army and Navy.

Respectfully,

AUGUST 14, 1917.

DEAR SENATOR: Why not compel supporters of the enemy-language newspapers to pay for the privilege of keeping up their alien affection? That all such enemy-language newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, or other publications shall issue and be published only under dispensation of a Federal license, and that every such newspaper, magazine, pamphlet, or other publication shall pay an additional tax of 5 cents for each copy circulated, sold, or given away, the number so sold, circulated, or given away to be determined by a counting machine supplied by the proprietor that shall count, stamp, and serially number each copy, tallied by an agent of the Federal Government, who shall collect and be paid the whole amount of the tax so determined, and be paid before such enemy-language newspaper, magazine, pamphlet, or other publication shall be issued for circulation.

Such are my sentiments.

Very truly, yours,

[Editorial from the Cincinnati Times-Star, July 7, 1917.]

IF THIS BE LOYALTY, MAKE THE MOST OF IT.

In the July number of the Atlantic Monthly Frank Perry Olds has an article on "The Disloyalty of the German-American Press." He shows that this form of journalism conveys in the language of an enemy of the United States propaganda that is thinly veiled treason. It complies with the letter of the law, perhaps, but it is written in the spirit that emanates from Berlin. In Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Cleveland, St. Louis, Baltimore, and other cities that possess newspapers published in this alien language everything is done this side a statutory offense to enlist sympathy for the enemy. And unless translations are made in the press printed in English the great mass of people in a community do not know of the propaganda that is being carried on.

The German-American press has protested its loyalty. It claims its right to hope for a separate peace between Russia and Germany, and still be loyally American. It criticizes Kerensky for initiating an offensive in Galicia. It always has a kind word for the Kaiser and never a good word for the President of the United States. Perhaps this is loyalty. If it is, it is of the order displayed by two men at the zoo on Thursday night. Under the leadership of Nahan Franko the summer orchestra arose and began the playing of "America." Immediately the entire audience in front of the clubhouse responded and men reverently uncovered their heads. The diners on the upper veranda also arose and stood attention above the red-covered table lights. The incident was so spontaneous that the words "My country, 'tis of thee," automatically came to the lips. But in the forefront of the lower veranda two men remained seated, their hats upon their heads. One was the city editor of a local German-American newspaper.

And yet he had violated no law.

[From the Cincinnati Post, May 4, 1917.]

BRITISH "LUCKY"—GERMANS WILL TREAT 'EM NICE.

One of the fine points of the German character is that the Germans are so merciful and moderate when they are victorious.

The Volksblatt, Cincinnati German newspaper, says so.

It may be thought by some the Volksblatt is joking, but it is not.

It says, in fact, the Germans are so kind that when our allies, the British, are defeated they will be lucky in being at the mercy of such a magnanimous people.

The Volksblatt points out that while the Germans have lost 1,300,000 in dead, they have made the loss good with 2,000,000 new men, thus overcoming the British strategy, which is trying to beat the Germans by attrition.

In its efforts to exhaust the Germans, asserts the Volksblatt, the British Army will itself be exhausted, so that "finally it will be thrown on the mercy of the Germans—a lucky thing for the British, because moderation in time of victory is one of the fine characteristics of the Germans."

So speaks the Volksblatt.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 19, 1917.]

PRO-GERMAN PAPERS UNDER CLOSE WATCH—GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATORS LOOKING AFTER ANTI-AMERICAN UTTERANCES IN MANY QUARTERS—SOME MAY BE SUPPRESSED—SECTIONS OF ESPIONAGE ACT TO BE INVOKED IN CHECKING ATTACKS UPON THIS COUNTRY'S WELFARE.

An official of the United States Government who is now engaged in an investigation of certain anti-American and pro-German pamphlets and weekly newspapers printed in this part of the country said yesterday that one result of the investigation has been to prove to him that not only are the persons identified with this propaganda laboring in the interests of the enemies of the United States but that in a majority of cases they are also working to bring about in the United States such a condition of affairs as the so-called soldiers' and workmen's council sought to bring about in Russia. Within the past few weeks some of these publications have assumed a pro-German attitude even more violent than before the United States declared war on Germany.

For weeks past the Post Office and Department of Justice inspection services have been keeping a close watch on the circulation of these anti-American publications, so far as the mail is concerned, and among the possibilities of the near future is the suppression of at least some of the more violent of these papers and pamphlets. The country-wide investigation now under way is being made under the authority of section 3 of title 1 and sections 1, 2, and 3 of title 12 of the espionage act, which was signed by President Wilson on June 15 last.

The principal objects sought by those responsible for the circulation in this country of these pro-German, anti-American newspapers, pamphlets, and circulars are:

First. To stir up trouble between the United States and Great Britain by circulating statements that England brought about the present war; that England is really an enemy and not an ally of the United States; and printing cartoons and drawings, the purpose of which is to create in the minds of the people of the country the impression that President Wilson and other high officials of the Government are tools of the British Government, exploited for the selfish purposes of Great Britain.

Second. To spread broadcast the statement that the United States went to war in order to save the fortunes of certain rich men and of various corporations engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war, and that President Wilson willfully and knowingly uttered an untruth when he said that the United States went to war "to make the world safe for democracy."

Third. To instigate all the trouble possible between American employers of labor and their employees and to make the laboring people believe that they are being exploited in this war in behalf of the corporations and men of great wealth.

Fourth. To embitter the Irish-American population against the United States Government and endeavor to make them believe that President Wilson favors harsh measures in the handling of the Irish problem, this part of the propaganda being in charge of certain Irishmen who long ago left Ireland to make war on England from the United States.

Fifth. To agitate in all parts of the country in favor of a peace such as Germany favors and against which President Wilson, Lloyd George, and other entente statesmen have time and again warned the peoples of the allied countries.

Sixth. To create the impression that American newspapers, while ostensibly owned by Americans are, in fact, owned by Englishmen and that the policies of these papers are secretly dictated by the British Government.

FIGHTS GERMAN PROPAGANDA—ASKS LOYAL GERMAN-AMERICANS TO OPPOSE ENEMY ACTIVITIES.

To the EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN.

SIR: Believing that this is a good time for citizens who were born in Germany but have adopted this country as their own to learn to speak and read English, I have accepted the secretaryship of the Pro-American Society, the object of which is to enroll men who, like myself, are of German parentage—or perhaps of German birth—in a movement that has for its object the doing away with the German-printed papers during the present war with Germany.

This society is making no attack on patriotic men and women who, although of German birth, are loyally supporting America and her allies. But this society does propose to attack with all possible strength those who are working day and night against this Government. The German papers are, in the main, against America, and they are secretly encouraging disloyalty. In addition to this, the German papers are being used in a dangerous secret propaganda which unquestionably is being financed in Berlin. Poor fools who read only the German papers are being used and led into doing things that are unquestionably disloyal and that will eventually lead them into trouble with this Government and its citizens.

I realize that perhaps I am going to run some risks personally, and I know that I am going to be put to some annoyance in accepting the secretaryship of such a society, but it is about time that something was done, and some one has to do it.

Will not all those of German birth or parentage, or others who believe in a movement to have the German papers printed in English, at least during the war, send their names and addresses and any expression of opinion that they may care to give to me? If it is so wished, I will guarantee that the names will be held in strict confidence.

HARRY A. SCHENDEL,

Secretary of the Pro-American Society.

[From the Detroit Free Press, Aug. 25, 1917.]

THE MENACE OF THE GERMAN PRESS.

A German Lutheran minister who has become a genuine American has written an instructive communication to the New York Times on the general situation among people of his nationality in the United States; and in the course of it he declares that the greatest single menace to true Americanism is the German press throughout this country.

"The German papers are not printed for the benefit of America but rather for the benefit of Germany," he says. "The German press may be considered the high priestess of the most rabid German 'kultur.' The glorification of Germany seems to be the only excuse for the publication of these sheets. They have championed Germany's cause with the greatest fanaticism. There are things expressed in those papers which would not be tolerated if any man dared to utter them on the street. The unanimity of these papers is another remarkable thing. In Germany not all the papers are agreed with regard to everything the Government may do, but these German papers in America are always in full and hearty accord with the Kaiser and his minions. Some of the German editors in Germany who have dared to give America some little credit and justice have been savagely attacked by the German press of America. The German-American press seems to be representative of the junkers. Perhaps it receives a subsidy directly from Berlin."

We have quoted at length because the situation in the United States with regard to the German press is really a serious one, and because the statement of the man quoted may be considered the expression of a person in thorough and intimate touch with his subject. His suspicion that the German papers may be subsidized by Berlin is quite conceivably accurate with respect to a part of them, and the unanimity of sentiment he notes—and this unanimity may be verified by anyone taking the trouble to keep even a cursory run of editorial utterances—is to be naturally interpreted in only one way, as evidence of a combine for the manufacture of pro-German sentiment, engineered by some central agency. The propaganda of these publications, sometimes insidious and difficult to put into tangible form in a translation and not always apparent to the chance reader unacquainted with all the contexts and antecedents, is universally inimical to the best interests of America, antagonistic to the Government war policies, and distinctly designed to be subversive of patriotism, conducive to sedition, and obstructive of a clear understanding of conditions by readers. There is distortion of news, confusion of issues, misrepresentation of facts. There is veiled exultation over every report of Teutonic success, and there are efforts to discredit every entente report of victory. In every way possible aid and comfort are provided the enemy.

So far the Teutonic propagandists have been allowed to travel their road about as they pleased. Little effort has been made to curb them. But it is a grave question whether the United States and its people can afford to continue this tolerance indefinitely, particularly as there are indications even in Congress that it is by no means losing ground. The agitation being carried on is in its character very like the agitation that has been conducted in Russia by the German agents. The methods of operation in the two countries have points of striking similarity. In Russia the effect has been most disastrous, and the end is not yet. In the United States the injuries inflicted are in no case immediately dangerous, but the possibilities are serious. For even though the Nation is sound, even though it can withstand with comparative impunity a good many attacks on its essential solidarity, the most robust physique can not be wholly impregnable or indifferent to pernicious germs unless something is done to nullify their effect. The Nation has been indifferent to the insidious poison of the German-American press within its borders about as long as is safe or comfortable. It is high time the Government took effective measures of some sort to insure a cessation of its activities.

[From the Milwaukee Journal, Aug. 25, 1917.]

GERMANY EXPECTS AID HERE.

"One thing is as sure as the foundations of the Washington Capitol: America will be able neither to collect nor to send next year the gigantic armies of which the allies dream. If we hold out through just this one more winter, the worthlessness of American help must be revealed."

In these words the Cologne Gazette, a semi-official newspaper, attempts to convince its readers that America's part in the war will be practically negligible. It may be that this German newspaper believes what it says. It may believe what the Cologne Zeitung said last June:

"Our best allies will be now, as formerly, the German-Americans, whose duty has been to explain to the grossly ignorant in America the true German position. * * * We may count on it that our compatriots will once again be at their post."

In other words, just as Germany believed the representations that German newspapers and German societies in the United States would prevent our Government from resenting the German Government's ruthless crimes against us, no matter how far it went, so now belief is expressed in Germany that American citizens of German extraction, "our compatriots," the Cologne Zeitung calls them, will paralyze America's arm and cause her to be puerile and contemptible in the war that has been forced upon her.

Germany will have a rude awakening. In the first place, America will fight hard and effectively. In the second place, any body of citizens that try to hamstring Uncle Sam will find that he is alert and watchful and not slow to punish. In the third place, the great body of Americans of German extraction are too loyal and too sensible to aid their country's foe.

That German agitators here, as well as German newspapers and German societies wearing the mask of pacifism, are doing their utmost to help Germany by weakening America there is, of course, no doubt. In every case, however, the first overt act will be followed with arrest and punishment. Meanwhile the sooner loyal citizens separate themselves from those who preach sedition and plot treason the better it will be for them and for the country—and particularly for them.

KEEPING THE GERMAN IMMIGRANT AN ALIEN—INFLUENCES WHICH MAKE HIM MORE FOND OF AN IDEALIZED GERMANY AND DISCONTENTED WITH A MISREPRESENTED AMERICA.

[By a German Lutheran pastor.]

ONBOW, ME., August 10, 1917.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Among the many letters which my article, "Why the immigrant remains an alien" (printed in your issue of June 24), has brought me from various parts of the country, one written in the South seems worthy of reproduction in your columns. In response to my request for permission to publish it the writer, a Lutheran pastor, in granting that permission, says: "If the use of my name will do any good, I believe it would be foolish to mention it. I have been obliged to resign from one congregation owing to American sympathies, and the very small congregation that I have left is composed entirely of strong pro-German people, as is also the entire conference in [my State] so that you will understand that my position is rather difficult."

The Rev. ——— advocates the suppression of the German-language press. Surely he is in a position to gauge its pernicious influence.

C. F. GOODRICH.

[The letter.]

DEAR SIR: I had the pleasure to read your article * * * "Why the Stranger in Our Gates Remains an Alien." As I am and always was deeply interested in this question, I am very glad to see that you have seen the importance of this problem and devoted some serious thought of it. I sincerely hope that you will continue the good work to bring Americans to a better understanding of the status of the foreigner among us. But if you will kindly permit me, I would like to make a few suggestions, not, indeed, in a spirit of carping criticism, but, rather, in a friendly spirit of cooperation. You see, my dear Admiral, I have always had exceptional opportunity to study this matter. In the first place, I myself am of pure German descent and know German better than English. I have never attended public school, but have received my entire education at German institutions (in the United States). In the second place, I have come in close social contact with those people of whom you speak, being well acquainted with thousands of Germans, as I was traveling missionary and explorer for the German Lutheran Church for a number of strenuous years. In fact, all my friends and nearly all my acquaintances are pro-German. At present I am pastor of a Lutheran church.

Answering the question: Why does the German remain a German in our midst? I would begin to point out that the attitude of the American public toward the foreigner is not correct in several respects.

In the first place, not enough attention is paid to him by real, honest, and patriotic Americans and too much attention is paid him by Germans. It may be that his first experience with "Americans" is with land agents or other rather unscrupulous business people. It is very often that the first impression he receives of America is very bad. Furthermore, all naturalized citizens need to be educated in regard to the real American spirit, etc. Very many never receive such education, no matter how long they live here. An immigrant from Germany will call himself a "German" even if he has become a full citizen of the United States. This is wrong. He is no German any more. If he is, who then is an American? Most people of German birth or descent in the United States will call themselves Germans in distinction from Americans. It is their usual way of speaking. But instead of telling them their error, most of their English-speaking neighbors adopt the same manner of speech. In the past it was also expected of everyone who had the slightest trace of German blood in his veins to sympathize deeply with Germany and to defend all acts of the Kaiser.

I have been against Germany from the very beginning of the war because my conscience compelled me to. For this reason, I have been despised both by English and by German acquaintances.

Even a man like Bryan stated publicly that all those of German extraction would disgrace themselves if they stood against Germany. This idea has been expressed not only by some very prominent men, but also by many widely read newspapers. It shows plainly how little thought is given to the foreigner among us. He should be taught to feel himself one of us and not to be strengthened and confirmed in his racial preference; besides, it is an unwarranted assumption that every person whose forefathers or who himself did not consider Germany a fit place to live in should to the end of his days endorse every wickedness that the German, Austrian, Bulgarian, and Turkish Governments may perpetrate. If George Washington thought that "blood is thicker than water," this did not keep him from putting justice and liberty above any real or imagined consanguinity. He is not condemned for doing this, but the few Americans of German descent who have dared to stand up for the same thing for which we as a Nation are now fighting, have been reproached and looked upon as traitors to their race, not only by pro-Germans but also by very many who agreed with them. Such narrow-minded men have done Germany a great favor.

You put considerable emphasis on the importance of the English language as an agent to make Americans out of foreigners. I admit that it is of importance, but how many Americans of German descent can not read and speak English? You will find very few indeed. Most immigrants learn English very quickly. It is not the German language, but rather the German spirit, which keeps many from ever becoming Americanized. I could prove this by many striking instances. I have found many fanatic pro-Germans who could not read German at all and who spoke it so faultily that they were ashamed to speak German in my presence at all.

What has caused most Germans to leave Germany who are now American citizens? I do not believe that there is one among a thousand that has emigrated on account of dissatisfaction with the German Government during the last 40 years. Before that time it was different. Now and then you may meet an aged German who really came to America in quest of freedom, but it is extremely seldom that you will hear the slightest criticism from any former German subject of German political or economic conditions. Even those who may have been dissatisfied with Germany at one time will gradually become reconciled after they have lived among us for some time. They forget the bad side of Germany and remember only the good. This is largely due to the influence of the German propaganda in this country. The very great majority, however, has not left Germany at all owing to serious dissatisfaction. Most immigrants are young people. They did not consider carefully the seriousness of the step they were taking. It does not enter their minds at all that they must cease to be Germans in order to become Americans.

The whole thing is little else than a mere business proposition or a kind of adventure. Most of them have curious wrong notions of America. The general belief seems to be that a person can quickly get rich here. A great many of these people are of the poorest and lowest class. They never took much interest in politics in Germany, and you will even find many who never read a newspaper regularly in Germany. Therefore you will find a remarkable lack of knowledge among the Germans in America in regard to German conditions. They generally come to America with rosy, extravagant hopes. It is natural that most of them are therefore seriously disappointed. Nearly all of them begin to read a German paper regularly and are soon astounded at the wickedness of America. Such things, they will tell you, never happened in Germany. They read of political scandals, attacks on the President and other prominent men, and quickly come to the conclusion that everything is humbug in this country; that there is no honesty among our officials, etc. It is a very difficult process for a real German to become an American. The difference is too great, too fundamental. He is used to seeing all officials treated with great respect. He despises our officials because they are not treated with the respect which would be their due in Germany. He is accustomed to pomp and ceremony, to rigid enforcement of every law, etc. He does not understand and appreciate our liberty but considers it as a kind of weakness of the Government and a lack of order.

He will also find very little to admire from his point of view in the manner of living, the family life, the customs, etc., of his American neighbors. He continually draws comparisons between German and American conditions, and all these strengthen him in his belief of the superiority of Germany, even though very many of these comparisons are outrageously unjust. He is homesick for Germany, where he spent the best part of his life, his early youth. Many never lose this homesickness, no matter how long they have lived here. All this results in making even a better German out of the immigrant than he was when he landed on our shores. At least this is the result in many instances.

A most powerful agent to achieve this end is the German press in America. I consider it the greatest single menace to true Americanism existing. The German papers are not printed for the benefit of America, but rather for the benefit of Germany. The German press may be considered as the high priestess of the most rabid German "Kultur." The glorification of Germany seems to be the only excuse for the publication of these sheets. They have championed Germany's cause with the greatest fanaticism. Even now they show an undisguised deep sympathy for Germany and an implacable hatred against some of our allies. The men connected with these papers are sometimes unnaturalized German subjects, or at least men who are not even touched with the true American spirit. Do you think that our Government ought to allow open enemies of America to publish their seditious ideas openly in their newspapers?

There were things expressed in these papers which would not be tolerated if any man dared to utter them on the street. The unanimity of these papers is another remarkable thing. In Germany not all papers are agreed with everything the Government may do, but these German papers in America are always in full and hearty accord with the Kaiser and his minions. Thus the German-American press is really more German than many papers in Germany. Some of the German editors in Germany who dared to give America some little credit and justice have been savagely attacked by the German press of America. The German-American press seems to be representative of the Junkers. Perhaps it receives a subsidy directly from Berlin. I believe these papers ought to be suppressed during our war with Germany. No other nation would tolerate them. They are a danger and continual insult to us. It is not enough to censor them. They would laugh at a censorship. You can not censor the right spirit into a publication. It would also be difficult to find censors who are willing and able to do this work conscientiously. A casual reader of the German papers may find little to object to, while a person who can read between the lines will be prompted to tear the miserable sheet into pieces. I ask you, my dear sir, to use your influence to the suppression of this powerful weapon of Germany among us.

Why does the alien in our gates remain a stranger? Is it remarkable if he does when he finds a little Germany prepared for him here in America? He probably meets his German friends or the representatives of German organizations on the dock where he lands. He is led to a German hotel, settles in a German community, reads a German paper, joins German societies and churches, his children go to German schools, all the friends are Germans, they sing their German patriotic hymns with great enthusiasm, have their German festivals, and associate as little with "Americans" as possible.

The most important thing which ought to be suppressed is the German press. It is the link between Germany and German-America. It educates the readers never to forget their German Fatherland, but to love and adore it more and more and incidentally to think little of America.

Very respectfully,

IN THE GERMAN WAY—WOULD THE GERMAN PRESS OBJECT TO CENSORSHIP
AS APPLIED IN ALSACE?

BROOKLYN, N. Y., August 16, 1917.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Is it possible that our President hesitates to stop the printing of newspapers in German, or at least have the German papers issued both in the English language and their own, just the same as the Kaiser compels all newspapers in Alsace-Lorraine to be published in French and German or German only?

As a former employee of the Journal d'Alsace, in Strasbourg, I remember having gone every day with a copy of that paper to the "Polizei Kommissar" to have his approval before putting the papers through the press for publication, and very often some articles praising some French individual did not suit his "Excellenz," and either we had to rewrite it or he suppressed it.

We ought to give the German Kultur a dose of its own medicine and compel the German editors to have their issues understood by everybody.

M. TREBOR.

PRO-AMERICAN SOCIETY,
New York City, N. Y., August 25, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM H. KING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KING: We have been given to understand that you are in sympathy with a movement to force the German papers to print in English during the war.

The inclosed clipping will explain the object of our society.

We are endeavoring to establish branches in every city where there is a German paper, and we are communicating with people who advertise in German papers that their advertising in these papers is unpatriotic. We are also asking those who sympathize with the movement to address their Congressman, as there may eventually be Federal action.

As much as possible we are asking German born and citizens of German parentage to take the public initiative, as we believe in this way that we will encourage loyalty among those of Teutonic origin.

At the present time we do not believe in having dues, as we do not want the people to feel that there is any expense connected with the society. However, where there is any inclination to give voluntary contributions unsolicited they will be gratefully received, as so far the expenses have been borne by a comparative few.

Very truly, yours,

HARRY A. SCHENDEL, Secretary.

P. S.—Every officer of this society is either of German birth or parentage.

[From the Cincinnati Times-Star, July 13, 1917.]

GERMAN PAPERS MAY BE COMPELLED TO PUBLISH ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS—PROPOSED ORDINANCE IN THAT CONNECTION IS PREPARED—PROVIDES A PENALTY FOR FAILURE OF PUBLICATIONS TO CARRY THEM SIDE BY SIDE.

An ordinance designed to unfold to the English-speaking residents of Cincinnati the news and comments as printed in the German newspapers of the city has been prepared by Attorney Henry K. Gibson and submitted to Councilman Charles O. Rose, of the second ward. It would compel by law all publishers of newspapers, periodicals, and pamphlets printed in the language of an enemy to the United States to print alongside their matter, word for word, translations in the English language, all of which would be vouched for in sworn statements by the publisher of each newspaper. Attorney Gibson's letter to Councilman Rose follows:

DISLOYAL SENTIMENTS.

"You will please find herewith an ordinance which I have prepared, and I respectfully request that you introduce it in the city council of Cincinnati. Accompanying the ordinance are also copies of translations from local German papers, which have recently appeared in the Cincinnati Post and Cincinnati Times-Star, and which translations are self-explanatory; also an editorial from the Times-Star of the issue of July 7, 1917.

"I wish to respectfully suggest to you and your fellow councilmen that the passage of this ordinance would do a great deal toward showing the people of the United States that Cincinnati is always to be found in the vanguard of patriotic expression and accomplishment, even though a large percentage of her population is of German descent. I also feel certain that thousands of our good citizens of German parentage will be found to be in complete sympathy with this ordinance, for the disloyal sentiments which have appeared in the German-American press of Cincinnati should not by any means be taken as an expression of any large percentage of our citizens.

"If we must have American citizens in this city who are so unpatriotic and impudent as to publish disloyal editorials, let us at least have their sentiments printed in the English language, so that all may read.

"It is quite possible that code messages to German spies are carried, or can be carried, in these German newspapers published here in our city.

"It may possibly be suggested that this ordinance is illegal. To such a suggestion my reply is that it is valid under the police power given to municipalities and as a war measure.

"Furthermore, I would suggest that council pass the ordinance and, if there is any question as to its legality, let our courts decide the question."

PENALTY PRESCRIBED.

The ordinance is as follows:

"Whereas the United States is now at war with a foreign power; and
"Whereas certain newspapers and periodicals are being published and circulated in the city of Cincinnati, which newspapers and periodicals are printed in the official, common, and recognized language of the public enemy; and
"Whereas it is essential for the preservation of the internal peace and welfare of the city of Cincinnati and for the information of its citizens to require English translations to be printed with and in said newspapers and periodicals printed in the language of the common enemy: Now, therefore, be it

"Ordained by the Council of the City of Cincinnati, Ohio:

"SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful to publish, print, or circulate in the city of Cincinnati any newspaper, periodical, or pamphlet printed in the language of the public enemy of the United States without correct, complete, authentic, and certified English translations of all news and editorial columns in said newspapers, periodicals, and pamphlets.

"SEC. 2. That said English translation must be printed side by side with the columns printed in the language of the public enemy for which the translation is made.

"SEC. 3. The managing editor or proprietor, or person publishing any of the said newspapers, periodicals, or pamphlets shall, in each issue or publication thereof, make a sworn statement under oath that the English translation is complete in every particular and true in every respect.

"SEC. 4. Any violation of any of the foregoing sections shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in the municipal court of Cincinnati any violator shall be fined a sum of not less than $500 for the first offense and for a second offense shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500 and imprisoned in the city workhouse not longer than 60 days, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 5. The provisions of this ordinance shall take effect from and after the earliest period allowed by law and shall remain in full force and effect throughout the duration of the war in which the United States is now engaged."

WOULD REQUIRE TRANSLATIONS IN ENGLISH—SENATE BILL AIMED AT GERMAN-LANGUAGE PAPERS—PROPOSED LEGISLATION IN CINCINNATI ALONG SIMILAR LINES IS RECALLED.

Cincinnati's will be interested in a news dispatch from Washington in effect that a bill has been introduced in the Senate to require German newspapers to publish their war news in both German and English. The News will recall that a bill was prepared by Attorney Henry Gibson and sent to Councilman Rose for introduction in council several weeks ago. The proposed ordinance was almost identical with the Senate bill which Senator KING, of Utah, introduced. After considerable debate upon the constitutionality of the proposed Cincinnati ordinance it was permitted to die, without ever having been introduced in council.

The Senate bill provides that all war news and "comment on international or political questions affecting the war" in German or other foreign-language newspapers should be accompanied in a parallel column with a true and correct translation in English.

"After reading the column in the Times-Star called 'Our patriotic columns' for several days," Attorney Gibson said Monday, "I feel certain that Mr. KING knows what he is doing in introducing this bill. I hope that it becomes a law."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it has been suggested that the language of section 20, a new section, may be so broad as to impair the obligation of contracts made pursuant to the terms of this act. I am very sure that that is not possible, that that construction can not be maintained; but in order to save any difficulty or dispute and in compliance with the request of the Senator in charge of the bill I have prepared the following amendment, which I move to add at the end of section 20:

Provided, That the obligation of contracts shall not be impaired by reason of the terms of this section.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, save the amendment reserved by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. The amendments will be concurred in, without objection. The question is on concurring in the amendment reserved by the Senator from Connecticut. It will be concurred in, without objection. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, September 13, 1917, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, September 12, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, whose sacred name is dear to the heart of every true man, the inspiration of every noble deed, help us to realize that the highest service we can render to Thee is willing and unselfish service to the interest of our fellow men.

Let Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, be upon our dear old Flag and all the sacred principles it represents, so dearly bought, so highly prized, so full of hope and promise. Let it float in triumph where'er it may go, champion of liberty, justice, and equal rights for all, and Thine shall be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 70. An act providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana;

S. 2123. An act to regulate the practice of pediatry in the District of Columbia;

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within three years from the date of entry into the United States;

S. 2830. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.;

S. 2663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River;

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution for improving Willapa Harbor and River, Wash.;

S. 291. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the town of Murfreesboro, Tenn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and suitable outfit of cannon balls;

S. 1546. An act to permit the use of certain refined products of petroleum as stores on steam vessels carrying passengers;

S. 1547. An act to amend section 5 of the motor-boat law approved June 9, 1910;

S. 1549. An act to require numbering and recording of undocumented vessels;

S. 2495. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 746. An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the northern and southern judicial districts in the State of Mississippi, and for other purposes;

S. 1836. An act to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes;

S. 1544. An act to provide for appeals from decisions of boards of local inspectors of steam vessels, and for other purposes;

S. 1545. An act to amend the act of March 3, 1913, entitled "An act to regulate the officering and manning of vessels subject to the inspection laws of the United States";

S. 2531. An act to prevent the publication of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes;

S. 2617. An act authorizing the restoration of John T. Melvin, a lieutenant (junior grade), to the active list of the Navy;

S. 2823. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin;

S. 2134. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a deed to the persons hereinafter named for part of a lot in the District of Columbia;

S. 2858. An act to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States;

S. 1767. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to Lewisburg, Marshall County, Tenn., three brass cannon, with carriage;

S. 2495. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 2435. An act authorizing the counties of Itasca and Cass, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said counties;

S. 2777. An act providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge in the first and fourth judicial districts, respectively;

S. 1420. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of Tennessee two brass cannon, with carriage;

S. 2623. An act defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe; and Senate concurrent resolution 12.

Whereas the people and the Government of the United States are now engaged in the greatest war of history, which, in its determination, is fraught with great results for good or evil, not only to the people of this country, but to the people of the whole world, and which is the greatest undertaking upon which this country has ever embarked; and

Whereas this country is about to engage in preparing for war and will soon be sending abroad to the theater of war great numbers of our young men, there to take part in the sanguinary conflict and offer their lives in defense of their country's rights; and

Whereas it is in accordance with the customs and traditions of this country as a Christian Nation, and has heretofore been the practice of this country upon engaging in war, to set aside a day by official proclamation for prayer for the aid of the Almighty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is, requested by Congress to issue a proclamation, designating a day of prayer and calling upon the people of this country on such day to assemble in their various places of worship, and there offer prayer to Almighty God for the success of our armies and victory for our cause in this great conflict.

WAR REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 4280, known as the war-revenue bill, and move to disagree to all amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the war-revenue bill, disagree to all Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLET. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think it might affect the action of the House on this if the gentleman would be willing to inform the House of what his program would be as to the action of the House, our meeting, and so forth, during the time the bill is in conference, if the gentleman is willing to state.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think now that the program would probably be, after the conclusion of the bill now before the House—that is, the soldiers' insurance bill—that the deficiency appropriation bill would be taken up, and after that is concluded there will be some requests, of course, for unanimous consent. But at the conclusion of these bills, while the conferees are meeting, I think the House could take a recess every three days until the conclusion of the conference.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have asked to be recognized this morning for the purpose of seeking unanimous consent, after the passage of the deficiency bill, to call up what is known as the alien slacker bill, a bill reported by the Committee on Immigration, in regard to the conscription of aliens who are citizens or subjects of a country in war in Europe. I thought it proper to give this notice now in order that gentlemen might not act on the idea that nothing else would be taken up. I might not get unanimous consent. I hope I may, because there is great demand for that bill, especially in sections of the country where there are a great many aliens who are seeking to avoid and are avoiding conscription. I merely wanted to call attention to that.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina how much is proposed to be raised by the present revenue bill, according to the amendments made by the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate experts estimate that it will raise in round numbers $2,416,000,000.

Mr. NORTON. Two billion four hundred and sixteen million dollars?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The House bill proposed to raise what amount?

Mr. KITCHIN. The House bill would raise $1,868,000,000. But you will understand that was presented and passed the House before the new demand for about $5,000,000,000 of increased revenues or appropriations were made. I would like to state to the gentleman in that connection that when we presented the bill the Treasury demands for revenue taxation were only $1,800,000,000 in round figures, and the House passed a bill raising somewhat in excess of that amount to be sure of getting enough.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I might suggest to the gentleman that at that time—

Mr. KITCHIN. The bill as first reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate provided for raising approximately $1,650,000,000. The bill was afterwards referred back to the Finance Committee, owing to the new demands. It thereafter, on August 6, reported the bill, with amendments, raising

$2,000,000,000. But the Senate amended the bill so as to produce, according to the estimate of their report, $2,416,000,000, some of the amendments being offered by the Finance Committee.

Mr. NORTON. I understand the general situation, I will say to the gentleman. But here is a particular point which I desire to reach—I shall endeavor to reach it by further inquiry: Will the gentleman state the amount that it is estimated will be necessary to be expended for the conduct of the war during the present fiscal year?

Mr. KITCHIN. We went into that very thoroughly on the bond bill. The total appropriations that have been already made, and that it is contemplated will be made, aggregate, in round numbers, $19,000,000,000.

Mr. NORTON. That, of course, includes the amount which has been and is contemplated to be loaned to foreign Governments?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. From that you deduct $7,000,000,000, amount loaned and to be loaned during this fiscal year to the allies.

Mr. NORTON. The amount to be expended for the conduct of the war during the present fiscal year, and for the general expenses of the Government, in round numbers, is, then, about $12,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Now, I have this in mind, that a great many people throughout the country, and I believe a large number of Members of the House, desire that the Government adopt and pursue a policy whereby a larger percentage of the amount to be expended for the conduct of the war during the present fiscal year shall be raised by taxation than $2,416,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say that the gentleman does not quite understand the situation as to the amount raised. Deduct from that $12,000,000,000, $1,333,000,000, which according to estimates will be raised by taxation under existing law, which I think will lack several million dollars of being enough to defray the current expenses, and the $2,000,000,000 proceeds of sale of bonds recently authorized available for expenditures of our Government; also deduct $325,000,000 of postal expenses, that will be reimbursed by postal receipts, the $60,000,000 of the bookkeeping account sinking fund. After deducting all these you will have left about $8,300,000,000 for war expenses.

Mr. NORTON. According to the gentleman's estimates, there would then be about $8,300,000,000, which would represent the amount of actual war expenses for the present fiscal year?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; about $8,300,000,000 for our estimated war expenditures during this fiscal year. I think the pending revenue bill, when it gets out of conference, will in round numbers raise $2,500,000,000, leaving about $5,800,000,000 in round numbers to be raised hereafter, either by the issue of bonds or by additional taxation, or by both.

Mr. GARNER. Which will be considered at the regular session. Up to the present time more than 25 per cent of the war indebtedness has been proposed to be raised by taxes.

Now, when we come to issue additional bonds or raise additional money, then the question of the relative proportions will be considered.

Mr. NORTON. I had this in mind—

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen are going to extend this discussion, will they not come down in front where they can be heard?

Mr. GARNER. Let us send this bill to conference. The gentleman from North Dakota has been away, and he has come back with new information, probably.

Mr. NORTON. No; the gentleman from North Dakota has not come back with any particularly new information at all. He has, however, the same information concerning the conditions of the country that he had when he went away, and he at this time wishes again to emphasize the wisdom and sound economics of raising by taxation at least 50 per cent of the money to be expended for carrying on the war during the present fiscal year.

Mr. GARNER. This whole matter was all gone over in the bond discussion. The gentleman is asking questions that were all answered and thoroughly considered in the debate on the bond bill. It is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I was sure the gentleman had been away. That is the reason I made the remark I did.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what the regular order is.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to take this bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is this dialogue in order?

The SPEAKER. Why, yes. Gentlemen have reserved the right to object, and pending that this discussion is going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman can demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. But gentleman should talk one at a time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say to the gentleman from North Dakota that if he will read the report which the committee filed on the bond bill and my explanation of the bill, made when it was presented to the House, he will find all the figures set forth accurately.

Mr. NORTON. I have done that. I have those figures well in mind. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Speaker. Mr. Speaker, will it be in order, before the conferees are appointed, to move to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. A motion to instruct the conferees will be in order after the House agrees to the conference and before the House conferees are appointed.

Mr. NORTON. Will it at that time be in order to instruct the conferees to amend the bill so as to raise revenue to the amount of at least 50 per cent of the amount necessary to be expended to meet the expenses of the war during the present fiscal year?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an absolute right to move to instruct the conferees, but the House can not instruct the conferees to act in contravention of the rules of the House.

Mr. NORTON. That is what I had in mind, that when the House bill provided for raising revenue amounting in round numbers to only $1,868,000,000, at this time the House under the rules would be foreclosed from instructing the conferees to do what a great many in the House, I believe, desire and what a great many people throughout the country desire to have done.

The SPEAKER. You can not instruct the conferees on anything that is not a disagreement between the two Houses. That rule is over 100 years old.

Mr. NORTON. I knew that that rule existed here for a long time, but whether it was 90 years old or 125 years old I must confess I did not know.

The SPEAKER. That principle was laid down by Henry Clay on June 23, 1812, and it has been the rule of the House ever since.

Mr. KITCHIN. We can not go higher than the Senate amendments have gone or lower than the House has gone. We must go between the lower rate and the higher rate, or accept the lower or higher rate, which are in dispute.

Mr. NORTON. Then in this bill, as I understand it, the House is practically foreclosed from raising an amount of revenue much in excess of what the Senate has provided, about $2,430,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. We could go higher than that by persuading, if possible, the Senate conferees to agree to put back many of the House provisions raising additional revenue which the Senate struck out. Since the Senate struck out the entire title relative to the House excess-profits tax the conferees could probably, without violating any rules, increase the rates over those in House or Senate provisions.

Mr. NORTON. That and other provisions that have been stricken out by the Senate can be reinstated and the total amount of revenue to be raised by the bill in this way increased?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. I sincerely trust that this will be done by the conferees.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me, the gentleman from North Dakota suggests that a greater amount of taxes be raised to carry on this war. The gentleman has forgotten that in addition to the amount provided in this bill, which will be raised if this bill is enacted into law in about its present shape, the people of the country by this bill and under existing laws previously passed will be called upon this year to raise about $4,250,000,000, a sum far greater than has ever been raised before. That amount, in proportion to the cost of carrying on a war by any people, has never been raised in any one year in any country in the world before, and before you put any more taxes upon the people you will have a very protracted and hard-fought contest in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. I understand the gentleman's position. The gentleman's position is different to mine. I believe in raising revenue to pay the expenses of the war, and the gentleman believes in issuing bonds.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me tell my friend that I believe in the people paying a fair share at the same time while they are contributing human life to carry on this war; but if there is any benefit to come to the people of this country from this war future generations will enjoy that benefit and ought to pay a portion of this tax. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. I differ with what the gentleman considers a fair share. Of course the gentleman has his definition of a fair share.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. There are quite a number of Senate amendments that some Members of the House would like to have agreed to at this time; but in view of the very great number of Senate amendments and the situation generally with regard to the bill, that is not practicable. I, in common with many Members of the House, would particularly like to have the House concur in those Senate amendments that struck from the bill the increase in the postal rates. I feel confident, however, that the conferees will concur in those Senate amendments, in view of what occurred in the House relative to those increases. The House did not accept the committee's original proposition relative to second-class mail matter, but adopted a compromise.

Mr. KITCHIN. By a majority of about 100.

Mr. MONDELL. The motion in committee to strike out second-class mail increases was defeated by a comparatively narrow margin.

Mr. FORDNEY. By only 106 majority; that was all; 256 to 150.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is talking about another vote. It is true the House voted for the better of the two zone systems offered by a considerable majority. I judge from the gentleman's tone that he personally might be inclined as a conferee to adhere to the House position. I hope I misunderstand him.

Mr. FORDNEY. Not at all; I am speaking of what occurred in the House. The gentleman says it was by a very narrow margin. I say it was voted down by a majority of 106.

Mr. MADDEN. In these days, when nearly all the votes are unanimous, 106 majority does not amount to much. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. My friend from Michigan is mistaken about the vote on striking out the second-class mail increase; he is talking about the vote on the Kitchin substitute. That was a choice of two evils; the House took the least of the two. At any rate, it is out of the bill as it comes from the Senate. My hope is that it will remain out of the bill. If I believed that there was any possibility of getting a vote now without complicating the situation and delaying the bill, I should be inclined to withhold unanimous consent, because I am satisfied that if the House had an opportunity to vote now it would concur in the Senate amendment. I know we are all anxious to have the bill get to conference.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that I can assure him that the House conferees will take into consideration both his sanguine hope and also the emphatic majority of the House in voting on this proposition. That, I hope, will be perfectly satisfactory to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that the action of the other body was very emphatic.

Mr. KITCHIN. By five or six majority, let me say to the gentleman. The gentleman might have been in his committee room and not have had a chance to read the Record. The gentleman must remember that the McKellar amendment providing for the zone rates went into the bill in the Senate after full discussion by a majority of 40 to 35. But afterwards, when it went back into the Senate and the Senate had voted all day on thousands of amendments, and no time for discussion, it went out of the Senate bill by a vote of 34 to 40.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman means to say is that the Senate, after full, careful consideration, struck out the increases and the zone system.

Mr. KITCHIN. They put it in by 40 to 35, and then in a rash and hasty manner, in order to get through with all the amendments in one day, by a mistake struck it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. If what my friends on both sides have said in regard to this matter indicate the determination on their part not to consider these matters, I do not know but that I shall be inclined to withhold consent to this bill going to conference now.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; the gentleman would not do that when I say that we are going to take into consideration all that he says. It would not be complimentary to him.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust that the conferees will consider how improper, inequitable, unwise, unjust, unfair, unreasonable, and indefensible are the propositions to change the postal laws in a revenue bill.

In order that the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentlemen from Michigan may have their memories refreshed in regard to this matter, let me remind them that when the bill came into the House from the committee it contained a provision for zone rates on second-class mail matter. It evidently became apparent to the committee while the bill was under consideration that the House would not stand for these zone rates, for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], on behalf of the committee, offered a greatly modified, less far-reaching, more moderate, and less objectionable zone provision as a substitute. This put Members in an embarrassing position. If they voted against the less objectionable provision offered as a substitute the more objectionable original provision might remain in the bill, and between two evils the House took the least by a majority of 106, as has been stated by the gentleman from Michigan. The only opportunity that was had to get an expression directly on the question of whether or not a zone system should be provided occurred in Committee of the Whole on my motion to strike out all of the provisions with regard to second-class postal rates. This vote came, as the friends of the zone system maneuvered that should, at a time when many of the opponents of increases of second-class postal rates and of the zone system had become discouraged through successive votes on proposed amendments, and yet on that the majority in favor of retaining the provision in the bill on a rising vote was only 46. If we could have secured a vote earlier, before the situation became so complicated, my opinion is the increases and the zone rates would have all gone out of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have noted the gentleman's protest.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and yet I want to say that if we had time it would be instructive to find out what these Senate amendments mean. I would be very glad if we could do so, provided that each Member of Congress had an expert. [Laughter.] I want to be perfectly candid. I have been connected with the expenditure of money substantially during the whole of my congressional life, but I never have been an expert touching the schedules. I spent until 2 o'clock this morning trying to find out just what the Senate amendments mean. I think I know a little more than I did but not a great deal. [Laughter.] Of course, this bill might under the rules of the House, without a special rule, be considered in the Committee of the Whole House as to the Senate amendments. But if that should be done at this stage by a majority of us, free from demagoguery that does not amount to anything, we would be until the snow flies in getting it out of the House. So that, while I am not pleased with many of the Senate amendments, I am inclined to agree with most of them. I shall not object. I believe we will get better practical results even if we do not understand what is involved in every one of these amendments; that we will get better practical results by sending this bill to conference.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. The House committee drafted this bill with reference to a fifty-fifty basis, and approximated that in its bill, did it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; a fifty-fifty basis in this bill.

Mr. SLOAN. I mean 50 per cent of war expenses to be met by taxation and 50 per cent by bond issue.

Mr. KITCHIN. That was the measure approximately created.

Mr. SLOAN. I understood that was the demand of the country, the recommendation of the Executive, and it was what was accomplished in the Ways and Means Committee. It was accomplished at the time over the vigorous opposition of the gentleman from Michigan, so that the threat of the gentleman from Michigan about going up against his fighting qualities has not the terrors it used to have. [Laughter.] As I understand, the Senate has changed it to 35 per cent tax and 65 per cent bond issue.

Mr. KITCHIN. Approximately.

Mr. SLOAN. Thirty-five per cent tax and 65 per cent bonds. Now, I know the impossibility of approximating fifty-fifty in this conference. The latitude between the House and Senate bills will not permit it with the conference rules. But there are a number of opportunities to increase measurably the Senate bill. One is, of course, where we are allowing hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of goods to come through our ports every year without a dollar being paid for the privilege. That is one of the discards of the Senate. There are others we might speak of. I think it is the opinion of the country and of a majority of this House that the Senate bill should be measurably increased in so far as the relative conditions of the two bills will authorize it. We hear it very frequently stated that a large part of the burdens of the war should be placed on posterity because the war has been declared by us. Posterity was not present nor consulted and may or may not hereafter approve its involuntary representation in that direction. We are taking undue liberties with posterity and seeking to place a 65 per cent tax on them and assuming only 35 per cent ourselves. The testator who wills a mortgage in favor of his legatee may be thanked. To bequeath a mortgage for the legatee to pay may not excite great gratitude.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to say just one thing? The gentleman from Nebraska speaks about my fighting qualities and not wanting more taxes. I want to inform him that seven-tenths of these taxes will be paid by all the people east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio River, and the people from the State from which he comes will not pay their portion per capita, and I can understand why he wants more taxes placed on the people.

Mr. DYER. I just want, Mr. Speaker, to reiterate and had in my mouth to say what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said, that it is very easy for gentlemen to come here from districts in the far West and other places where their constituents pay practically no income tax, practically no corporation tax, and where they will pay practically no excess-profits tax under this bill, and say, "Let the people pay the taxes now." They say put 50 per cent on them at this time. In fact, the direct taxes in this bill are more now than they ought to be; and if you increase them you will find a destruction of business in the great commercial centers of the country. This the people of this country do not want. It would injure the prospect of winding this war up at an early date. Tear down these great industries with overtaxation and they can not exist. They are now taxed up to the limit almost.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas demands the regular order. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from North Carolina for unanimous consent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman presses the regular order now I shall object. I want to know if he objects.

The SPEAKER. It is for the gentleman from Kansas to state.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw the request.

Mr. KITCHIN. I now wish to yield to the gentleman from Colorado for a minute.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to occupy any part of the gentleman's time, but it seems to me that when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] bobs up here continually and protests against posterity being relieved from the necessity of paying for this war that the House should understand what he means. He is not interested in posterity. His protest is directed against the placing of taxes on wealth. [Applause.] When he pleads for posterity what he means to say is that this Congress should not take from excess profits and from the great incomes the money that is needed to pay the expenses of this Government.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], that the State of Nebraska has added more taxpayers to its list to support the General Government this year than has the State of Michigan. Our State and the States west of the Mississippi River to which he adverts are the States that will furnish tens of thousands of new income-tax payers by reason of the reduction of exemptions from the basis of $3,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married persons to $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for those who are married. Further than that, when he says seven-tenths of the taxes come from east of the Mississippi River I presume that is possibly true. About seven-tenths of the American people happen to live east of the Mississippi River. Of course, some would show better judgment if they moved out to God's country and left Michigan.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state how much his State pays in income taxes at the present time?

Mr. SLOAN. I am stating what it will be. The gentleman from Missouri is speaking of ancient history. I refer to the increase of taxpayers from the reduction of exemptions. And, further, the House bill provided a tax on automobile manufacturers. The Senate, in order to relieve the automobile manufacturers of the tax and still obtain money for the Treasury, has placed a tax on every automobile owner. Of these we have more in Nebraska, according to population, than almost any State in the Union.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, let it be understood, if it can, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] will be recognized for a minute or two to reply to all these attacks on him and then let the regular order be in order then.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I can not let such an insult go without answering it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us have that understood, that the regular order will be in order after the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman cast a reflection upon me which is an absolute insult. He has no warrant or no license to say that I am objecting to further taxes being put upon the people because it comes from the wealth of the country. He has no license to say that and neither has any other man, and any man who does is without any foundation whatever to base his statement upon. I stated on the floor of the House I had gone to the limit of raising money by direct taxation to carry on this war until this House gave some consideration to increasing the import taxes on goods coming into this country from abroad, which has always heretofore been a subject of taxation during the time of war, and when the gentleman makes that statement he knows, sitting in his seat, that he has no foundation for any such statement, but he wished to be unkind to me and says I am bobbing up all the time. I believe I occupy less time than any other man in the House engaged in the preparation—

Mr. BUTLER. With the exception of myself, and I want to vote now.

Mr. FORDNEY (continuing). Engaged in the preparation of important bills, and I never speak on the floor of the House unless I have something which I deem of importance to say.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. All this has nothing whatever to do with the dispute between the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the regular order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists on that, I shall object, because there is no reason why we should rush through in three-quarters of an hour a bill appropriating this enormous amount of money, which is a new bill. There is no such haste that it can not be discussed here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has the right to ask for the regular order—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has the right to object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall if the gentleman insists on it.

Mr. BUTLER. How much time should we have about something that will not go into dispute between these two bodies?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We can make inquiries as to what is in this report.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order, and I take the responsibility of doing it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order. The question is on the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to take this bill from the Speaker's table, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there an objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ADAMSON. I withhold the request for a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope gentlemen will remain here, because in a few minutes we hope to have a rule by which we can send this revenue bill to conference. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the House disposes of the deficiency bill, which has been reported, that it take up for consideration the bill H. R. 5667, known as the "alien-slackers" bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the discussion and vote on the deficiency bill the bill H. R. 5667 shall be in order.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has reported, and there is on the calendar of the House a bill of somewhat similar import. It goes, however, about the matter in an entirely different way. When the committee reported that bill I was not convinced that it would probably meet the situation fully, having in mind that very likely some such bill as that which the gentleman proposes the House should consider should perhaps be passed if the bill of the Committee on Foreign Affairs should be passed. The purpose of my inquiry is to know whether or not it would be advisable perhaps to make them both in order so that they may both be considered if the House shall feel disposed to act upon them.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, there is no conflict between the bills.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. None whatever.

Mr. BURNETT. And when the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs sought to call up the bill the gentleman from Minnesota refers to by unanimous consent before the recess, he spoke to me about it, and I told him I should not object. That resolution is the same as the McCumber resolution which was passed in the Senate, as I recollect it, on the 1st of August. I was in the State Department yesterday and I asked the solicitor what progress they were making on it, and he said they had not taken it up with foreign nations at all, but were still discussing it with the War Department. The statement was made by Senator CHAMBERLAIN when he tried to get his bill, somewhat similar to the one reported from the Immigration Committee of the House, up in the Senate that there would be an indefinite time in which to carry on the negotiations provided by the McCumber resolution. That the State Department has not proceeded further with that matter is no criticism, because it is a matter that takes time when it comes to negotiating with foreign powers. This bill is not in conflict, and so far as I am concerned I have no objection to the resolution that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] refers to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have serious doubt in my own mind if we have the right, or, if we have the right, that we should exercise it, to pass the bill the gentleman asks to be passed—and I am heartily in favor of it—without passing in conjunction therewith some such proposition as the Foreign Affairs Committee has reported. The bill the gentleman proposes is one that the circumstances now existing call for emphatically, and I sincerely hope the House will pass it. But it does lead us squarely into international complications, and we should, at the same time we are passing this and putting it into operation, set in motion the appropriate machinery to readjust our international affairs so that we will not be running into difficulty with other nations in the enforcement of the bill which the gentleman proposes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, the committee very carefully considered that question of international complications and conflict with treaties, and we think that there is no violation of and no conflict with any treaty in our bill. The first section of the bill requires that those who have claimed exemption from selective draft on account of their alienage shall withdraw those exemptions, and if others claim them subsequently and do not withdraw them they shall all be forever barred from American citizenship and be subject to deportation.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been submitted to the Department of State and if this question has been taken up?

Mr. BURNETT. It has. And the reply of the State Department, which was made several weeks ago, stated that they preferred, and, I think they said the President preferred, the McCumber resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is sufficient, Mr. Speaker, not to grant preferential consideration for the consideration of this bill at this time, and therefore I object.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman assumes a very grave responsibility in objecting to a bill which forces alien slackers to either fight or get out, while thousands of American boys are being forced into the Army and probably into the trenches in Europe.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, known as the soldiers' war-insurance bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] please take the chair temporarily, until the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GABRETT] returns from the Committee on Rules?

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, so far as practicable, shall furnish information to and act for persons in the military or naval service, with respect to any contracts of insurance whether with the Government or otherwise, as may be prescribed by regulations.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania: Page 10, line 9, strike out the word "whether," and after the word "Government" strike out the words "or otherwise," in line 9, after the word "Government," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and if there is any other insurance, shall render the same service if required by the insured person to do so."

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the House to this section 24, which might be considered a minor feature of this bill and offer an amendment. In the consideration of the larger features the minor ones are apt to be overlooked.

When I came to the examination of this bill and ran across this section I thought it was not right, for this reason: The taking of Government insurance by the soldier is voluntary. It may be all right to leave the management of the Government insurance in the hands of the bureau; that is a part or condition of the contract between the insured soldier and the Government, but we should stop there; the other insurance already held by the soldier is something which it seems to me he ought to have the right of determining how it shall be managed. As the bill now stands it is mandatory that the soldier shall part with the control of that insurance which he now has. This is in disregard of the inviolability of contracts; it is an undue interference with rights acquired by the soldier.

He may have a policy which is about maturing. He may have laid his plans that he will do certain things with that policy. It has convertible terms. It may be fraternal insurance; it may be that he has an annuity. It may be that he has entered into some business enterprise and that he desires to convert his policy into cash, and it seems to me just and proper that this amendment should be passed for this reason, the taking of Government insurance is voluntary, and the management of the other insurance that he already has should be left to his judgment. We should not strip the soldier of every vestige of civil rights or responsibility. It would dishearten him. We should leave him some power to say what shall be done with the rights already vested in him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman has raised a very important point, which ought to be answered by the gentleman in charge of the bill. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman, it is that where insurance is already held by one going into the Army, he shall continue to exercise the right to dispose of that as he sees fit?

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Yes; making it optional with him whether he will transfer that right to the bureau or not. The taking of insurance in the first instance is optional, the management of insurance already held should be left to the man who has heretofore secured it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the bill provides that the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall take charge of the insurance that he already has, whether it be fraternal insurance or old-line insurance, and to that extent, whenever he goes into the Army he gives up whatever rights he has as to the disposal of the insurance he had before entering the Army?

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Yes. It seems to me the bill gives something in the nature of an irrevocable power of attorney to the bureau without the consent of the insured, it may be against his will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For instance, if anyone had an insurance policy and he should enlist in the Army as a soldier and go into the service of the Government, he would give up to the Government the control of whatever life insurance he might have, irrespective of the rights that accrued to him from it?

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Yes. I called this matter to the attention of the committee, and the gentleman in charge of the bill seemed to agree to the desirability of the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me a soldier ought not to be compelled to give away that which he already possessed simply because he engaged in the service of the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK] had up with me yesterday the same proposition that he offers now as an amendment. I offered in committee the same proposition that he offers here, but the amendment was voted down. The argument was that the committee believed that when this man went into the service he might neglect his insurance. He might not keep it up; he might not keep up the premiums on this insurance that he has in a private company, and it might lapse; and that is the reason why the provision was left in the bill. Now, so far as I am concerned—

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. In a moment. As I told the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have no feeling in the matter one way or the other, except that I really believe this could be cured if we could get an amendment providing that the soldier shall furnish this information and that the Government shall act for the soldier in reference to his private insurance as well as the Government insurance. I thought that would cover the objection of the gentleman and cover any objection that I might have had originally. I think it is going a little far to say that the Government shall act for him in the insurance—

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me we should pass a moratorium bill, protecting whatever rights a man may have in his private insurance by paying premiums on insurance policies and preventing the lapse of insurance or the forfeiture of insurance on account of increased risk during the war, so that a man may be able to retain an insurance, regardless of whether he pays the premium during the war or not, and that would cover this case.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Is it not against public policy to permit an insurance company to discriminate against a man who is in the service of his country? In that case the fact of war would be analogous to an act of God.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. I am in favor of declaring a moratorium against the collection of premiums on insurance policies held by men who go into the Army.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I believe I still have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. RAYBURN. This language here, if properly construed and thoroughly read, does not mean that the Government shall do this regardless of what the man himself may do, but that the Government shall do this out of the allowances taken out of his pay. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment, because that would put the Government where it would be under no obligation whatever to call attention to the premium due, and matters of that kind. If we shall get something in there in line with my first suggestion, I should like it; but I just can not figure out the proper form for the amendment now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's amendment leaves it to the discretion of the soldier to say whether or not he desires Government advice and assistance in matters pertaining to his own private affairs.

Mr. RAYBURN. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK], I fear, would leave no option with the Government in that matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it leaves an option with the soldier to say whether he desires the assistance of the Government in these matters that are not war matters.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. But then it is mandatory on war matters.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no doubt that the insurance companies are raising rates on persons who go into the military service, and referring to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, there is no question at all that there are many men being drafted into the service now who carry lines of life insurance, many young men who for 10 years have been looking out for their mothers and their relatives, and who have been taking out insurance policies in the regular way. Some of these young men have been perfectly able to pay these premiums, but they will now cease to receive the salaries which they have been receiving, some as high as $3,000 or $4,000 a year, and they will work for the Government for $30 a month. It seems to me the disposition of their private affairs ought to be left to them, but that the Government ought to assist them if they desire that assistance; the Government ought not to take away from them the right to dispose of their own property.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The language is—

That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, so far as practicable, shall furnish information to and act for persons in the military or naval service, with respect to any contracts of insurance whether with the Government or otherwise, as may be prescribed by regulations.

That provision is framed in the interest of the soldier, the young man who goes out of civil life into the Army, and enjoins it as a duty on the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to look after his interests and prevent these lapses, to prevent the very injustices that may occur by reason of his transfer to the military service of the United States, and his inability for that reason to look after his private interests. It is for his protection. It is not to take away from him any right. It is not to vest in the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance an irrevocable power of attorney to lapse his policy or to do what they please. The whole purpose and intent of it is to enjoin the War-Risk Bureau to render this service for him in his interest, to protect him against loss. The very purpose the gentleman very properly has in view is accomplished in the language of the bill, as I construe it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may have been the intention, but I submit to the gentleman that everything is left to the regulations of the bureau.

Mr. ALEXANDER. You propose to leave it to his option to make the request, and he may overlook it, or it may be overlooked by the bureau. Why not enjoin it on them as a duty to look after him? I think that is the proper construction.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will offer as a substitute for the gentleman's amendment to strike out the word "whether," where it appears in line 9, page 10, and to insert after the word "otherwise," in line 10, page 10, "if requested by an enlisted man."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would be all right.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. That is precisely the idea that I wanted to get in this.

Mr. RAYBURN. I offer that amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it would be better to leave it as it is. Under the present language of the bill is the enlisted man precluded from making that request?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; he is not.

Mr. BORLAND. The enlisted man has the right now to make the request. Your amendment does not add anything to that.

Mr. RAYBURN. The question raised here is that the Government may be taking charge of something that the man does not want them to take charge of, when he does not want them to perform this service for him, and I do not see any reason why they should.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 10, line 9, after the word "insurance," strike out the word "whether." In line 10, after the word "otherwise," insert "if requested by enlisted men."

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to discuss that amendment. It seems to me that the present language of the bill is broader than it would be if the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is adopted. The present language of the bill enjoins upon the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance the duty of furnishing information and acting for persons in the military and naval services. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas proposes to limit that to cases where a specific request by the soldier has been made. It seems to me that the present language of the bill does not preclude the soldier or sailor from making the request, but it also leaves the department in the attitude of furnishing information where they see it is needed in the absence of requests. I do not believe we will gain anything from the standpoint of the soldier by putting on him the duty of initiating the request. It seems to me he has that power now. He can ask the department to act for him, and the department can suggest it to him.

But it seems to me if we cut it down to the point where he must make the request, and that request must be brought home through all the channels of communication to the department, we may be limiting the soldier's right and possibly defeating his plans in some respect.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose a young man has three or four policies and is perfectly able to pay the premiums, how would the Government know, unless he brought it to the attention of the War-Risk Bureau? The gentleman may be right, and I think the committee means to be right, but in the case of a young man who has insurance policies and is perfectly able to pay the premiums, he ought to have the privilege of saying, "Now, my Government, I want you to help me."

Mr. BORLAND. He has. This takes away no privilege of that kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Unless the amendment passes, the regulation may include the Government's right to take from the young man his privilege and transact his business for him.

Mr. BORLAND. They might include that, and they might not include it to any greater extent than they are in commandeering his pay. The Government might decide by regulation that if a young man had certain policies in existence it would be wise to use a part of the pay to keep up the policies.

It seems to me that it is assuming a danger that does not exist to say that they might take the management of the property out of his hands. Of course, in some cases it might be better, if a man was in the hospital and unable to act for himself, and had existing policies and money to his credit in this fund of commandeered salary—it might be highly desirable that the Government should protect the policies while, perhaps, the man was on his deathbed; but it is advisable that the service should be rendered because these men are in a foreign country and can not get in touch with the insurance companies or with the banks to loan them money, and it would be desirable that the Government should look after their affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A clear reading of the section as reported by the committee gives the soldier all the protection that could be expected to be conferred by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. The substitute that is offered by the gentleman from Texas really weakens the authority of the bureau, so far as protecting the enlisted man who has insurance in private companies. Under the phraseology of the substitute the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance could not act for him, so far as other insurance is concerned, unless requested to do so by the enlisted man. Under the phraseology as reported in the bill, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance is compelled—it is made mandatory by the word "shall"—to furnish information and to act for the enlisted man, not only with respect to contracts of insurance with the Government, but otherwise. Certainly we do not want to take away the authority of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance from helping the enlisted man as to his private insurance. The great danger that will confront the enlisted man in the foreign service is that he will not be able to get into communication with the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance so that he can have his private affairs preserved. We should make it mandatory on the War-Risk Insurance Bureau as written in the bill rather than to leave it to the request of the enlisted man, as proposed by the gentleman from Texas. I agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], that the language in the bill fully protects the rights of the enlisted man.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not write it in the bill, "unless the soldier requests otherwise"?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is there; it is mandatory. It shall do what? It shall furnish information and shall act for persons in the military and naval service in respect to what? With respect to the insurance with the Government or otherwise, as may be prescribed by regulations.

Mr. BUTLER. There might be a soldier boy who did not desire that the Government should act for him.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is better to throw the protecting arm, so far as contracts of insurance are concerned, around him, so that his rights may be preserved and that the man in distant lands fighting for his country shall have his rights protected.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. In section 24, the last words are "as may be prescribed by regulations." Who makes these regulations? The soldier has nothing to do with them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance makes the general regulations, and as to all contracts of insurance it is mandatory. We will have a uniform rule, so that the Government can do for the enlisted man what is necessary to protect his insurance.

Mr. ROSE. There is nothing to indicate that the soldier has anything to do with making the regulations, and he should have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, if you leave it to the ipse dixit of every soldier we would never have any regulations.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, it is if requested by an enlisted man. Now there are men, and officers also, who have insurance. Why not say "if requested by such person"?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to modify my amendment in that respect. I will ask to substitute the word "person" for "enlisted man."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 9 and 10, after the word "insurance," strike out the word "whether" and insert after the word "otherwise," in line 10, the following: "if requested by such person."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been suggested by the gentleman from New York, Mr. SANFORD, that if the enlisted man did not wish to have the war-risk insurance bureau look after his interests so far as private contracts of insurance are concerned, that could be accomplished by inserting, after the word "otherwise," "unless requested by such person." Whereas the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Texas takes away from the bureau the protecting arm of the Government unless requested by the enlisted person.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is what I want to do, and the amendment states what I want to do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he was in the army in France and his father would say, "My son has a policy of insurance in the New York Life; I wish you would look after it and see that the premiums are paid and his policy does not lapse," you could not do that under that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not under the wording of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. It could not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the modification of the gentleman from Texas to the substitute will be agreed to. Now the question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5723) and had come to no resolution thereon.

RESOLUTION FROM COMMITTEE ON RULES—REVENUE BILL (H. REPT. NO. 143).

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 138.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 4280) entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table with Senate amendments thereto to the end that said amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendments be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the resolution be 30 minutes; that 15 minutes be controlled by myself and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and that at the end of the 30 minutes the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW] asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to 30 minutes, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why the customary proceeding has not been followed of allowing 20 minutes to a side?

Mr. POUL. It was considered by the Committee on Rules that really they could see no necessity for any debate, but in view of the fact that there had been requests for time, we agreed to 15 minutes on a side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman that here is a bill of 129 pages, or approximately that, with 321 amendments, which the House of Representatives passed on the 23d of last May. It comes back here, as I say, with 321 amendments. It did not come back to the House until last Monday and was not reported in here until yesterday, and is now brought up here and I have talked to man after man who has not read the bill, and I have asked two of them who are most earnest in urging that we send it to conference at once what the exemptions provided by these Senate amendments were, and the gentlemen said, "I do not know; I have not read it," so I think at least 20 minutes on a side ought to be allowed. Will the gentleman consent to 20 minutes on a side, only 5 minutes more?

Mr. POUL. I will say to my friend, if I were personally disposed to consent to that suggestion, I could not do so. In view of the unanimous action of the Committee on Rules, I do not think I would have that authority. We discussed the matter informally in the Committee on Rules and we arrived at this agreement. I think, however, we can arrange it if the gentleman should want some time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, not to make any captious objection to the bill as it is now, or to sending it to conference, but to exercise my right as a Member of this House to examine into such a tremendously important proposition such as is embodied in this bill by asking a few questions of Members presumably acquainted with its provisions. That is all; and we are to be denied that.

Mr. POUL. I will yield the gentleman five minutes of my time if he desires it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I really do not know how to debate this resolution. I believe everybody in the House agrees that the bill ought to go to conference. That seems to be the temper of the House, and I shall not undertake to debate a rule which is so obviously necessary for the transaction of the business of this House, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Rules that this rule is necessary at this time to expedite the enactment of this necessary law at the earliest day possible, but I do not lose sight of the fact that this bill passed the House of Representatives many months ago and that the necessities of the country have very materially changed since that time; indeed, the demands of the Treasury upon the Congress since the passage of this bill in the House have multiplied by billions. The House passed a bill providing for a rate of taxation proportionate at 50 per cent to a bond issue with which to carry on the war for the current year.

That rate of taxation as compared with the bond issue is very materially changed in the bill that comes back from the Senate to the House. That is a matter of the greatest interest to the entire country. It is a matter that will reach into future years for a generation and ought to have serious consideration. Now, the conferees on the part of the House should understand the position of the House upon the subject. The people of the country are giving at this time the best they have for the conduct of the war. People who are taxpayers now and will be taxpayers in the future are giving practically all they have that is dear to them to carry on the war.

It is reported by the boards of directors to the stockholders of many concerns engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war that they have made colossal profits within the past two or three years. Mr. Speaker, as a citizen and as a Member of this House, I do not believe that at this time, when the country is offering its best blood, that men or industries should take advantage of the war to make unheard-of profits out of this unhappy condition of the country. [Applause.] And I believe that these great profits should bear a heavier rate of taxation than is provided in the Senate amendments to the House bill, and that the proportion of taxation carried in the House bill should be insisted upon by the conferees representing the House. A larger part of that tax now needed should be levied against the great profits that are made out of the war.

The men and women of the country, who are contributing the great body of the soldiers and sailors and the brave men who to fight the battles and suffer the horrors of the war, should know that while they are making such great sacrifices others are not making unheard-of and unusual profits out of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said a few minutes ago that we must make future generations pay for this war—at least pay a very considerable portion of the cost. That statement is being made repeatedly. It is also said that if we tax these corporations more than 35 per cent, or approximately that, on their enormous war profits, there will be danger of crippling them. But, in reply, somebody mentions the fact that England levies a tax of 80 per cent on war profits, and that the London Economist reports that manufacturing interests in general in England have never been in a more prosperous condition. Then an attempt to escape the force of that statement is made by saying that England did not levy that tax until the third year of the war. And I answer that suggestion by saying that the great munition makers of this country have been getting these vast profits for three years. And is not that a complete answer? For them and their profits this is also the third year of the war. During the three years of the war billions of dollars' worth of arms and other munitions have gone from this country across the sea. And during these three years the makers of these munitions of war have been reaping these great profits. And now, Mr. Speaker, if we allow them to keep 50 per cent of these enormously increased profits and then give them also the $5,000 of absolute exemption and a certain percentage of profits, based on the amount of their capital stock, as this bill proposes to do, do you think that they will be crippled? They prospered before the war on much less an amount of profits than we would allow them if we took 50 or 65 per cent of these war profits. We propose in any event to allow them their peace profits—that is, the amount of their average annual profits during the three years just prior to the war. We seek to tax only their excess profits growing out of the war—the great profits which make them directly, powerfully interested in having the war continue. Men making hundreds of millions of money out of the war do not, if avarice is their god, want peace to come.

There is another provision, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to direct attention.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield right now.

Mr. MEEKER. For just a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield right now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POUL] said he would yield me five minutes.

Mr. POUL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the other provision to which I referred—one of great importance, as I see it—is that which relates to second-class mail and includes a proposed zone system. At this point perhaps I ought to say that in speaking of this provision I speak as one who is, financially, entirely disinterested. I never have been connected with a publication of any kind, nor have I a relative connected, directly or indirectly, with any publication. But, in my judgment, upon grounds of high public policy, there never again should be in the United States a zone system for the carrying of mail. That system has been tried in this country, proven a failure, and discarded. And one thing which now is doing most to banish sectionalism, promote unity of thought and feeling among the people of this great Republic, and make us really a Nation is the cheap flat rate which has brought about the carrying of newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals in great numbers from one section to another all over the country. This cheap flat rate has helped powerfully to make our present postal system the world's greatest educator. The delivery day after day of these publications to our millions of rural homes has made the rural free-delivery system our greatest university.

A zone system, by increasing the cost of many publications, lessening their circulation, and driving others out of business, would seriously lessen the value of the present system of rural free delivery. And it would in other ways injure the country.

I can illustrate the truth of that statement by suggesting a case, an extreme case, and yet one which correctly shows the truth of the situation. Suppose that there was a law restricting the circulation of the newspapers and other publications of the State of Mississippi to that State alone, and also restricting those of Virginia, of Wisconsin, of Missouri, of California, of New York, of Georgia, or of any other State, to that State alone. Of course, under such a law we would soon become a provincialized republic, devoid of all spirit of nationality, cursed by sectionalism, and threatened with disruption.

Now, a zone system would be less drastic in its effects than would the law which I have supposed; but while it would not confine circulation to a State, it would tend strongly to confine it to a zone, and thus be correspondingly harmful.

Newspapers and magazines carry news and knowledge, and different rules properly apply in the fixing of rates for the transmission of such commodities from those which apply to the fixing of freight rates for carrying hay and coal. There is no more reason for putting newspapers under a zone system than for putting letters under such a system. We carry a letter at a loss for only 2 cents from here to the Philippines, or Hawaii, or Alaska, or Panama, or Porto Rico.

Gentlemen object to the cheap carrying of advertisements, and yet, as a matter of fact, legitimate advertisements are of great value to the country, not only as our most efficient promoters of commerce and industry but also as educators, instructing those who often are unable to obtain instruction elsewhere. This truth was impressed upon me some years ago, when I saw a boy not more than 14 years old, barefooted, curled up in a chair at Evansville, Wis., reading the advertisements in an old, frayed copy of a magazine.

I watched him. He was intently going over them; nothing but the advertisements. This struck me as interesting. I came back in 15 minutes, and the boy, apparently the child of poor parents, was still sitting there looking through those advertisements. I said to him, "I see that you are reading advertisements." He answered, "Yes; I always read them. I tell you, you can learn a heap out of these."

It is advertisements which have, in large part, caused the great increase in the volume of business done generally throughout the country, and especially in the volume of letters—first-class mail—thus adding largely to the revenues of the Government. One man said that an advertisement for which he paid $400 had resulted, first and last, in so many thousands of letters to and from his company that the company itself had paid in first-class postage more than $2,300.

I have thus hurriedly touched upon a few of the reasons why I believe that the Senate acted in accordance with the dictates of sound statesmanship when it struck out the provision for a postal zone system. No such provision has a proper place in a revenue bill. It ought not to come here as a rider on the pending bill, but should be considered here in its appropriate place as a part of the Post Office bill and on its own merits. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution embodying the rule.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. RAINY, Mr. DIXON, Mr. FORDNEY, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resume its sitting on the war-risk insurance bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, known as the war-risk insurance bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, the war-risk insurance bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is again in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5723, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a bureau of war-risk insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: Page 10, line 10, add at the end of line 10 the following: "Said bureau shall procure from and keep a record of the amount and kind of insurance held by every commissioned and appointive officer and of every enlisted man in the military or naval service of the United States, including the name and principal place of business of the company, society, or organization in which such insurance is held, the date of the policy, the amount of premium, the name and relationship of the beneficiary, and such other data as may be deemed of service in protecting the interests of the insured and beneficiaries."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to supplement the original intent of the section. Under it we require every commissioned officer or appointive officer or enlisted man in the military or naval service of the United States to give information as to the amount of the insurance he holds, the name of the company, the kind of policy, the amount of the premium, and the name of the beneficiary. It is this information that will enable the Division of Soldiers' and Sailors' Insurance to better conserve the insurance they hold at the time of their entrance into the service. It will give to this bureau a vast amount of important information which will be available at any time during the progress of the war and afterwards.

Any applicant to an old-line insurance company must in his application give the amount and the company of all insurance he holds. If the Government is to be the insurer under title 4, the Government should have the same right or asking of every enlisted man or commissioned or appointed officer to state the amount of insurance he holds, the company in which he holds it, and the amount of the premium, and the beneficiary. We want this information so that the bureau can aid the parties interested in the policies, the friends, the relatives, or the beneficiaries of that insurance, so that loyal, patriotic societies in the home towns, the Red Cross, or county, municipal, or State organizations, upon being advised, can see to it that the premium is paid and that such policies do not lapse.

Under ordinary insurance 50 per cent of policies lapse. If we can conserve even a fraction of the insurance held by these enlisted men and officers, we are doing a good deal, and it seems to me that this amendment, requiring of our men upon enlistment or upon taking out insurance, to give this information, will do much to conserve the insurance they now have. It will not be a difficult task. No doubt if title 4 becomes a part of the law the matter of insurance will be laid before every single officer and man in the Army. At the same time a blank form could be presented in which there could be inserted the information called for by this amendment. I do not believe there ought to be objection to this amendment. [Applause].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that so far as I am concerned I have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 25. That whoever in any claim for family allowance, compensation, or insurance, or in any document required by this act or by regulation made under this act, makes any statement of a material fact knowing it to be false, shall be guilty of perjury and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for a moment, in order that I may introduce a matter that I may not have an opportunity to speak upon later in the day.

The committee would not consider an amendment to include any others in the benefits of this act except soldiers and sailors, I assume? It has been suggested to me that the Consular Service might also be included. Would the committee consider that matter at this time?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would not like to add it to this bill. I really do not think that service is comparable with service in the Army.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assumed that the committee might have a mind of its own on that subject, but in the few minutes remaining to me I wish to say a word in connection with our consuls. Many of the consuls have been sent into places of danger. We have consular agents of one kind or another doing yeoman service in foreign countries now at a compensation which is not altogether commensurate with the new expenses they have to bear. Recently some consular officers have been recalled to the United States. One of them, a man of family, has brought to my attention the fact that on applying for insurance to one of the old-line companies he found it impossible to obtain it at the old rate. This may or may not be an argument in favor of the principle of this bill; but for the information of the committee I desire to say that one American consul, who I know has been at points of danger and has done valiant service for his country under very great stress, has been unable to obtain insurance in the United States at these proposed Government rates because he is going back to the other side of the ocean.

Mr. COX. Why specify consular officers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have said there are various other Government agents over there.

Mr. COX. Why not include all the clerical force in all our foreign diplomatic service?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a fair question that might arise in a debate of this kind; but I want to get into the Record now some insurance information about some of these men doing foreign service who are not with the Army or Navy.

One insurance company writes:

We regret to say it will not be possible to issue a specially prepared policy in this individual case, and that our general practice will not permit us to consider more than $2,000 on a risk which involves travel in the war zone. You will note by referring to the President's recent announcements that the company's practice is clearly defined as to this class of cases. A copy of the letter is inclosed for your sight.

Here is a direct statement from this insurance company, which does a tremendous business in the United States, that it will not issue a policy for more than $2,000 to a man going abroad in the service of the Government of the United States. This matter of being in the Government service was drawn especially to the attention of the company; but the answer of the company is found in a circular which I happen to have in my hand, and which I think ought to be read at this time. It is signed by the president of the company, no less a company than the Prudential Insurance Co. of America, and is directed to the superintendents, managers, and agency organizers:

An extra annual premium of $50 per $1,000 will be charged for Red Cross and other relief service in the foreign war zones, except that this charge shall not apply to women nurses in such zones.

Civilian travelers to or through the war zone or zones will be charged an extra annual premium of $50 per $1,000.

The amount of insurance to be issued on any life included in the above classes, together with the insurance that may have been issued on such life by this company since April 5, 1917, shall not exceed $2,000.

The amount of insurance to be issued on a male life less than 31 years of age, together with any insurance that may have been issued since April 5, 1917, will not in any case exceed $10,000.

The above rules will apply to all ordinary applications made after the close of business on June 26, 1917.

Here you have the Red Cross workers and people of their class and you have civilians going across upon business of their own or upon Government business to whom the insurance rates are raised $50 per $1,000, and, even so, policies are not to exceed $2,000. I think it is proper the committee should have this information. It illustrates the difficulties and hardships encountered by all classes entering Government service abroad.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some documents in connection with the amendment that the House just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some documents in connection with the amendment just adopted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

GREAT NORTHERN LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
Wausau, Wis., May 4, 1917.

Hon. J. J. ESCH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ESCH: Complying with your letter of April 30, I am inclosing a draft of the proposed bill for the creation of a life insurance war service bureau, and I trust I may have drafted the measure in sufficiently proper form to enable its introduction and secure its passage. I feel that the services of such a bureau would be extremely valuable to the men and to their beneficiaries and would result in benefit to every insurance organization in the country. Very largely the men who are insured will be found to carry their insurance in the fraternal orders and societies. When I was insurance commissioner, during the Spanish-American War, I made a canvass of the first 2,340 men who answered the first call, and while only 641 of these carried life insurance, more than half of the insurance carried was in fraternal orders.

I am also inclosing you a copy of our company paper of this month, which gives quite a little information on the war questions involved as they affect life insurance.

Nearly a year ago the five new life insurance companies of Wisconsin had a meeting and formulated their war clause, the special feature of which was that whatever extra premium would be necessary to impose should be placed in a separate fund and used only to pay the extra mortality occasioned by the war, and that any excess remaining should be returned to the insured or their beneficiary. At that time I maintained, as I still do, that the life insurance companies in computing their premiums upon standard tables of mortality were providing for 100 per cent mortality, war or no war, and that if because of war there was to be an extra premium imposed for extra mortality such extra mortality could only mean an excess death rate over and above the 100 per cent which had been regularly charged for.

The meeting of the committee of insurance commissioners with the life insurance companies in New York last week resulted in an understanding which will make the "service in war clause" practically uniform as well as materially reducing the extra premium they may at first charge, and it is generally accepted that any excess of such charge shall be returned. If you have not seen the result of this New York meeting and are interested, I am inclosing you a copy of the agreement between the companies and the commissioners. For your information I may say that the Wisconsin companies have generally accepted this arrangement.

Trusting that you may be able to secure some results from the inclosed bill, and thanking you very sincerely for the interest you are taking, I am,

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM A. FRICKE,
Vice President and General Manager.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 28, 1917.

To the life insurance companies of the United States and to the insurance commissioners of the several States:

GENTLEMEN: The national convention of insurance commissioners, at its meeting in Des Moines on April 17 and 18, 1917, appointed a committee to take up with the life insurance companies of the United States the question of uniform war-service regulations. This committee invited all the life insurance companies in the United States, so far as they were able to reach them, to meet at the Hotel Astor, in New York, on April 27, 1917, at 2 p. m.

At that meeting a large number of the companies were represented, and the members of the committee of the insurance commissioners' convention were all present. The matter was freely and thoroughly discussed and considered, with the result that at the suggestion of the companies a committee of seven from their own number was appointed to confer with the committee of the national convention of insurance commissioners, the end being to agree upon some recommendations which, if adopted, would bring all the companies in the United States into uniform action, so far as possible, concerning the matter in question. This committee of the companies met the committee of the convention on the evening of April 27 and the morning of April 28, and the following recommendations were unanimously agreed upon by all the members of the committee representing the companies and by the members of the insurance commissioners' committee:

1. The military clause shall cover the entire period of military or naval service in time of war, if commenced within five years of the register date.

2. The clause shall call for "such extra premiums as may be fixed by the company."

3. The extra premium charged for the present shall be at the rate of not less than $37.50 per annum per thousand of insurance.

4. In the event of death during service or within six months after termination thereof the liability of the company shall, unless after extra premiums have been paid, be limited to an amount not exceeding the total premiums paid on the policy, exclusive of any extra premiums which may have been paid for military or naval service.

5. The clause shall require payment of the extra premium within 31 days after entering upon service, or, if already in service, along with the first premium on the policy.

6. A refund will be made of any extra premiums not required.

A war clause to be used as a rider or inserted in the policy itself, as the companies may see fit, was also unanimously agreed to. This war clause is as follows:

If within five years from the date of this policy the insured shall engage in military or naval service in time of war, the liability of the company in event of the death of the insured while so engaged, or within six months thereafter, will be limited to the return of the premiums paid hereon, exclusive of any extra premium paid for military or naval service, less any indebtedness to the company hereon; unless before engaging in such service or within one month (of not less than 30 days), or at the time of paying the first premium due thereon, if the insured shall be then so engaged, the insured shall pay to the company at its home office in — such extra premium as may be required by the company, and in like manner shall pay annually thereafter on each anniversary of this policy or within one month (of not less than 30 days) while the insured shall continue to be so engaged, such extra premium as may be required by the company.

Within one year after the termination of the war the company will return such portion of the extra premiums as in its judgment will not be required to cover the extra hazard.

We earnestly hope and urge upon every company that it will adopt the recommendations herein contained, and the war clause also contained herein, to the end that uniform action may be had as far as possible by all the companies of the United States.

At the same time we also hope and urge upon the insurance commissioners of the various States that they will accept and approve of the recommendations herein urged upon the companies, and the war clause given above, likewise with the purpose in view that the action of the commissioners may be uniform as well as the action of the companies.

We realize in urging these recommendations and different provisions that all the companies may not be able to put them in force in exactly the same way and that some modifications may be necessary.

With regard to the war clause, it is understood that some companies may desire to prescribe a longer period than five years for commencement of service; to limit their liability in event of nonpayment of extra premium to the policy reserve or cash surrender value, instead of to the premium; or to provide for the payment of extra premiums otherwise than annually. Some companies may also desire to have the extra premium fall due at other times than when the regular premiums fall due. Certain companies also issue life insurance policies incorporating disability or accident benefits, and will, of course, make the proper provisions to cover those features of the business.

Every life insurance company and every commissioner is respectfully requested to notify Burton Mansfield, insurance commissioner, Hartford, Conn., at the earliest possible date whether they will accept and approve of these recommendations and the war clause hereinabove given.

We hope that each insurance commissioner and each company will bear in mind that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to bring the companies and the commissioners together again to agree upon any modification of the above recommendations, and that accordingly they will accept these recommendations as urged.

Respectfully submitted,

For the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners:
Burton Mansfield, Connecticut (chairman); Joseph Button, Virginia; M. J. Cleary, Wisconsin; E. H. English, Iowa; John T. Winship, Michigan.

For the companies: William Brosmith (chairman), Percy H.
Evans, George A. Grimsley, Robert Henderson, F. B.
Mead, E. E. Rhodes, George B. Woodward.

A bill to provide for the conservation of the life insurance carried on the lives of the members of the Army and Navy, the prompt payment of claims, and the compilation of the mortality experienced as a result of the war.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized to provide for a life insurance war-service bureau, with the required assistants, office, and stationery to carry out the provisions of this act, with authority to fix the compensation of the persons therein employed.

SEC. 2. The supervisor of such bureau shall prepare for the use of enrolling officers, a blank to obtain complete information concerning the life insurance carried by each person enrolled or mustered in, serving during the war in the Army, Navy, Hospital, Submarine, Aerial, Red Cross, or any other branch of such service, and it shall be the duty of every enrolling officer, company clerk, or other officer chargeable with such services to secure such information from every person mustered into service or now in the service to be signed by such person, and when properly filled out, return such blanks with the information called for to the life insurance war-service bureau, Washington, D. C.

SEC. 3. The blank to be filled out and signed by the enlisted person shall give the name in full, address, place and date of birth, branch of service, name of company or unit of service, amount of life insurance carried, name of life insurance company, order, society, or association in which carried, name and address of each beneficiary under each policy and relationship of the same, and the amount of premium on each policy or certificate.

SEC. 4. Such information when received shall be promptly transferred to a card system by company or units of service, and the information furnished also classified by life insurance companies, orders, societies, and associations, and a list of all such insurances so classified mailed to each such company, order, society or association for the purpose of comparison and verification with their records and a copy of such verified lists of policyholders, with the additional information as to such insurance as may be of service in protecting the interests of the insured and beneficiaries, returned to the bureau by each such company, order, society, or association.

SEC. 5. It shall be the general purpose of such bureau to take such measures as may be helpful in connection with beneficiaries, local relief committees, and similar organizations, as well as with the life insurance companies, orders, societies, and associations to conserve the insurance in force, the preparation of the proofs of loss, and assisting in the payment of claims, and to that end the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority to formulate and issue such rules and regulations for the proper certification and report of death by the officers of units in service as may be necessary to establish the required proofs of claim.

SEC. 6. It shall also be the purpose of the bureau to furnish to the Department of War, the Department of the Navy, and to the companies, orders, societies, and associations the data obtained and render any other service in the compilation of mortality, disability, and impairment statistics for the accurate determination of the war-risk hazard, and to do and perform such other services for the conservation of the insurance and protection of the insured and their beneficiaries as the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy may deem helpful and necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 201. That allotment of pay shall, subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified, be compulsory as to wife, a former wife divorced, and a child, and voluntary as to any other person; but on the written consent of the wife, supported by evidence satisfactory to the bureau of her ability to support herself and the children in her custody, the allotment for her and for such children may be waived; and on the enlisted man's application or otherwise, for good cause shown, exemption from the allotment may be granted upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations.

The monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified, except that it shall not be more than one-half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her.

If there be an allotment for a wife or child, a former wife divorced shall be entitled to a compulsory allotment only out of the difference, if any, between the allotment for the wife or child, or both, and one-half of the pay.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 11, line 8, after the word "divorce," insert "and who has not remarried."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information. Has the gentleman from Texas an amendment to offer?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 11, line 10, after the word "wife," insert "or former wife divorced."

Mr. RAYBURN. That was left out by inadvertence.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if this question has been discussed, it has been discussed in my absence. I should like to have some member of this committee give me a reason why it shall be compulsory on the part of the husband to make an allotment to a former divorced wife. On what ground is that based, anyhow?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The reason is this, beginning with line 17, page 11:

The monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified except that it shall not be more than one-half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her.

In other words, if a wife has been divorced, and under a decree of court the former husband is required to pay her certain allowances, regard must be had for the divorced wife's rights in the allotment.

Mr. COX. I can readily see a sound reason for that. But supposing there is no order or decree of court directing the husband to pay her alimony or allowance, in a case of that kind, under the language of this proposed statute does the gentleman think it is broad enough to still compel the husband to make an allotment?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not.

Mr. COX. Then the gentleman's construction of this law is that an allotment to a divorced wife will only apply to a divorced woman where there is a decree of court against the husband compelling the husband to contribute to her support?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Where there is still a legal obligation on his part to contribute to her support.

Mr. COX. I can not conceive of any reasonable obligation unless expressed in a record of court.

Mr. SNOOK. The limitation is in the bill; it says it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's construction of the statute might be broad enough, but I am skeptical. I am disposed to believe that if the language remains in the bill it will give a divorced wife who has no decree of court against her husband compelling him to support her, to come in and compel this husband to contribute a part of his salary to her support.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not; there is no obligation on the part of the husband to support the divorced wife except by agreement by virtue of a decree. There may be a legal liability to contribute to her support, and this is limited to that.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman's construction is correct, it is all right; but I can see the possibilities of a hardship on the part of some men.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the proposed amendment in order to ask the chairman a question. In lines 8 and 9 there is a differentiation between the compulsory and the voluntary. The compulsory seems to be limited only to the widow and child. Then over further in the bill, on page 15, line 9, those in class B are required to make an allotment. My question is, Is there any compulsory allotment to anyone except the widow and the child? In other words, suppose there is neither widow nor child but there are beneficiaries in class B to whom the soldier had been paying, before he went to the war, a regular monthly allotment. Would the law make it compulsory upon him to allot and support those he had been supporting before he went to the war?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Section 206 provides for the family allowances, and in class B it says:

That family allowances to members of class B shall be granted only if and while the member is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and then only if and while the enlisted man makes a monthly allotment of his pay for such member or members equal to the amount of the monthly family allowance as hereinabove specified, except—

And so forth.

Mr. FESS. That is the very point I want. The allotment is made by the soldier and the allowances made by the Government? Is the allotment compulsory?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it is voluntary on his part; but by making the allotment he imposes the obligation on the Government to duplicate it.

Mr. FESS. So it is true that the compulsory allotment does not extend to anyone but the widow and the child?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. FESS. And that which extended to anyone in class B before the soldier had gone to the war would not be compulsory upon him.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not understand it so.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 11, line 20, after the word "under," strike out the words "court order or," and in line 22 strike out the words "court order or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RUCKER: Page 11, line 20, after the word "under," strike out the words "court order or," and in line 22 strike out the words "court order or."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment should be adopted, the bill would then read:

The monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified except that it shall not be more than one-half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the agreement to be paid to her.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, one of the questions that is agitating good and thoughtful men throughout the country is to devise some means by which the marital relations may be regarded more sacredly than they now are in many instances. There is a demand for a universal divorce law. This Congress ought not, in my judgment, to offer a premium to a wife to seek a divorce and obtain judgment for alimony and rely upon the Government to collect her judgment—

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. In case a wife should be divorced with a decree from bed and board, with a fixed alimony in that decree, if the gentleman's amendment prevails there would be no provision for her at all.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this clause gives a divorced wife a preference over a soldier's mother. In other words, if the soldier desires to make an allotment for the support of his own mother this bill gives the divorced wife an opportunity to come in and take that money away from her.

Mr. RUCKER. Of course, that is wrong; and as I understand the gentleman's attitude, from the form of his question, I fully agree with him. But, as I was proceeding to say, we ought not to offer a premium to induce the wives of soldiers now at the front or soon to be, for trivial reasons, such as we know are sometimes alleged, to seek a dissolution of the marital relation.

My opinion about it is that if this language stays in the bill the number of divorce suits throughout the country will be greatly multiplied. I make that statement for the reason that since the declaration of this war I myself have received letters from wives asking me to appeal to the War Department and secure some arrangement by which the soldier would be compelled to contribute more to her support and the support of the family than he has been in the habit of contributing. In these cases, where the bonds of affection are not too strong anyway, I fancy that many a cause, plausibly presented on paper and pathetic when recited by a wife to a court, would be strong enough to secure a divorce, a divorce which never would have been asked for and never would have been granted except that Congress offers this premium.

Now, answering the question propounded a moment ago, in regard to a case where divorce has already been granted and alimony allowed. Nine times out of ten the alimony adjudged in favor of a wife against a husband is utterly worthless, because you can not make one dollar out of him, and this bill proposes to constitute the Treasury Department a commercial collection agency to make good that which to-day is bad. I do not believe we ought to do it, but my strongest argument against it is that I believe this is a well-defined and very persuasive invitation to people who now consider too lightly their marital relations to treat with less solemnity that most solemn of all obligations. I do not believe any provision ought to be made for the payment of a divorced wife except upon a written agreement between her and her husband, or that any provision of law should be enacted by this Congress which makes the Treasury Department a collection agency for a divorced wife in collecting alimony which apart from this law could not be collected.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment. I see no force to the argument of the gentleman that this invites the widows of soldiers to seek divorce because under the provisions of this bill as long as she is a wife she receives a liberal allotment for her support, and I see no reason why she would want to give up that allotment and bring suit for a divorce and take the chances of getting a decree under which she would not get more than she received as a wife under the provisions of this bill. Under the provisions of the bill she can not be allowed more after a divorce than she would receive while she is married.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I want to call attention to the fact that, beginning line 24, page 11—

If there be an allotment for a wife or child, a former wife divorced shall be entitled to a compulsory allotment only out of the difference, if any, between the allotment for the wife or child or both and one-half of the pay.

In other words, this is a compulsory allotment in favor of the wife and child.

Mr. SNOOK. Surely.

Mr. ALEXANDER. She would not gain anything.

Mr. SNOOK. That is just the argument I am making. She could gain nothing.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNOOK. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. If this is true that it means nothing to the divorced wife, then why try to deceive her by putting it in here?

Mr. SNOOK. No; I call attention to the fact there may be men who are going into the Army now who are divorced, men from whom wives have deservedly secured divorces because there are many women in this country who have been compelled to get divorces from their husbands and it may have been a very deserving case and something must be allowed them for support, and if the gentleman's amendment should prevail, then these women who have been allowed alimony for the support which they ought to have would be cut off with nothing. So I see nothing in the argument of the gentleman that women would seek divorce, because as wives they would already be getting an allotment.

Mr. RUCKER. With all deference to the gentleman and in all spirit of kindness I want to say it frequently occurs that members of a committee can not see any wisdom or logic in an argument made against a proposition advanced by that committee.

Mr. SNOOK. No; I do not take that position. If the amendment was a good one, I should support it, but I do not think it ought to prevail.

I wish at this time to make a few further remarks relative to the general provisions of the bill, its objects and purposes, and to discuss some of the objections that have been made to its various provisions.

One of the objections that the opponents of this measure make to it is the manner in which it is to be administered. Some claim that the bill should be divided into three separate measures. That the allotments for the dependents and the arrangement for the saving of a part of the pay of enlisted men who have no dependents should be administered by the War Department.

The provisions for compensation which are intended to take the place of pensions under existing law should be administered by the Pension Bureau, and that the insurance feature of the bill should be administered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance under the Treasury Department. I do not believe that this is such a serious objection as to cause one to oppose the adoption of the bill, or that it should outweigh the argument that all of the provisions of the law should be carried out by one department and that this would mean a better and more efficient administration of the law.

It is especially urged that the Pension Department ought to have charge of the administration of all matters contained in article 3, this being the provision of the law relating to compensation of the soldiers for injury and to their families in case of death.

Personally I would not object to this, for I feel that this department has for years and now is transacting the business allotted to it by law in a most efficient manner.

There have been many able men in charge of the Bureau of Pensions in the past, yet in my judgment there has never been a more competent or higher minded man at the head of that department than the one who now fills that position.

It has been my pleasure to enjoy his acquaintance and friendship for many years, as he comes from my State and district. He had a long and faithful service in the Civil War, which enables him to clearly understand the needs of the men who engaged in that struggle. When the war was concluded he returned and engaged in the practice of law in his home city, and became one of the leading and most successful lawyers in our State.

He enjoys the admiration and respect of all who know him. He was called to his present position without solicitation on his part, and he has applied to his new work the same qualities of character which made him a great soldier and a successful lawyer and business man.

His success in the conduct of the affairs of this very important Government position has been a source of gratification to his friends and neighbors. I am pleased to have this opportunity of saying these few words, and only wish I had the time and ability of paying him the tribute he so richly deserves.

It has been asked several times during the course of the debate why it was that the Commissioner of Pensions was not called before the committee, and it is intimated that he is opposed to the provisions of the proposed legislation.

I can not speak for him in this regard, and I do not know what he thinks on this subject, but I do know that the President has had no more ardent and consistent supporter in the great work he has been doing than the present Commissioner of Pensions.

The President has twice announced in letters which were published in the press that he recommended the passage of this legislation. I have never heard that the commissioner has expressed any criticism of the bill. I therefore take it that he agrees with the President in his approval of the measure.

In his argument against this bill my colleague from Ohio, Mr. KEY, quotes a patriotic sentiment from the speech of the President made on September 4, 1917, which we all approve. But let me remind my friend that the President has twice approved the present pending bill, once when it was first submitted to him and again in a letter to the distinguished chairman of our committee since the bill has been pending in the House.

The criticism most frequently offered to the bill, and the one urged most vehemently, is that the compensation provided is less in one or two cases than the amount of pension the soldier would receive under existing pension laws, and, on the other hand, a widow would receive more than widows of the same class are receiving under these pension laws.

I submit if the other provisions of the law are fair and just and if, on the whole, the law works out a fair and just treatment of the soldiers and their dependents, this should be no valid objection to the adoption of the measure. It might be urged as a reason for its amendment, but it is not a sufficient reason for one to oppose the entire bill.

It has been shown more than once during the course of this debate, and to understand the proposed law it must be remembered, that the provisions relating to compensation for widows apply only to those women who were married to the soldier before he sustained the injury causing the loss of his life. It is not fair to compare this provision with the one in existing laws granting pensions to widows marrying the soldier years after he entered the service. I wish to call the attention of the committee to this fact, because a number of men have complained of this feature of the bill which grants to widows and children a compensation in keeping with their necessities, yet not one of these men have been willing to state to the House in the course of their remarks or in answer to the question directly propounded to them that they are opposed to this feature of the bill or that they think the amounts to be paid to the widows and children are too great.

I propose to be more frank upon this subject. I favor this provision of the bill as it stands, and, speaking for myself, I wish to say if it is adopted I favor granting to the widows of soldiers engaged in former wars, who, like those provided for in this bill, were the wives of the soldier before he received the injury from which he died, a like amount of pension.

As to the compensation to be paid to the private soldier who is a single man without dependents, and who has been totally disabled, I wish to call attention to the fact that the statement so often repeated during the course of this debate that such a man under the provisions of this bill will receive only $40 per month is not correct.

In order to determine the compensation he would receive, one must look to all the provisions of the bill, and by doing this you will find that such a man will receive $40 per month plus $20 for nurse hire, and if he takes $5,000 insurance to which he is entitled he will receive an additional $25 per month, making the compensation in all $85 per month.

Personally, I would not be opposed to putting the compensation in such case up to the sum he would receive under the pension law. However, opponents of this measure overlook the fact that in most cases men who are totally disabled and who have families and take advantage of the insurance privilege of this bill will receive a far more liberal compensation than men under like circumstances draw under the present pension laws. It must also be borne in mind that under this bill the Government will provide at its own expense for the training of all men who are totally disabled so as to fit them for a useful occupation.

And notwithstanding the fact that by such training they will be able to earn additional money, the compensation provided for them will not be diminished. To my mind this is one of the most valuable features of the law. When these men are once fitted for an occupation and have their time engaged in some useful work their minds will be relieved of their troubles. This will have a great tendency to make them happy and contented even though they have met with such great misfortune.

The provisions of article 2 are in accord with the advanced ideals of the present day. Many of the enlisted men and many that are drafted will have some one at home who is wholly or partly dependent on them for support.

If these people are provided for and the soldier is made certain that these wants and needs will be taken care of, that means will be provided for their comfortable support, then his chief care will be removed and he will be content to go to the front and to make any sacrifice that the welfare of his country may demand.

In the wars that we have heretofore had the support of a soldier's family or the dependents on him while he was fighting his country's battles was left to charity or the aid of relatives or friends.

This is all changed by the provisions of article 2 of the pending act. The soldier makes a contribution from his pay up to one-half of the amount he receives; the Government adds to this a sum beginning at $15 per month in case where the soldier has a wife but no children and increasing in amount according to the number of dependents. By this arrangement the soldier by his own contribution and by that of the Government is enabled to care for all who have any claim on him for support.

This is a wise and humane policy and beneficial to the soldier and our country alike and seems to meet the approval of everybody, and the only wonder on the part of anyone is that the same principle was not followed in our former wars. The way in which this part of the law will work is plainly shown by quoting from a letter which Secretary McAdoo has written to the President. (See hearing, on page 13.)

The hearings have brought out some criticism of section 203. In cases where the enlisted man has no wife, children, or other persons named in the bill as dependents, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are empowered under such regulations as they may establish to retain and deposit to the soldier's or sailor's credit one-half his pay, which is to be held and paid to him at the end of his service with 4 per cent interest. This may seem arbitrary and deprive the enlisted man of his right to control and spend his wages as he pleases. Yet there are many good reasons why this will work both for the benefit of the enlisted man and the country.

In the first place, most of the men are young, without any fixed notions of the value of money or the necessity of practicing economy; they will be away from home with much time on their hands, and the temptation to squander their wages will be very great; this will teach them a lesson in thrift; they will have an object lesson in saving. Moreover, when the war is over and they return to their homes, these savings will give them a valuable start in whatever calling they may wish to enter; this will also tend to preserve equality between our own forces and those of our allies with which our men will come in contact; all in all, this is a good provision and one that many a soldier will praise when the war is over and he comes to take up civil life and realizes what such a saving will mean to him.

Article 3 provides for compensation in case of death or disability. This is intended largely to take the place of pensions, and is modeled on the plan of our workmen's compensation laws. There is no class of legislation that has seemed to meet with such universal favor as the laws which have been enacted by the various States in the last few years.

There has been a good deal of criticism of our pension system, but I have never been one of the class who have indulged in that criticism. I have always felt that the men who have given up their callings to defend the country in time of war have been entitled to just compensation for every loss they have sustained, but there have been many inequalities and injustices in the execution of the pension laws, and a law like this with rates fixed according to the needs of the soldier and those dependent on him, with compensation to be adjusted immediately after the war, will overcome many of the criticisms against the pension laws and do justice to the soldier and his family.

It is liberal in its provisions—in fact, it is argued that in comparison with previous laws it is too liberal. That, to my mind, is no reason for its rejection. I am one of those who believe that if there is any class of persons who are not now receiving the pension they deserve and should receive, it is the duty of Congress to see that they do receive such pension and to not be led by such argument from denying to the soldiers who will be disabled in this war and to the widows of those who may be killed adequate compensation proportioned to the loss sustained.

Most of the criticism has been directed to article 4, which permits every soldier to carry life insurance of from $1,000 to $5,000. This is in addition to the compensation provided for in article 3, which, as we have said, is in the nature of a pension.

This insurance is to be carried by the Government; during the war it is to be term insurance and the soldier is to pay only the net rates required in times of peace, and when the war is concluded he shall have the right to convert it into such form of insurance as may be prescribed by regulation of the Government; in other words, the Government assumes the risk of war and gives the soldier the same opportunity to carry life insurance to the amount of $5,000 as that enjoyed by the man who stays at home and pursues his ordinary business.

A number of reasons have been advanced why this provision should not be included in the law. It will be noted that these objections come almost without exception from those who are directly interested in the life-insurance business. It was this class of persons that appeared before the committee to object, and it is this class of persons who are writing Members of Congress and urging them to oppose this feature of the bill. It is not because the insurance companies wish to carry this business that they urge the rejection of article 4, for it is conceded that none of them wish the business and that the rate they ask to carry it is such as practically prohibits the soldier from taking out such insurance.

It is argued that the protection afforded under the provisions of articles 2 and 3 are in the nature of insurance and are so broad and liberal in the benefits bestowed that the Government owes no further duty to the enlisted men of the Army and Navy.

In the hearings one of the representatives of the insurance companies says it would seem as if in attempting to make this provision to enable the enlisted man to procure greater and broader protection for himself and dependents the Government was entering into a plan of charitable disbursement which is not required by the facts in the case. Is it a fact that there is no reason to afford the enlisted men this additional opportunity? Many of these men have no choice as to whether they shall enter the Army.

This service deprives them of all opportunity of exercising their trade, calling, or profession and from establishing a business that will sustain them and their families as they grow older. It subjects them to hardship and danger, to such hardships and dangers as men have never before been called to face; they will be subjected to the supreme test of sacrifice, and all this is for the benefit of those who will not be compelled to go into the Army and those who are to enjoy the fruits of these sacrifices in the future.

We heard much in the speeches of the great opportunity for service that would be given to the man that is conscripted to serve in our Army. Now, is it asking too much of those who do not have that opportunity of service to also render service to those who carry on the war?

This is an enlightened and humane age in which we are living and this is the application of a just, enlightened, and humane policy toward the men who must make this great sacrifice for democracy.

Another argument against this feature of the law is that all, or nearly all, the soldiers entitled under the law to take this insurance will avail themselves of the opportunity and that it will entail an expense on the part of the Government not anticipated by those who favor the law and one that the Government ought not to be called on to bear. The men who are responsible for the bill do not anticipate that this will happen; they estimate that about 25 per cent only will choose to take this insurance. Surely anyone that has had any experience in soliciting life insurance knows how hard it is to convince a person that it is to his best interest to purchase even a small policy. If experience along this line counts for anything, it would teach us that not more than 25 per cent of those entitled will take advantage of the offer contained in this section of the proposed law. There may be more, and if so all right. It will be only a small step toward giving them the same opportunity which the man who stays at home to carry on his business has.

It will teach them thrift and will give them an opportunity to make preparation to care for those dependent on them; it will help them when the war is over to take their places in society, for they will know that the foundation has been laid to provide for their family should they choose to marry.

There can be no speculation, for the policy is not assignable, and the sole and only beneficiaries are a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, or brother, and it is payable only in installments; that is, in the form of an annuity, except that provision for payment in lump sum may be made by regulation in special cases. These provisions will not only prevent speculation but will have a tendency to limit the number of persons taking the insurance to those who actually need it for protection.

I believe that everyone will concede that such insurance will be a good thing for the soldier, a thing that many of them ought to have as a matter of protection. We find that in Canada that some of the towns have taken this question up and have presented to each soldier a policy of insurance similar to that provided for in this law. Such provisions should not be left to charity. In this way the soldiers from some communities would receive this, while it will be denied to others who are equally deserving. There should be no uncertainty about the matter; the opportunity should be open to all alike.

The soldier should know in advance just what he is to receive, just what help he will receive in case he is disabled, and how his wife and children will be cared for in case he should lose his life. To my mind the best thing about this bill is its certainty. It is in this respect that it excels all the laws of this kind we have ever had. It relieves all anxiety from the soldier's mind and leaves him free to give his country the very best service he possesses.

Those who oppose this measure must remember that our country is pledged to a liberal pension system. It may be that this insurance scheme will cost the country a large sum of money; but be that as it may, I wish to conclude what I have to say on this subject with a statement which the Secretary of the Treasury makes to the President in a letter explaining and discussing this proposed law:

It may be suggested that the cost of this system is too great. Personally I have no patience with such a suggestion; I confess that I have only compassion for it. If, under this measure, the annual cost of doing justice to our fighting men and their dependents should amount to five, six, or seven hundred million dollars per annum at the crest of the load, it is an insignificant sum as compared with what these men do for their country and for the world. At this time we are contemplating expenditures during the fiscal year 1918 of more than $10,000,000,000 for the prosecution of the war—for the creation of armies and death-dealing instruments to be used in destroying enough human life to restore peace and justice in the world. Shall we hesitate to expend $700,000,000 more per annum, if need be—only about 6 per cent of the amount we propose to expend for purposes of the war—for the protection of the widows and orphans, the dependent and the injured, who, after all, make the greatest sacrifices of any part of our people, for the safety, security, and honor of our country?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri ought to prevail, because in some jurisdictions by law a husband and wife can not enter into a written agreement to live apart. I desire to make one or two observations on the bill, however, as a whole, and on the manner of its consideration since it was filed. No one who has any realization of his duty as a Member of this House will refuse to vote for legislation that will make ample and proper provision for those who are to go forth and fight the battles of this country in this great world war nor neglect to make such provision for their dependents, but the question under consideration here is whether this is the proper legislation to enact to accomplish this worthy purpose. It is a bill that has been presented to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is a measure, in my opinion, fearfully and wonderfully made. We have become accustomed in the past to submit during this special session of the Congress to the dictation of—or possibly the stern expression of—preference on the part of the Executive as to just what sort of legislation we must enact in order to enable the Commander in Chief successfully and speedily to prosecute the war, but in this measure we see an instance of the influence or the intermingling of the judicial branch of the Government with the legislative. We are told—in fact, the judge who drafted the measure, with becoming modesty, admits he drafted this bill, and it was drafted by him because he was drafted to serve upon a committee to draft this measure, which will draft the money from the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of our soldiers, sailors, and their dependents. He not only admits that he drafted this measure, but he also admits that he knows all about insurance, and if you will read the hearings you will see that some of the experts—

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH (continuing). Did not, in the judge's opinion, truly appreciate the gravity of the situation when they appeared before the committee, nor did they know as much about insurance as the author of this bill. Not only that, we find him sitting on high during the deliberations on this measure during the past four days, and a casual glance will disclose that we have a judge among us "taking notes"; and if, forsooth, the success of this measure is threatened by queries and questions propounded to members of the committee, some of those notes are transmitted to the members of the committee; and likewise we observe later on visits from members of the committee to sit at the fountain of knowledge and bask in his beaming smile and receive a new inspiration and further information in order that the attacks which have been made upon the measure may be successfully withstood. [Applause.] We find, Mr. Chairman, that the members of the committee—

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. In just a moment—who apparently are supporting this measure most earnestly and most intelligently, with one or two exceptions, are the members who did not attend the hearings and who were absent from the Capitol under the operation of the gentleman's agreement which was in existence during the month of August.

Now, in my view, Mr. Chairman, calling pensions insurance, or payment on account of the bargain made, or compensation, or a beneficence, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], a member of the committee, termed it, does not make it what they call it. The compensation provisions of this bill are pensions pure and simple, despite the pronouncement of the Daniel-come-to-judgment and holding "court" during the deliberations of this House.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if persons upon any other measure had sought to assist and furnish information to committees having charge of important legislation in which they happened to be so apparently vitally interested in the manner in which it has been done in this instance, not only would the committee but the person himself receive and deserve the censure of this legislative body. We are able here in this great body—and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I submit, are able—to frame legislation, to report it, and to successfully defend it. But we have an instance, in the manner in which this measure is framed, of a committee reporting a bill about which it has had no experience or has no peculiar knowledge. I believe that the allotment provision should be passed in some form, and that the compensation provision should be passed in some form, but it is peculiarly significant that the insurance provision meets with such warm commendation from the single representative of the Socialist Party in this House and that it is also vouched for by the great leader of the American labor forces of this country, Mr. Samuel Gompers. If we are to have insurance under Government auspices and Government control, payable from the Federal Treasury, we should start in the beginning with a measure more carefully framed than this is, in order that when the plan comes to be enlarged upon and developed in the future we will have something that will be comprehensible and safe and sane as a basis and not a hodgepodge such as is provided for in this measure. It is, as regards its insurance provisions, decidedly unscientific, and may defeat the very objects sought to be attained when it comes to be administered. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am almost at a loss just how far to accept the very gracious compliments of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. But I will say this: It is true that Judge Mack, of Chicago, who was asked to come into this work, and who came into it patriotically, without one cent of cost to the Government or anybody else, entered into it with a zest and a zeal not commonly seen among the average citizens. The average judge upon the bench when vacation time arrives, instead of contributing his brain and experience in trying to serve the Government in some way, would have been away taking his vacation. And the castigations of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] of Judge Mack are not only unworthy of the gentleman from Massachusetts but they are unworthy of any Member of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

He says, on the one hand, that this committee has taken and swallowed a bill about which it knows nothing and the members of the committee know nothing, and in the next breath he tries to breathe the compliment that this great and able committee could themselves, without the help of anybody from far or near, have framed this bill and made it much more perfect than it is. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce made very few amendments to this bill. We considered it in committee for several days after the hearings were closed, went over it line for line and word for word, and the reason why we did not amend the bill greatly was that we believed that it was in splendid form when it came to the committee. And if this committee is so capable of writing a great bill, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] says we are, it seems we ought to be able to go over one and revise it.

We do not arrogate to ourselves all the knowledge in the universe. We do not believe that we ought not to take the advice or the suggestion of anybody, it matters not from what point of the compass they come. Of course, if we were as great in our own estimation as the gentleman from Massachusetts is in his, we would not ask the advice or the counsel of anybody in these great matters.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAYBURN. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. What peculiar qualifications has the author of this bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Judge ALEXANDER is the introducer of this bill and stands sponsor for it here.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is Judge ALEXANDER the author of it?

Mr. RAYBURN. His name is on it. The committee considered—

Mr. KNUTSON. I am merely asking if Judge ALEXANDER is the author of this bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I stated on the floor that I am not. But I think it is a great piece of legislation, and I think it is unworthy of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a gentleman for whom I have very high regard, to make a gratuitous attack upon a great and good man who is trying to serve his country in this emergency. [Applause.] His efforts may, in the judgment of some men, be misdirected. He may not have that skill and knowledge that some gentlemen in this House think he should have, but his purpose and intent are noble and patriotic, and he should not be censured if he sits in this gallery and observes the proceedings of this House or confers with the Members of this House who are interested in this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has expired. Debate on the amendment and amendment thereto has expired.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have opportunity in a minute to offer another amendment.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] is recognized.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I intend to vote for this bill. There are some things about it that are not satisfactory, but the point that has been raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is a thoroughly legitimate objection, and you can not get around it. It is not whether we are for this bill or not. It is whether we are going to be managed from the gallery or from the floor. [Applause.]

Two or three times this House has submitted to a lobby that operated from that gallery to that door; and the same thing has been done in another body, contrary to all rules of common legislative self-respect.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEKER. I will not yield just now. It has been done, contrary to all the rules of common legislative self-respect. We have come to the place where a man who wrote the bill or is interested in it can sit in the gallery and make notes and send down messages to the floor of this House.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. MEEKER. Not now. Now, you can get ready to answer just as strongly as you please, but we are not discussing Judge Mack or any other judge. We have come to the place where we had just as well know how this legislative thing is being done here. I believe that there are men on the floor of this House who know just as much about insurance and who are just as much interested in the soldier as are the men who drafted this bill and brought it in here. I happen to have made a speech in favor of this kind of legislation two years ago out in my district. I have studied the question, and I am for it. But that is not the question raised here and now. It is not a gratuitous insult on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts to call attention to this thing in this House. I say it is a gratuitous insult to the House for a man to sit in the gallery and undertake to direct legislation. [Applause.]

Has the time come when we are going to be so open about this? We know what happened here in the last session. We know something that has occurred here now, and with all due respect to the learned judge and to the bill that he wrote—it is a good bill; it will pass; it will be good for this country—there is just as much propriety in a member of the bench of the United States sitting in the gallery of this House, sending notes and suggestions to the floor of the House as there would be for a Member of this Congress to sit in his court and send notes to him when he sits on the bench. [Applause.]

I will say, gentlemen, I have never met the judge. I am not concerned about him as a judge. I am talking about a precedent and a policy. When the time comes that we so forget ourselves, both from the legislative and judicial side, as to start a program like this, the American people should know it. I am here to offer my protest, not against the bill as it has been written, because it is a good bill. It was well done, although I think other men could have written just as good a bill as men from the Federal bench who will pass upon this law. I think there are men who as fully understand insurance and law as this gentleman. But that is not the issue. I am talking about a policy. I do not wish to go further in this legislation until it is known by the country that a protest is here being offered to what is going on in connection with this legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not in the gentleman's confidence as to what lobbies he refers to in the past or as to what lobby in the last session sat in the gallery and had influence upon legislation. If by any chance he refers to the men who at times have sat up there and watched the course of legislation affecting the laboring men of this country, I want to go on record as one that does not object but is in favor of the laboring men of this country, who can not fill the gallery themselves, sending men here to represent them and see whether or not the men who talk so loudly at home as their friends, are really their friends here in Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DECKER. No; just a word more and then I will yield to my colleague. If by any chance my colleague and friend from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] refers to the people in this country who believe in the abolition of the saloon that injures the manhood of our country, if he refers to these men who sit in the gallery here sometimes and watch the course of legislation affecting that great evil in this country, then I want to go on record as one who approves of such a lobby here, and the country would be better off if we had more of them. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen of the committee, if there is any man here that objects to the lobby sitting there now in the person of a Federal judge of the United States who, at the request of Woodrow Wilson and Samuel Gompers and William McAdoo, has spent his time, has applied his brains and his effort in drafting some legislation that will be for the benefit of the men who will go out on the firing line to fight for your cause and my cause, then I say, long live that kind of a lobby in the American Congress! [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DECKER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Do you wish this House to understand that you place the stamp of your approval on such conduct as we have witnessed in this House in the last few days?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DECKER. Just wait a minute. I want this thing to be understood. Will the gentleman define the conduct he refers to specifically?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; sending notes down to the floor.

Mr. DECKER. Have you read the notes?

Mr. KNUTSON. No. I believe I enjoy a reputation for thinking for myself. [Applause.]

Mr. DECKER. Do you mean that it is a crime or a sin or dishonor for a Member of Congress, elected by the sovereign people of his district, to receive a note from anybody in any place?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; but I think it impugns their intelligence.

Mr. DECKER. Well, are you so intelligent that you can not read a suggestion from the gallery or any other place that affects the welfare of your country?

Mr. KNUTSON. How about the propriety of it?

Mr. DECKER. Has the time come in the American Congress when you and I can not receive a petition from the people of our district? If we can receive a petition from our people, can we not receive a suggestion?

Mr. KNUTSON. Why not allow the Steel Trust and kindred interests to have lobbies up in the gallery if you are so fond of lobbies?

Mr. DECKER. Why, my dear sir, I am not one of those Members of Congress who have to halloo "Thief, thief!" in order to make my people think I am honest. If there is any member of the Steel Trust or anybody else who wants to send me a note, I shall be glad to hear from him.

Mr. KNUTSON. How about the propriety of it?

Mr. DECKER. The propriety! I will tell you about that. Just let me have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman, before I start on this. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DECKER. The danger to this country is not from men who sit in the gallery, before Congress and before the world, proud of their conduct, proud of the patriotic duty which they seek to perform for the soldiers of our country, and make suggestions to Members of Congress publicly and before us all. It is the secret lobby; it is those who observe what the gentleman chooses to call the proprieties, who visit Members at the Willard Hotel, as they used to do in the good old days, or see them at their offices, or, perhaps better, send a representative who is not well known. That is the kind of lobby that the people of this country are opposed to; but the soldiers who will fight the battles of our country have no objection to the Federal judge who gives us the benefit of his legal knowledge, who gives us the benefit of his yearning heart for the betterment of his country. No objection will be raised to him. Now, if the suggestions which he has sent here are not good, you say you have intelligence enough to write the bill offhand. If these suggestions which the learned judge has sent are not good, vote them down.

Some of them, I apprehend, will be presented to this House in the form of minor amendments, and what is the harm in that? They will be read in the open. They can be discussed by you, and the benefit of your judgment will be focused upon those amendments, and what harm is done? I pause again to pay my tribute to the learned judge who sits in the gallery. He will talk to you or talk to me. I am proud to say that I have talked to him. He is a more learned man than I. You might be surprised to know that, but he is. [Laughter.] I say without any reflection upon anybody that he is a more learned man than many Members of this House, because he is older than many of us. He is a learned judge, he is an able man, he is a friend of the people, a friend of the widow and the orphan, a friend of the soldier who fights for his country. If that is treason, then Abraham Lincoln was a traitor, because he expressed to the world the yearnings of his heart, to do what he could to take care of the widows and the orphans and to heal the hearts broken as the result of the war. [Applause.]

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUSTED: Page 11, line 9, after the word "child," insert: "Provided such wife, former wife, or child is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and only during the continuance of such dependency." Strike out all of line 10 after the semicolon, all of lines 11 and 12, and all of line 13 down to and including the semicolon. Strike out the word "and," in line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the word "but."

Mr. COX. May we have the section read as it will read if amended?

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that the section be read as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph as it would read if the amendment should be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 201 as it will read if amended:

Sec. 201. That allotment of pay shall, subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified, be compulsory as to wife, a former wife divorced and who has not remarried, and a child, and voluntary as to any other person, provided such wife, former wife, or child is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and only during the continuance of such dependency; but on the enlisted man's application or otherwise for good cause shown, exemption from the allotment may be granted upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am so heartily in favor of the general purposes and objects of this bill that I am not very greatly concerned as to its authorship or as to the manner in which it comes before us; but I do believe that the bill should be amended in important respects, and I think that the amendment which I have offered deserves the serious consideration of this House.

Article 2 was evidently designed by the framers of this bill to accomplish two things: First, the maintenance of dependent families of enlisted men while they were engaged in war service, and, second, the deposit with the Government of a certain portion of the pay of the enlisted men who make no allotments of their pay.

This bill as it is drawn makes absolutely no distinction between men who have dependents and men who have families of independent means, so far as the allotment is concerned for a wife, a former wife divorced, or a child; and the only escape from it in the case of a wife or a former wife divorced or a child is through a waiver by the wife or the former wife divorced—of course, the child can not waive—or upon the application of the enlisted man himself. Now, I think the framers of the bill have put the cart before the horse. I do not think this burden should be placed upon the enlisted man or upon his wife or former wife divorced. I believe only those men should be compelled to make the allotment who have dependents; and if they have dependents, I do not believe the dependent wife should be allowed to waive.

Now, if it was merely a matter of the allotment, it would not concern me very much, because it is six of one and half a dozen of the other whether a man gives this money to his wife by allotment or from his own private purse. But the bill later on provides that where a compulsory allotment is made, then the Government must contribute at least a like amount toward the support of those dependents, and it seems to me ridiculous that the Government should be compelled to contribute to the support of women and children who have large independent means. Under the terms of this bill, as it is drawn, if a man had an income of $10,000 and his wife had an independent income of $10,000, and the wife did not waive or the soldier did not make an application, then the Government would have to put its hand in its pocket and contribute to the support of that wife and those children. You may say that that would not occur in a great many cases. Well, perhaps it would not, but I think the bill should be drawn in a scientific manner.

It should be drawn so that it could not under any circumstances apply in a case of that kind. I understand that objection is made to this amendment on the ground that it would cost too much money; that it would cost more money to determine the status of these people than it would to have the Government contribute. I do not think that is a good answer, because you compel the Government to determine the status in the case of dependents if they are not the wives or the children or the former wives divorced. If you can do it in their case, why can not you do it in this case, and you can provide under regulations as to what degree of proof is necessary to establish dependents under the provisions of this bill, and a very limited proof could be required?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the paragraph would read if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it would leave out the provision for the voluntary payment to other persons. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to deprive the enlisted man of the privilege of designating persons other than relatives in case he desires to make an allotment?

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely not, and I do not think my amendment accomplishes anything of the kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. As it was read by the Clerk, it did. I do not think the gentleman's amendment as originally reported compassed that purpose.

Mr. HUSTED. My amendment leaves untouched the words "voluntary as to any other person."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not understand the gentleman's position. There are two plans of dealing with allotments. One is the plan of compulsion and the other is the Canadian plan that if a man wants a family allowance from the Government he must allot one-half of his pay as a condition that the Government let him have the allowance. Now, this would be an entire change of framework of the bill. Ought we to have compulsory allotment and compulsory saving of half the pay, or ought it to be like the Canadian plan, in which they say that if a man wants a family allowance he must allot half his pay?

Mr. HUSTED. I believe in compulsory allotment for the support of the dependent, and I believe in the Government allowance in these cases, but I believe it should be confined to cases of dependency. The idea of compelling the soldier to deposit a part of his pay does seem somewhat paternalistic, but I have no doubt the experience of the war service fully justifies it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that the amendment of the gentleman from New York will not be agreed to; and he furnishes the argument against it by saying that if you adopt the amendment you will turn the whole question open to one question of dependence, and when you put it on the ground of dependence then every separate case must be separately examined, must be separately looked into, must be separately passed upon, and it does appear to me that there will be an injustice done the Government in that case. There may be isolated instances in which injustice may be done the Government, but I do not believe that many people with an income sufficient to maintain them will apply to the Government for allowances. Therefore I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to. If we go into the question of dependencies, it opens up such a wide field for appointment of agents and departmental work that I believe at this time it is very unwise, indeed.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Why should not the Government be perfectly willing to pay a man's wife even if he was able financially to support her. Here is a man wealthy in his own right and perhaps his wife is wealthy in her own right, but the Government has selected him and put him in the Army. Why should not that man, although he is wealthy, stand on the same basis as the poor man?

Mr. RAYBURN. The only argument about that is that it does not look well, and the obligation extends to the poor man.

Mr. COX. The rich man will make just as good a soldier as the poor man, and they ought all to be treated alike.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 11, line 9, after the word "child," insert "provided such wife, former wife, or child is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and only during the continuance of such dependency." Strike out all of line 10 after the semicolon, all of lines 11 and 12, and all of line 13 down to and including the semicolon. Strike out the word "and" in line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the word "but."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAYBURN) there were 22 ayes and 28 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words to put an inquiry to the chairman of the committee. Ought not there to be an amendment after the word "divorced," line 25, page 11, as follows: "who has not remarried," putting in the same words the committee inserted in lines 8 and 9 on the same page?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is right. I had a check mark indicating that ought to be done.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. After the word "divorced," line 25, page 11, insert "and who has not remarried."

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 25, after the word "divorced," insert the words "and who has not remarried."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if after the word "divorced," in line 8, page 11, there ought not to be some qualifying clause such as "on her petition," having in mind that this bill provides that a divorced wife may get the benefit notwithstanding the fact that the husband might have procured the decree of divorce?

Mr. ROBBINS. Why should it not be? Suppose the husband has gone to another jurisdiction and gotten a divorce without fault on the part of the wife, why should she not have the benefit? She should have it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is not that covered in the next paragraph?

Mr. LONERGAN. Where?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. "But for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her." In other words, if there is no agreement or court order she would not get anything.

Mr. LONERGAN. But it says here "a former wife divorced."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; but that is limited in its application in subsequent language in the same section.

Mr. LONERGAN. I do not think so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There must be a court order or agreement, and she is limited in the amount she will get, which is made compulsory by the preceding language to the court order or agreement.

Mr. LONERGAN. I do not think so. There ought to be no doubt about this, and I offer an amendment: That after the word "divorced," in line 6, page 11, to insert the words "on her petition or where the decree of divorce was not granted to the husband on account of her misconduct."

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the gentleman offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, after the word "divorced," insert the words "on her petition or where the decree of divorce was not granted to the husband on account of her misconduct."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONERGAN. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut if "on her petition" is quite broad enough. Suppose the husband brought suit against her and she filed a cross-petition?

Mr. LONERGAN. I think that would cover it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just say "petition or cross petition."

Mr. LONERGAN. Or cross complaint.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to line 8, page 11, to the part in italics—"a former wife divorced and who has not remarried." Would not it be better to have it "a former wife divorced who has not remarried"?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is right.

Mr. RUCKER. I move to amend by striking out the word "and," in line 8, page 11, after the word "divorced," the first word in italics.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 8, after the word "divorced," strike out the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas, along the line suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut, for some information. Is it the intention of the committee that if the wife is divorced for her fault that she will get this allotment?

Mr. RAYBURN. I would rather the gentleman from Missouri would answer.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not unless the decree of court has granted her alimony, and the court never grants a decree with alimony, I suppose, if the divorce is granted by reason of her fault.

Mr. IGOE. What is the language in the bill that the gentleman thinks requires that this shall be paid under a court order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Was the gentleman here when we discussed this whole question awhile ago?

Mr. IGOE. I was here when the gentleman from Connecticut raised the question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We thrashed this out some time ago and it was agreed then that this provision is only for the divorced wife when the decree of the court imposes on the husband an obligation to pay her some money, and only the difference between the amount allowed the wife and child and the excess of allotment.

Mr. IGOE. If the gentleman thinks that is what it means I am satisfied.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit I would like to suggest there are some decrees of court granting divorce that do not grant alimony.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Where there is no legal obligation on the part of the husband to support the wife?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that covered by this language of the bill?

Mr. NORTON. That provision is the paragraph beginning line 17, page 11, where it says "the monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified—"

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. COX. While I have great confidence in the construction of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] on this bill, I am not satisfied that that is the construction of it. I want to call attention to this language beginning with line 20:

But for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement—

Then there must be a compulsory allotment made to her.

But, as the gentleman from Wisconsin well put it a moment ago, there are decrees of divorce granted separating man and wife, but the decree makes no reference to any divorce or alimony. Now, does not this very language infer that there might be another class of men and women separated by decree of divorce, and there is no record of the alimony, and still, in a record of that class, they would be entitled to a part of this assignment?

Mr. ROBBINS. A later line, line 22, explains that.

Mr. COX. I have read it. It strikes me that a fair inference is that there are two classes of divorced women mentioned here; one is where they are divorced by decree of the court and the court fixes the alimony, and there is another case of divorced women, of course, divorced by court, but where the decree fixes no alimony; and still both of these women would be entitled.

Mr. NORTON. In one case there is separation by agreement—written agreement—or by court order. In another case there is an absolute divorce. Those are the two cases referred to here.

Mr. COX. There can not be an absolute divorce without the court saying anything about alimony.

Mr. NORTON. The court might not grant any alimony in an absolute divorce. And when an absolute divorce is granted without alimony the wife in this case under this provision would not be entitled to any allotment.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman is right; but I tell you now that I doubt it. I think the language is very doubtful.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

I wish to direct an inquiry as to that language of the bill which has been under discussion. This part of the bill provides for the administration and distribution through a branch of the Government of a specific fund, a part of the soldier's pay. Suppose in the divorce proceedings the wife had been given certain monthly payments as alimony, to be paid, of course, out of the general estate of the soldier. I see nothing in this language under consideration which would prevent her, even though she were getting the full amount allowed under the decree of divorce, from also getting from this particular fund the maximum amount provided for a divorced wife in the bill. And I want to know whether or not it is the purpose of the committee to supplement the payment allowed under the decree of divorce by the sum of money provided under this provision out of the soldier's pay?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. The intention of the bill is, if from no other source her allotment can be paid, or if the soldier has no income or anything like that, the allotment made to her shall be such part of $50 as shall not be taken up by allotting to the man's living wife or family or other dependents.

Mr. SUMNERS. I understood that to be the purpose of the committee, but I beg to direct the committee's attention to the language of the suggestion, and suggest that under that the restriction probably is not included. Strictly construed, this language provides, irrespective of any amount of money which the divorced woman may receive under the decree of the court granting the divorce, that the specific sum referred to in this section, not to exceed the amount granted by the decree of the court, shall be paid to her. The limitation may be incorporated in some other section, but I respectfully suggest for the consideration of the committee that no such limitation is imposed here.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In line 20, is the language "living separate and apart under court order." What did the chairman of the committee understand the court order would be? A decree of the court?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. REAVIS. That is, a divorce decree?

Mr. RAYBURN. There are sometimes decrees of separation that are not divorce decrees.

Mr. REAVIS. Now, as to line 21, "or written agreement or for a former wife divorced," what do you mean by "former wife divorced"?

Mr. RAYBURN. That means a wife that is divorced. It means a former wife.

Mr. REAVIS. Is she not provided for in line 8 on the same page, where it says:

That allotment of pay shall, subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified, be compulsory as to wife, a former wife divorced and who has not remarried.

And then, going down to line 20:

But for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement.

Now, if the court order is a decree of divorce, is not such a wife a former divorced wife?

Mr. RAYBURN. I say that the decree of a court could be divorce proceedings or could be something else, and for that reason it is put in there.

Mr. REAVIS. What else could it be? A court order with reference to domestic relations between a man and wife?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Limited divorces are granted in some of the States, not absolute divorces.

Mr. REAVIS. But not under court orders.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, yes; under a court decree.

Mr. REAVIS. By the words "living separate and apart under court order or written agreement" you mean some court order of less dignity than a court decree?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. An order of separation rather than a decree of divorce?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 203. That in case one-half of an enlisted man's monthly pay is not allotted, regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, may require, under such circumstances and conditions as may be prescribed in such regulations, that any proportion of such one-half pay as is not allotted shall be deposited to his credit, to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed. Such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, with semiannual rests and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to his next of kin.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 12, line 23, strike out "his next of kin" and insert "such person or persons as would under the laws of the State of his residence be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy."

Mr. RAYBURN. I thought the amendment would save some confusion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire whether the word "beneficiary" would include the residuary legatee in case a man died testate? He would not be designated as being the beneficiary of this allotment fund. In the administration of fraternal insurance, where the by-laws require the payment of the funds to a certain named class of beneficiaries, there have been many instances where, in default of naming the beneficiary, or on the death of the beneficiary, no one of the designated class of beneficiaries is left to receive it. The question is whether that fund lapses or whether it could be claimed by a person who is named as a residuary legatee under the will? I think—and I shall submit this idea to the attention of the committee—that where there is no such beneficiary, where the enlisted man has failed to name the beneficiary to receive it—and we can conceive of many instances where that may occur, in case he has left a will—it should go to the person named or to the executor of his estate under that condition of affairs.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think it would go to the estate.

Mr. STAFFORD. You make no such provision for it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have provided that it shall be bequeathed according to the laws of the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. You are not taking the case of an enlisted man who has failed to name a beneficiary to receive the allotment fund but who has made a will designating that his residuary estate shall go in a certain way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would not that be in itself a designation?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. He merely makes the will. He does not say that this respective fund shall go to this person. He may make no reference to this fund, and yet he may make provision in the will for the disposition of his estate in the usual way, but it would not come under this paragraph.

Mr. RAYBURN. The laws of every State in the Union provide for the disposal of property under a will and also when there is no will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas as a substitute again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asked unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. There was no objection, and the Chair directed the Clerk to again report it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was asking whether the gentleman would yield. I was occupying the time of the gentleman from Texas before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was recognizing the gentleman from Wisconsin. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Texas had yielded the floor.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if it would not clarify the situation if the gentleman from Texas would modify his amendment by saying it should go to his estate?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the idea I had in my mind. I think it should be seriously considered.

Mr. RAYBURN. The reason why we proposed to strike out the words "his next of kin" is that in some cases it causes confusion. I do not care if you say "to his estate." I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. If this money is made payable to the estate of a deceased soldier, then of course before it can be paid over by the Government an administrator will have to be appointed, or an executor, in case the soldier left a will, whereas under the law as it is drawn, and even under your proposed amendment, the Government will simply pay it to the person without any further expense. I would hesitate about making it payable to the estate.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is true, of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit this suggestion? I had in mind, before the gentleman offered his substitute, to strike out the words "next of kin," to suggest to the gentleman this amendment: To insert after the word "then," in line 23, "to his estate, free of all debts, in case he dies testate, and if not," then following with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me a word?

Mr. STAFFORD. I would be very glad to.

Mr. ADAMSON. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], the beneficiary is not supposed to be a soldier. He is merely supposed to be a beneficiary on whom, fortunately, the law casts that benefit. I do not think men of that class complain if they have to receive their gift according to law. This is money for the soldier, not for any living dependents. It seems to me that when you say "to the estate" it meets the criticism that the gentleman suggests.

Mr. MCKENZIE. The only reason why I raised the question was simply this: There might be a small payment of $50 or $100, and—

Mr. ADAMSON. The estate has to be administered.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Not necessarily.

Mr. ADAMSON. The estate has to be administered anyhow.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Not necessarily.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman taken this into consideration in the objection he made, that if you did not designate the estate you would force the burden upon the officials of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to determine who were the next of kin, the various persons entitled to receive it under the laws of the State? I think we remove a great many difficulties in the administration of this fund in case the soldier does not name any beneficiaries if we merely provide that it goes to his estate.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think there is much in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. I agree with the construction of the gentleman from New York that the most solemn form of designation may be by will. I do not know of any more solemn form of designation than that by will. Now what is the provision? Mind, we are dealing with the pay of the soldier, which, for his interest, is withheld by the Government, and upon which the Government will pay interest until his discharge or death. In the event of his death this section undertakes to provide how that fund may be disposed of. Hence it provides—

Such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, with semiannual rests, and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise—

That is, in the event of his death—

to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to his next of kin.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Just let me develop my thought. You might say—

Designated by will, or if there be no such beneficiary so designated—

Then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] if agreed to would read—such person or persons as would under the laws of the State of his residence be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy.

In each instance the persons to receive the funds would be clearly named, and the fund may be paid to them without going into the hands of an executor or administrator and being tolled by counsel fees and court fees.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will suggest to him that any direction at all placed here is a change of what already exists. If he did not give any direction, his money would be paid to his estate anyhow.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But it would go into the estate, to be administered like other assets, subject to court costs and so forth.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; and the wisdom of many generations still sticks to that plan.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is easy enough in this machinery provided here to give it to the beneficiaries without subjecting it to this burden.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I hardly think he grasps the objection that I tried to present to the attention of the committee in stating that this did not provide for payment in the absence of a designated beneficiary. There is no question whatever that if an enlisted man shall by will designate in the terms of the will that this fund shall be paid to a certain person, that is the designation of a beneficiary; but in my experience in the practice of the law, in cases arising out of fraternal insurance, I found many instances where there was failure and default to name a beneficiary, and yet where there was a will which did not name the beneficiary. Now, I want to provide for such a case, so that this money will go as directed by the enlisted man in case he makes a will, though in that will he has failed to name any beneficiary.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But do you not want it to go to the beneficiaries rather than to his creditors?

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely, and it would under this.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; under this the creditors would have the prior claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. But under this, where he fails to designate a beneficiary, and he has died testate, you take away, so far as this fund is concerned, the distribution of his estate as he has willed it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not. I think it would go to those entitled to the estate under the law.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Would not this meet the objection suggested by the gentleman, after the word "may" to insert "by will or other legally executed instrument"?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; that does not meet the difficulty I am presenting, because where he has failed to name a person either by will or other written instrument, yet he may have made a will which carries out his idea of the devolution of his property, but has not named the beneficiaries of this fund in his will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If his will provides for the disposition of his estate, it does not make any difference how much property he acquires subsequent to the making of the will. It all passes under the terms of the will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely; but there would not be the name of a beneficiary of this fund unless it was stated in the will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What you are trying to do is to carry out his wishes. Now, if by will he says "I give my property to John Jones and Jane Jones," then his property goes to those devisees.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And this is the property.

Mr. DEMPSEY. You can not make a will for him, and if he has made a will of that kind, his estate goes by virtue of it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 23, to strike out the words "next of kin" and insert the word "estate."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAYBURN: Page 12, line 23, after the word "his," strike out the words "next of kin" and insert the word "estate."

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] a question bearing upon his amendment. Under a law passed by this Congress we are going to pay enlisted men at least $30 a month. Now, I assume that at the end of each month an enlisted man is entitled to his $30. By this allotment we attempt, first, if he has a wife or children, to reach out and take as much as half of his pay and pay it to his family. Under this section you are providing that in case he does not make the allotment—in other words, in case the allotment is not made—you can then under this section 203 reach out your hand, take the part not allotted, put it on deposit in this bureau or somewhere else, pay him interest on it, and, if he should die in the meantime, you provide—not he—that it shall go to his estate. Have you any right to do that?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, permit me to say to the committee that it seems to me that where there will be so many thousands in this Army of the age of 21, 22, and 23 years, without any estate at all, never, of course, making a will, die, necessarily, intestate, you force $50, $75, or $100 that may be due into his estate, and that puts it into the probate court, and that takes a lawyer and the court costs, and does not leave much of it. Hundreds of thousands of these young men will not have any estate, and you do not want to force $50, which he might want to go to his sweetheart or his sister or his mother, into the probate court.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know how you are going to escape it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. "The next of kin," and leave it to the department or those designated by the laws of the State to find it out.

Mr. RAYBURN. It would be much more fortunate if he made it definite where it should go.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me that the wording of the section is right as it is. It authorizes the soldier to designate at the time he makes the deposit the person to whom it shall go in case of his death. That will be a designation of the beneficiary; or he may make a will and designate the beneficiary. In case he does neither, then it will go to his next of kin, unless you wish to go to all the trouble and expense of administration of the estate and, possibly, let the creditors get the money which we intend the soldier's friends shall get. In my judgment, it had better be left as it is. There is an opportunity for the soldier to make a designation at the time the money is taken and deposited in the Treasury, or to make a designation by will, and if he does neither the pittance of money will go to the relatives and friends and will not have to be administered and subject to the claims of creditors. Always in pension cases, I understand, the money payable to a pensioner is free from the claims of creditors. If you put it into the estate creditors will have claims on it, and if you make it subject to the laws of the State for distribution of intestates creditors can file claims. I do not think it is the intention of the framers of the law to make these little amounts subject to the claims of creditors.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not care anything about the amendment. The only thing I wanted was to make it definite. I thought the "next of kin" might be hard to find.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, the comment on the matter of "next of kin" and "the estate," in my humble judgment, is very pertinent. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman in charge of the bill is carried, what would be the effect of that amendment? We will say that the allotment in amount is $50. The soldier dies without having designated either by will or any other written instrument a beneficiary. By the terms of the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Texas that $50 would go into his estate, and under all the laws of the different States of the Union would have to be administered. What, then, would follow by reason of the administration? Where would it have to go? Why, it would have to go to his next of kin; it could not go anywhere else. So the result is precisely the same, except in this, that when you designate in the bill, as it now is, that it shall go to the next of kin you avoid the necessity of administration. If you put in the words "to his estate" you have the necessity of administering, but you obtain the same result precisely, to wit, it means going to his next of kin.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman let me suggest that the wife is not next of kin to her husband.

Mr. DEWALT. No.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Consequently you would have to modify the language so as to cover the wife.

Mr. DEWALT. This is only in case there is no allotment. The allotment is compulsory to his wife and child. This is not applicable to a married man, it is applicable only to an unmarried man, and therefore the gentleman's inquiry is not pertinent.

Let me say, further, where you put in the word "estate," the $50 must go into the man's estate and must be administered. By that administration it must go to the next of kin, and you obtain the same result that you would obtain if you left the language as now proposed. There is another thing that is true, and that is, if you put in the words "to his estate," you run the risk of having the money go just where the law does not contemplate it shall go—to the creditors of the soldier. Because when it goes into his estate, however large or however small it may be, the creditors have the right to present their claims to the administrator or the auditor of the estate and get their percentage. So the amendment of the gentleman from Texas ought to be defeated and the bill left as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the present. I do so for the purpose of getting the attention of the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill. This section now under consideration provides for depositing certain amounts due to soldiers in the Treasury Department and provides that any portion of such one-half pay as is not allotted shall be deposited to his credit to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed. Then further on it provides that the amount thus deposited shall bear 4 per cent interest and be paid, at the close of the war, to the enlisted man, if living, or otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated. The matter I want to call to the attention of the chairman is this: It is unquestionably true that some, perhaps many, unmarried men who enter this service will be indebted.

One I happen personally to know owes for a farm he has bought on long time. Payments must be made and interest must be met. It may be with the uncertainty of seasons that this man who is in a foreign land will not receive enough from his farm during his absence to meet the payments of principal and interest as they fall due. Therefore I believe that some provision ought to be written into this section by which the money, if the soldier so elects, may be applied to the discharge of such a debt or debts as he may designate.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is covered in this bill, I think.

Mr. RUCKER. If it is—

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there is any question about it. It says the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy may, subject to regulation. I think there is plenty of latitude there.

Mr. RUCKER. If I catch the idea, this section provides that this money shall be held until the close of the war and then paid to the soldier, if living, and to those whom he may designate if he is dead.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is, deposited and held in the Treasury; yes.

Mr. RUCKER. What I want to do is get it out of the Treasury into the hands of the man who may hold a mortgage so as to protect the soldier's home.

Mr. RAYBURN. But under the regulations on application to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy they might allow this man to pay it to whom he pleases, I suppose.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the language here "to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed" and then followed by the language which peremptorily directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it to the soldier or those designated by him in the event of his death precludes the idea that upon the request of the soldier the Treasury Department could apply it on a debt. Let me ask the gentleman if this language would be objectionable, as I do not want to hurt the bill, but desire to help it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand that; but let us just read it down to the word "prescribed":

That in case one-half of an enlisted man's monthly pay is not allotted, regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, may require, under such circumstances and conditions as may be prescribed in such regulations, that any proportion of such one-half pay as is not allotted shall be deposited to his credit, to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed.

It may not be in 10 days or anything like that.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it contemplated that the regulations will prescribe that the money may be turned over by the Treasury Department to pay debts or interest on debts if desired and so directed by the soldier?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think there is any question.

Mr. RUCKER. That is what I want understood.

Mr. RAYBURN. I understand. I think the language is broad enough that he may be allowed to make payments whenever they think the payment is necessary.

Mr. RUCKER. In order to make it perfectly clear, would the gentleman have any objection to this amendment: After the word "prescribed" insert the words "or at his discretion may be applied to the discharge of such debt or debts as he may designate"?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think that is covered and the amendment entirely unnecessary.

Mr. RUCKER. It does not seem to me to be covered, and in order to test the judgment of the committee I will offer the amendment, and I sincerely hope the entire committee will vote upon it and, I hope, adopt it. I am not in favor of delegating to any department of the Government the performance of a duty that we should perform. We should express in plain, direct language the will of Congress and not leave it to a department to do by mere regulation that which we should do by legislation. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "prescribed," a comma and then insert the words "or at his discretion may be applied to the discharge of such debt or debts as he may designate."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 18, after the word "prescribed," insert the following: "or at his discretion may be applied to the discharge of such debt or debts as he may designate."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have five minutes on this.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would say at the end of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the end of five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, just to ask a question—

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section close now, and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close now.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 204. That a family allowance of not exceeding $50 per month shall be granted and paid by the United States upon written application to the bureau by such enlisted man or by or on behalf of any prospective beneficiary, in accordance with and subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified.

The family allowance shall be paid from the time of enlistment to death in or one month after discharge from the service, but not for more than one month after the termination of the present war emergency. No family allowance shall be made for any period preceding the enactment of this amendment. The payment shall be subject to such regulations as may be prescribed relative to cases of desertion and imprisonment and of missing men.

Subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinabove and hereinafter specified, the family allowance payable per month shall be as follows:

Class A. In the case of a man, to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children:

- (a) If there be a wife but no child, $15.
- (b) If there be a wife and one child, $25.
- (c) If there be a wife and two children, with $5 per month additional for each additional child, $32.50.
- (d) If there be no wife, but one child, $5.
- (e) If there be no wife, but two children, $12.50.
- (f) If there be no wife, but three children, $20.
- (g) If there be no wife, but four children, with $5 per month additional for each additional child, $30.

Class B. In the case of a man or woman to a grandchild, a parent, brother, or sister:

- (a) If there be one parent, $10.
  - (b) If there be two parents, $20.
  - (c) For each grandchild, brother, sister, and additional parent, $5.
- In the case of a woman, to a child or children:
- (d) If there be one child, $5.
  - (e) If there be two children, $12.50.
  - (f) If there be three children, $20.
  - (g) If there be four children, with $5 per month additional for each additional child, $30.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have two short amendments which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 12, line 26, after the word "application" strike out the words "to the bureau."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, all I am going to suggest is this, namely, that most of the applications for a family allowance are going to come from the men at the time of their enlistment. If he wants an allowance to his wife his papers will go to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or he might write home a letter or something of that sort. We ought not to have any limitations that will increase the formalities and insist that he apply to this new bureau.

Mr. KNUTSON. It seems to me it would be an application to the bureau if a fellow did not say "bureau" on it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think this phrase "to the bureau" is better out. I think the gentlemen will agree with me on that.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it ought to be as it is. I think there should be liberal practice as to these cases. I think no case will fail because the soldier failed to use technical language.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am trying to perfect the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If the chairman of the committee thinks this amendment unnecessary, I will not press it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, lines 8 and 9, after the word "preceding," strike out the words "the enactment of this amendment" and insert in lieu thereof the words "declaration of war."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is of some importance. If a man is in the Army now—has enlisted—and has a family, his family ought to be compensated from the time he went in since the war began. This family allowance is not allowed before the war, but it ought not to depend on the time when this act goes through. If the man is enlisted now and enlisted since the war, the family allowance ought to run from the time of his enlistment and should not be limited by the time this act is passed.

Mr. ADAMSON. What does the gentleman offer to insert?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I offer to strike out the words "the enactment of this amendment" and insert the words "declaration of war."

Mr. ADAMSON. Why not say "time of enlistment?"

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is there already. He only gets it from the time of enlistment, but if he is a Regular Army man, he is not expected to get any family allowance until after the war began, and this is to provide that the family allowance shall not go back to the time of the enlistment of the Regular Army soldier four years ago.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman thinks the allowance should not be made prior to the enlistment, and that it ought to be down to the declaration of war?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes. I said as to the enlisted man it ought to go back to the time of the enlistment if since the war, otherwise, if he enlisted before the war it would begin with the war. This has already been discussed by Congress. In the act that was passed, the appropriation that was passed, in August, 1916, to take care of the boys on the border they omitted to provide for the past, and in September, 1916, Congress passed an amendment, within 20 days afterwards, that said this allowance should be available to be paid for any time and service subsequent to July, 1916, the date of the call by the President.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER offers the following amendment: Page 13, line 19, after the word "children," insert "$32.50"; page 13, line 20, strike out the figures "$32 50."

Mr. ALEXANDER. That simply makes it clearer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment of the same nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER offers the following amendment: Page 13, line 24, after the word "children," insert "$30"; page 13, line 25, strike out "$30."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, on page 14, line 1, after the word "woman," I suggest a comma should be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 1, after the word "woman," insert a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER offers the following amendment: Page 14, line 11, after the word "children," insert "$30"; page 14, line 12, strike out "$30."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the last section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KEATING offers the following amendment: Page 13, line 17, strike out "$15" and insert "$25."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this is a very conservative amendment. It is designed to increase the allowance granted by the Government to the wife of a soldier to $25. If adopted, the wife of a soldier will receive $25 from the Government and $15 from her husband, making a total of $40 a month, or less than $10 a week.

That is practically the amount received at department stores by female clerks, and according to all the authorities the absolute minimum which can support a woman. In case there are three children in a family there would be added to that $10 for the first child, $7.50 for the second child, and $5 for the third child.

I could submit to the House, if I had the time, a mass of testimony gathered from all sections of the country, demonstrating that a smaller amount than the one I have named will not be sufficient to accomplish the purpose we have in mind.

In my opinion this is one of the most praiseworthy sections of this law, and I hope the membership of the House will make it effective. We do not want to make it necessary for the wife of a man who goes to the trenches of France to fight our battles to leave her home in order to earn a livelihood. If she has children there is a double reason why she should be permitted to remain in the home; and she can not possibly remain in the home unless you adopt the amendment I have suggested, or some similar figure.

There has been a good deal of discussion here to-day about the authorship of this bill. I think the inspiration for the bill came from Miss Julia Lathrop, the head of the Children's Bureau of this Government. Then Judge Mack, with his splendid legal mind and knowledge of insurance and kindred subjects, perfected the bill, and then our well-beloved colleague from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] introduced it. I submit that there is glory enough for every Member of this splendid trinity. It is the first bill in the history of this country that has attempted to take care of the fighters back of the lines—the women and the children who are left at home when the men go out to do the fighting, and I think that we should make it sufficiently generous to—

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not true that the appropriation bills when the men were sent to Mexico or to the border made exactly the kind of provision that is made in this bill for dependents behind the lines?

Mr. KEATING. You mean in the reported bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. Provision was made for those dependent upon the soldiers who were sent to the Mexican border.

Mr. KEATING. I remember that we made an appropriation at that time, but this is the first time that a formal law of this kind has been brought into this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Of course that was a law.

Mr. KEATING. Yes; it was a law, but it was not brought in in this form. It was simply a lump-sum appropriation to be distributed by the War Department for the care of the dependents of the soldiers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; to be distributed to them during the war on the border.

Mr. KEATING. Yes. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, can the amendment be again read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I always regret to oppose any provision the purpose of which may benefit the home. However, we should not lose sight of the fact that while we are making provision for these dependents we must have some regard for the charge on the great mass of the people who must respond in the payment of the revenue, not only in the discharge of the obligations we are creating under this bill, but all the obligations created by this war.

Now, this bill makes the minimum allowance by the soldier by compulsory allotment $15. The Government, in addition to that, pays the wife $15. If the soldier has one child, she is paid $25. If there be a wife and two children, $32.50. That would be $47.50. The maximum, I believe, is $60 that the wife may receive. The soldiers in the Regular Army, as I understand—although I am not familiar with the Army pay and regulations—may receive, some of them, $50, and some $60 per month, and some of them may receive more. Hence, in some instances they may receive the maximum pay of $60 a month.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. REED. On what theory did the committee provide in this bill that if there was no wife but a motherless child that child should receive $5, but if there was a second child that child would receive an additional $7.50, or a total of $12.50 for both children? That is in lines 21 and 22 of page 13. Why would it be considered more expensive per capita to keep two children than one?

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is an anomaly, to my mind.

Mr. REED. Ought not that to be corrected? I thought of that some time ago.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman would say "$10," and "one child $7.50," I could understand. I have raised a large family, and I know that it costs more to take care of one child separately than the per capita cost of two or three.

Mr. KEATING. Is it not the theory that the soldier allots $15 toward the upkeep of the first child?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. And therefore for the first child under the bill she would get $20 and for two children $27.50.

Mr. REED. That is the theory upon which the committee acted, but as it appeared in this part of the bill it seemed inconsistent.

Mr. KEATING. But I think the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in the figures he gave to the committee as to the amount that the wife would receive from the Government. Perhaps his totals are not correct, because I think he confused the amount contributed by the soldier with the amount paid by the Government.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I intended to include the allotment in the total amount.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if the difference in the values of the children could possibly be in consonance with the suggestion made by Col. Roosevelt in his letter to Judge Mack, quoted on page 6835 of the Record, in which the Colonel says:

The compensation for the family should be so arranged as to put a premium on the soldier having a considerable number of children; his is the stock which the Nation can not permit to die out.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Whether Judge Mack had that in mind at the time or not, it evidently would be an encouragement to work out that result.

Mr. HUSTED. It seemed to me that that might be considered a premium upon past performance.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 205. That family allowances for members of Class A shall be paid only if and while a compulsory allotment is made to a member or members of such class. The monthly family allowance to a former wife divorced shall be payable only out of the difference, if any, between the monthly family allowance to the other members of Class A and the sums of $50. For a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or to a former wife divorced, the monthly allowance, together with the allotment, if any, shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Missouri a question. If I read the hearings correctly, section 204 is expected to apply to 40 per cent of the men of the Army. Section 205 says:

That family allowances for members of class A shall be paid only if and while a compulsory allotment is made to a member or members of such class.

How many men of the Army are likely to come under the provisions of the compulsory law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. All of the privates that have families.

Mr. PLATT. Few of them have families.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I say all that have families.

Mr. PLATT. I want to know how many of them have dependent families. Somewhere in the hearings, I think, there is the statement that this applies to 40 per cent of the private soldiers in the Army.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think perhaps the gentleman is correct.

Mr. PLATT. That seems to me absurd. Theoretically we are not taking anybody into the Army who has a family dependent upon him.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Theoretically that may be true, but in fact we are. But if it is true, as the gentleman says, that very few married men are entering the Army, then the charge upon the Treasury will be small. I imagine, however, that that rule may be modified if provision is made, and married men may not be exempt hereafter.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will allow me, that did not obtain as to the officers and men in the Regular Establishment before the war began.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Oh, no.

Mr. ESCH. There were a good many of them who were married, especially the older sergeants, and the same in the Navy and Marine Corps, to some extent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But the gentleman was referring to those who are coming in under the selective draft.

Mr. PLATT. As I said the other day, a good many of the noncommissioned officers in the old Regular Army are married; but the men who are taken into the Army now are not married, or at least their families are not dependent upon them. The exemption boards, when they accept a married man, determine that his family is not dependent on him. Now, I want to know whether the men who have families, who it has been determined are not dependent upon those men, will come in under the family-allowance sections of the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think they do.

Mr. PLATT. The whole thing seems to be contingent upon the matter of compulsory allotment. It seems to me it might not apply to anybody except a few of the older men in the Regular Army and National Guard.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is no exception.

Mr. MADDEN. Almost every officer is married.

Mr. PLATT. This does not apply to them.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Only to privates.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There were no privates present when the section was prepared. There was an officer present.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not apply to officers.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly not. They do not want it to apply to them.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There is no reason why it should apply to them.

Mr. PLATT. What I desire to bring out is whether this section really applies to a considerable number of men or whether it applies only to a very few noncommissioned officers in the old Regular Army who were married before the war began.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will yield.

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. FESS. There are a great many places in Ohio and elsewhere where no one was called at all under the draft, because the allotment had been filled up by volunteering. A good many of those volunteers were married people.

Mr. MADDEN. How about the National Guard? I suppose a great many of those are married.

Mr. FESS. Many of those are married.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT. In regard to the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], I presume that married men who voluntarily enlisted may have been taken in, but men from the National Guard were discharged if they had families before the guard was drafted into Federal service. Some of them were discharged even if they wanted to go, so it is said, in my neighborhood.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I know of one specific instance in my own county where a young man goes in under the selective draft who had dependents, but he would not make the claim; and perhaps there are thousands of them.

Mr. PLATT. There may be cases like that, I admit, but there can not be a great many. I will say that I have had a letter or two from men in my district who say that if this section passes they will enlist, because it will take care of their families. If that is the purpose of it, if we need married men who have dependents, why, well and good; but I think it ought to be understood just what the purpose of this is. Certainly, it does not apply to any considerable number of men, either in the draft army or in the Regular Army at the present time, except the older men, who were married before the war began.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. FESS. I remember when the gentleman was on the floor some days ago he made reference to the inconsistency of providing for a soldier who has dependents, under a law which would not allow him to go into the Army because of dependents. It struck me while he was making the point that it was a pretty strong one, but in looking over the rulings of the man in charge, Gen. Crowder, in his instructions I think you do not find very many people who are being excused unless they can make it very specific that these are dependents upon them.

Mr. PLATT. It is being determined that they have no dependents every time, if they are accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It seems to me that the practice under the conscription law now leads us to believe that there is no such thing as general exemption because the applicant is married or because he has children.

Mr. PLATT. Not for marriage, but there is for dependents.

Mr. FESS. There is such a latitude that one board says it is and one board says it is not.

Mr. PLATT. Here is a case where a man makes a claim before the local board that he is married and has a family dependent upon him. The local board says they are not dependent and he appeals to the district board, and the district board says that the family is not dependent. Will not that decision bar the man from any benefit under this law?

Mr. FESS. Theoretically, it seems that it would; but practically it certainly would work an injury and an injustice.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman knows how these Government bureaus work; that they always decide adversely to the applicant. Here would be a judicial determination that the family are not dependents.

Mr. FESS. There are duplicate cases which shows that the law is not being lived up to as the makers supposed it would be. Here is a county line, and on one side of the line there is a family and on the other side of the line another family in a similar situation. This family is given an exemption and the family on the other side of the line is denied exemption. Here is one board in Logan County and a different board in Champlain County. The situation seems to me almost identical, but the two boards interpret the law differently. That is inducing a bitter feeling in that community. That is not the fault of the law, but there ought to be a uniformity in the decisions on grounds for exemption. My own opinion is that men who are in the Army and have a family, under the law it ought to be interpreted that the family of the soldier is dependent.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me that there ought to be some language here to make it certain that the decision of the exemption board will not bar a man's family from the benefits of these sections if it is found that the family is making sacrifices because of his absence.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman is right in that. If the decision of the board is conclusive that he has no dependent and he can not get an allowance, it is an error in the law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, under this provision, if the exemption board finds that he has any dependents, if he has a wife and child, whether dependent or not, they are entitled to an allowance under this provision.

Mr. PLATT. But are they?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Absolutely.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not tied up with the dependency, with the decision of the board?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; as to his father and mother and brother and sister it is optional with him, but as to his wife and child there is no question of dependence involved. If he has a wife and child or if he has children and no wife, they get this allowance just the same.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on the section and amendments thereto be closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 206. That family allowances to members of class B shall be granted only if and while the member is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and then only if and while the enlisted man makes a monthly allotment of his pay for such member or members equal to the amount of the monthly family allowance as hereinabove specified, except that—

(a) The maximum monthly allotment so required to be made to members of class B shall be one-half of his pay.

(b) If he is making no allotment to a member of class A, the minimum monthly allotment so required to be made to members of class B shall be $15 per month.

(c) If he is making the compulsory allotment to a member of class A, the minimum monthly allotment so required to be made to members of class B shall be one-seventh of his pay, but not less than $5 per month.

(d) On the enlisted man's application, or otherwise for good cause shown, exemption from the allotment as a condition to the allowance may be granted, upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Provision (d), page 15, reads like this:

(d) On the enlisted man's application, or otherwise for good cause shown, exemption from the allotment as a condition to the allowance may be granted, upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations.

Now, that seems to me to leave open the right to the bureau to make an allotment to dependents of soldiers, regardless of whether the soldier makes an allotment or not. It does not seem to me that we ought to empower any bureau of the Government to make any regulations to pay money out of the Treasury in such an indefinite way as this. By this we leave it discretionary with the bureau to exempt any man from the necessity of making an allotment, and will authorize that bureau to make a charge against the Treasury by regulations. It seems to me that we ought not to authorize a bureau to appropriate money, and that is what this does. My understanding always has been that money can not be taken out of the Treasury unless it is appropriated by the Congress. But this delegates to a board the power to appropriate, if I understand it correctly, for it gives, without question, the right to the board to make such regulations as will permit the payment of allotments to dependents of soldiers who themselves have not for sufficient reasons made an allotment to their own dependents.

I want to know whether anybody thinks that is right, whether we ought to be as indefinite as that. While I want to be liberal and want to treat the family of every soldier with due consideration, we ought not to go so far as to enable the head of any bureau to say just to whom money shall be paid, without respect to allotment that other men are required to make as a condition precedent for the payment of money to the family of a soldier. That is what this seems to do. I may not understand the language of this provision—and I hope I do not—but as I read if you are delegating the power to an appointee of the Secretary of the Treasury to make a charge against the Treasury of the United States that ought never to be allowed to be done by anybody except the duly elected representatives of the American people. [Applause.]

Can we delegate power to a board to make a regulation to pay money out of the Federal Treasury without any further reference of the matter to the Congress of the United States? This bill provides that certain compensation shall be paid to dependents of men serving in the Military and Naval Establishments for injuries received or for death resulting from their service, and it provides exactly what that compensation shall be under certain circumstances; but this provision of this section goes further than that. It authorizes a board, proposed to be appointed, to make regulations to pay money out of the Treasury without respect to whether any contribution is made by the soldier or not. Now, ought that to be done? I would like to hear from the gentleman who has charge of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. The only observation I would make is, I think the gentleman from Illinois misapprehends the language.

The items he is talking about are exceptions and limitations, and not authorizations at all. He will notice at the head of the section, "except that," and every one of the things he is talking about are exceptions and limitations.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, this does not seem to be an exception. It says:

On the enlisted man's application, or otherwise, for good cause shown—

Mr. ADAMSON. Read at the top of the page.

Mr. MADDEN (continuing)— exemption from the allotment as a condition to the allowance may be granted, upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations.

Mr. ADAMSON. The authorization ends up at the top of the page by saying, "As hereinabove specified, except that," and then it goes on and gives the exceptions about which the gentleman has been talking.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I understand that; but it also authorizes the board to make regulations by means of which money can be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. There can be no doubt about that, can there? Is that an exception?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is authorized.

Mr. MADDEN. It is authorized, but it is an indefinite authorization.

Mr. ADAMSON. And these are limitations.

Mr. MADDEN. It is delegating the power of Congress of the United States to an appointive board, and we ought not to do it. It is not good legislation; it is not a proper conservation of the rights of the American people, and for one I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman is going to move that, I am going to raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not know anybody else was ready to speak. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] will be allowed to speak, of course.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, who is on his feet, to explain this: In line 9, page 15, is the confusion to which I referred awhile ago. You have the language "so required to be made to members of class B." Class A, including the wife and children, covers the compulsory allotment. Class B, including parents, grandchildren, brother, and sister, is not compulsory, but voluntary, and yet this language, referring to class B, says, "so required to be made," as if this class B is compulsory. Now, the language, to me, is misleading. The language of lines 8, 9, and 10, page 15, refers to the classes—class A is compulsory and class B is voluntary—and yet the language refers to class B, which is voluntary, in the language, "so required to be made," which indicates compulsion.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think, if the gentleman is addressing his question to me, the use of the words "so required" is unfortunate and a mistake.

Mr. FESS. Why not say "so designated"?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it simply means where he makes no allotment in class A and wants to make it in class B he should make it as much as $15, and I am willing to strike out the words "so required" if desired.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the use of the language "so designated" would cover it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I make that motion, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the word "required" and insert the word "designated" in line 9, page 15.

Mr. FESS. I am impressed with the wisdom of the requirement of section 203, to which I arose to speak a moment ago. It reads as follows:

SEC. 203. That in case one-half of an enlisted man's monthly pay is not allotted, regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, may require, under such circumstances and conditions as may be prescribed in such regulations, that any proportion of such one-half pay as is not allotted shall be deposited to his credit, to be held during such period of his service as may be prescribed. Such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, with semiannual rests and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to his next of kin.

This provision attempts to place all soldiers on the same plane as to the amount of his pay, only modified by his rank.

The soldier who is compelled to send half his pay home to his dependents will have as much spending money as the soldier who has no dependent to whom he is compelled to send an allotment. The amount which would have gone to dependents, had he such, will be deposited with the Government to be held in trust on a stated rate of interest, either for himself or some beneficiary he may have designated. This provision eliminates what otherwise would be a discrimination.

But the real value of this provision is the guarantee to the youth that the Government will conserve by this way half his pay which would otherwise be expended, to be employed as a new beginning of a life of industry when he returns home.

I have no way to determine what proportion of our soldiers will be those who have not started into active life. But whether he has yet entered or not, his service interrupts that activity, and when he returns he will be as if he had never started in a life of industry.

This provision provides that a fund, which is made up by pay earned by him, and rightly belongs to him, but which has been held by his Government in trust for him to be turned over to him at the close of the war.

This insures him a new start in life and will assist at least in mollifying the great sacrifice he has made for the sake of his Government. I especially commend this feature of this proposed act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 9, after the word "so," strike out the word "require" and insert in lieu thereof the word "designated."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. And also in line 12.

Mr. ADAMSON. And also in line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 12, after the word "so," strike out the word "required" and insert in lieu thereof the word "designated."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, in order not to shut off any other gentlemen who want to speak, I move that debate end in five minutes on this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the end of five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee what the reason for subdivision (d) is?

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, I just believe it is a sort of leniency provided in case necessities should develop on the part of the soldier that he would need his money. I did not write it.

Mr. SANFORD. I would like to ask the meaning of class (d).

Mr. ADAMSON. There may be special cases—

Mr. SANFORD. What I want to get at is the meaning—

Mr. ADAMSON. Allow me a minute to finish answering.

Mr. SANFORD. Along the same line.

Mr. ADAMSON. There may be special cases where the soldier, either permanently or temporarily, might need his entire salary, and in that case he might ask that the Government make this allowance and exempt him from making his allotment.

Mr. SANFORD. Does subdivision (d) mean that in certain cases, on the application of the soldier, the bureau may make allowance to the family although the soldier has not made any allotment of his pay?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir; but not any increased allotment.

Mr. SANFORD. That is what it means?

Mr. ADAMSON. As I understand it.

Mr. SANFORD. If that is the meaning, it seems to me it would be more clear if the committee would use the words "condition precedent."

Mr. ADAMSON. Does it not mean the same thing? If it is a condition it is a condition precedent to the bill.

Mr. SANFORD. If it remains that way it means nothing.

Mr. DALLINGER. I can not conceive of any contingency that would arise where a man is getting $30 a month and he has dependents upon him and refuses to make any allotment for his family. As I understand it, the Government is providing him with food, and clothing, and shelter, and medical attendance, and he deliberately refuses to make any allowance for his family.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to answer the question, although the committee has ordered the debate to be closed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to make this request, but there is a matter on which I would like to speak for a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may speak at his own discretion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Five minutes is all the time I want.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want again to direct the attention of the gentleman from Georgia and different gentlemen who have been particularly active upon this bill to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I was impressed with the force of the objection that the gentleman suggested to paragraph (d) on page 15, and I wonder whether you have not in there a rather dangerous proposition. Now, the chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], called attention to the fact that this was a matter of limitation. Quoting the words at the top of page 15, it would read "except that." Quoting before that it says "family allowances shall be granted only if," and goes on "except that," on "the enlisted man's application, or otherwise for good cause shown, exemption from the allotment as a condition to the allowance may be granted, upon such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations."

Now, is it not true, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] suggested, that this does put into the hands of a bureau the discretion to determine whether or not a payment may be made without the soldier himself previously making the allotment? And does it not contain the element of danger of destroying the very integrity of this entire section or article? I am very fearful of that paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ADAMSON. It merely clothes the bureau with power and discretion to excuse a payment. Whether we can trust the bureau with that or not is a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Suppose in the case now of dependents a soldier, unmindful of his duty to his wife or child left at home, should decline or refuse to ask for this allotment; should there not be power to force him to do it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can conceive of cases, and the case my colleague suggests is a case in which perhaps there ought to be authority, but the question in my mind is whether or not this paragraph is not to indefinite; whether or not it does not clothe the bureau with too much authority. I simply call attention to it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Would not the gentleman from Tennessee make a motion if he has one in mind?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; I will make a motion. I make the motion to strike out the paragraph (d), and then you can perfect the matter later.

Mr. ROMJUE. It seems to me that you have the wrong conception of this section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Page 15, line 15, strike out paragraph (d).

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SNOOK. I call the gentleman's attention to a case like that which is intended to be covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], where the soldier was indebted for the payment of a farm, or something of that kind, and he wanted to have some kind of an excuse from the allotment. That was what this was intended to cover, so as to give the bureau a chance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has that conception of it, and my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has the conception that it would cover the case of a soldier, the head of a dependent family, where he refused to make allotment. Both of the cases the gentlemen have in mind are perhaps worthy cases; but ought there not to be some definite provision, something more definite and specific than is contained in this paragraph?

I do not want to interfere with this bill, and I do not want to seem to be in any way antagonistic to the committee. I am much interested in the bill and in its future effects—

Mr. SNOOK. Your contention is that the discretion is too wide?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Entirely so.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. RAYBURN. I really believe that paragraph (d) is intended to qualify paragraph (c) and make it so that this allowance can be made to a father or a mother without having to make the $5 allowance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There have been one or two previous paragraphs passed over in the bill. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman to let this paragraph be passed over and recur to it again and see in the meantime whether the suggestions I have made are not worthy of consideration?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 207. That the amount of the family allowance to members of class B shall be subject to each of the following limitations:

(a) If an allowance is paid to one or more beneficiaries of class A the total allowance to be paid to the beneficiaries of class B shall not exceed the difference between the allowance paid to the beneficiaries of class A and the sum of $50.

(b) The total monthly allowance to beneficiaries of class B added to the enlisted man's monthly allotment to them shall not exceed the average sum habitually contributed by him to their support monthly during the period of a year immediately preceding his enlistment or the enactment of this amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALEXANDER: Page 16, line 4, after the word "of," insert "dependency, but not exceeding."

Mr. ALEXANDER. That just makes it clearer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 209. That allotments and family allowances shall be paid to or for the beneficiaries, as may be provided by regulations, to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, section 209 provides that "allotments and family allowances shall be paid to or for the beneficiary, as may be provided by regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively."

Now, we are creating a board. We are taking this business out of the hands of the War and Navy Departments, and yet we are authorizing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to make regulations. We are adding to the board which is to have jurisdiction over the administration of this law two other activities. It was said yesterday that the War Department might be embarrassed by being called upon to administer this law, and that the Navy Department might be embarrassed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. The intent of this bill, the policy of this bill, is that this bureau shall prescribe these allotments and certify them to the Secretaries of the Navy and of the War Departments. This merely provides that when so specified these departments shall provide for the payment in their own way and according to their own regulations to the parties entitled to it.

Mr. MADDEN. This section does not say that.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is what it means.

Mr. MADDEN. You ought to say what you mean in the language of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One of the objections I have, if I have any to this bill, is that it delegated too much power to the War-Risk Bureau. Power should be delegated to the two departments most concerned, the War Department and the Navy Department.

It seems to me that is a meritorious proposition. I do not know how it strikes the gentleman. Bear in mind that the War-Risk Bureau was an experiment, started with the purpose of dealing with commerce only. This new idea of soldiers' insurance was developed suddenly, and it has been thrown upon the War-Risk Bureau, which was created to deal with commerce alone. In the earlier paragraphs of the bill power was given to that bureau to make all regulations.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to finish my statement to the gentleman from Illinois, if he will permit.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman can get me more time, I will yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. Finishing the statement that I made to the gentleman from Illinois, if he will refer to page 6 he will find this language:

Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the Commissioner of the Division of Military and Naval Insurance.

The board certifies to the War Department and to the Navy Department what the allotments and awards are, and then the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy attend to the payments.

Mr. MADDEN. And hence the necessity of carrying out the suggestion that I made yesterday.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time I have taken out of the gentleman's time be allotted to him.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggested yesterday that all of the work in connection with the administration of this fund with respect to the men in the Army and the Navy ought to be conducted by the War Department and the Navy Department. You are only adding complications by transferring one part of the work to the Army and one part to the Navy and the other part to this board. You are compelling the Navy to keep two sets of records. You are compelling the Army to keep two sets of records. You are compelling them to furnish information to the board, and then you are compelling the board to furnish the information back to the Army and to the Navy; whereas if the bill were properly drawn and the language used had the proper meaning, so that any person who could read English might understand it, the Army would have the control over the situation with respect to the Army, and they could make the allotments and make the payments. They have to make the pay roll. They have the records of the men. They have to furnish these records to somebody else, and then somebody else has to furnish the records back to them.

Why, it is duplication after duplication. This is triplicate work. I submit that it is an expense that is not justified and ought not to be undertaken.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended as much as I have consumed.

Mr. MADDEN. No; never mind. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 210. That upon receipt of any application for family allowance the commissioner shall make all proper investigations and shall make an award, which award shall be certified to the War Department or Navy Department, as may be proper. Whenever the commissioner shall have reason to believe that an allowance has been improperly made or that the conditions have changed, he shall investigate or reinvestigate and may modify the award. The amount of each monthly allotment and allowance shall be determined according to the conditions then existing.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey, a member of the committee, will be recognized first.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do so, Mr. Chairman, with the idea of asking the meaning of this section. Here is a poor fellow in the Army who has gone to France. He has a wife and family. They ought to be taken care of.

If we pass the proper bill, and the man, when he enlisted, stated to the War Department that he had a wife and family, then the War Department can pay them and will pay them. But, instead of that, it is provided that the allowance can only be paid on an award by a new bureau not yet existing, which, if this bill were passed next week, could not get the clerks together for a year and a half to take care of the hundreds of thousands of cases that will come before them. And then application has to be made to that bureau by the poor fellow in France. I know something about the difficulty of getting letters from one side of the water to the other and back again now. There are no forms over there on which to make such an application. The man is not taken care of by the War Department as he should be because he is in the Army, but he must make application to a bureau and send it back here, and then it must pass through that bureau, with all the technicalities that rightly would be put upon such an application. The War Department knows their man. They have their agents right at the spot where he was recruited, who know whether he is married or not. This new bureau does not know; and in order to prevent frauds on the Public Treasury they have to put all sorts of technicalities about it.

Well, it says his wife may apply. I do not know whether, when she applies, they are going to give notice to the soldier that she claims to be his wife or not. Yesterday it was suggested that in South Carolina there may be a good many disputed claims of that sort, and they will be careful, possibly, to correspond with the soldier in France before anything is done. So the soldier's family will have to wait. I am not going to move an amendment here, because that was determined yesterday. If I did make a motion here, I should move to strike out enough of this to say that upon receipt of any application for a family allowance the War Department or the Navy Department, as the case may be, shall make an award according to the facts in their possession. They should do it without any application, because they know the facts.

Something must be done somehow at this session that will take care of the men now at the front and who are going there. We do not know how many tens of thousands or hundreds of thousands are over at the front now.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that an application for an allowance was necessary if the allowance was to be made for members of class A?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I can not find it in the bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. At the bottom of page 12, section 204—

That a family allowance of not exceeding $50 per month shall be granted and paid by the United States upon written application to the bureau by such enlisted man or by or on behalf of any prospective beneficiary, in accordance with and subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinafter specified.

And then you will likewise find on page 6, lines 7 to 10, that—

Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the Commissioner of the Division of Military and Naval Insurance.

Mr. HUSTED. Then there must be an application for the allowance in every case.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. An application first, an award next, a certificate to the War Department or Navy Department, and meanwhile there is no appropriation to the War Department or Navy Department to pay. There is an appropriation of $141,000,000 which is not awarded to either of these departments for the purpose, and meanwhile the allotment of pay is to be made in the War or Navy Departments by the man himself, or else by the War or Navy Departments. The other department has nothing to do with all this. Can you imagine any way of making confusion worse confounded than by putting two bureaus in charge of one matter, and by having the bureau that knows nothing about it make the award, and ask the other for information, when that other bureau is so crowded with the war business now that it has no time to furnish any such information?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I ask for recognition in my own right, in order to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Section 204 says that a family allowance of not exceeding $50 a month shall be granted and paid.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Upon written application.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; it says it shall be done.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; through the bureau.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, section 210 says that upon receipt of any application for a family allowance the commissioner shall make all proper investigation and shall make an award.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; that is the bureau that do not know anything about it. That bureau have got to ask the War Department for information. That is to say, they have got to make an investigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not see how the two sections can be reconciled in any event. One says it shall be awarded—

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That means that it shall be awarded after investigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not what it says.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Taken together that is the only meaning. This is a bill to make all the delays of every kind that have been charged against courts of equity and courts of chancery for the last hundred years. It is so drawn that it can not be worked out practically. When you go to Canada you find out how it ought to be done. When a man is recruited there he tells whether he has a wife or family, and says he wants them to have an allowance, and they say immediately "allot half of your pay and we will make the allowance," and they do it. They pay it, as a part of the pay roll from the beginning. This bill is so drawn as to create every kind of delay. I hope I am not talking too fast to be taken down, but I am so full of this matter that I can not help standing up every time it comes up to protest against this circumlocution office that is being created here for our soldiers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, my time has not expired. The gentleman from New Jersey was talking in my time.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has the floor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think so, but I only want to say a word. These provisions do not harmonize, and they ought to be clarified. I have not studied the bill with sufficient care to say whether or not I indorse all that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] has said, but it certainly appears that one section saying that an allowance shall be granted and another saying that it may be granted with an investigation ought to be harmonized.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 25, insert a new section after the word "existing," as follows:

"SEC. 211. That a commissioned officer of the military or naval forces of the United States while on active duty, with or without troops, who has a wife, child, parent, brother, or sister wholly dependent on him for support, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such dependent the number of rooms now prescribed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1168), as the allowance of quarters for his grade, or be paid commutation therefor at the rate now authorized by law."

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced the proposed amendment as a new section, 211, added to article 2 of H. R. 5723 to provide against what is a grave injustice to the officers of the National Army, the National Guard just being mobilized into the Federal service, and a few officers of the naval force.

The present law provides for quarters for officers according to grade, and that if quarters are not provided, commutation therefor may be paid to the officer at a rate not to exceed $12 per room per month.

Our officers going into active service should have the knowledge that their dependents are to be provided for, and this bill is an attempt to treat all of our men fairly, but the officers have been overlooked, and I am referring this condition to the House so that justice may be done.

It would seem that the able committee which has labored so conscientiously to frame this legislation had assumed that the present law was so drawn as to provide officers with dependent families, who may be detailed to training camps or to overseas service, with quarters for their families, or, in lieu thereof, a commutation allowance.

Such is not the case, as shown by rulings made under the construction of the present law by the War Department when our men were mobilized and the National Guard of the various States were sent to the border in 1916.

And, for that matter, the War Department is now sending out circulars in which it is making the promise that officers will be furnished quarters or allowances. I quote from this circular a statement, as follows:

At each post and station where there are public quarters in buildings belonging to the United States, the quartermaster, under direction of the commanding officer, will allot to each officer the quarters to which his rank entitles him.

The circular goes on to explain that if there are no quarters for officers they will receive a monthly allowance by which they could rent them. However, when an officer under this expressed promise of the Government asks for quarters or allowances, they are informed, in effect, that the Government has changed its mind and does not intend to make good. The only exception to this rule is when an officer is either stationed at a comfortable post or detached from his regiment and detailed to serve in a soft berth at Washington.

The decision was reached that officers serving in training camps or in European service were to be deprived of the commutation allowance; and this, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, is equivalent to cutting and reducing the salaries of the officers who are to bear the burden of the war by fighting in the trenches and thereby putting on them a worry and sense of uncertainty with regard to those dependent on them.

My amendment puts the Government in position where it can keep its promise to officers with dependents.

There are hundreds of instances even at this early stage of the war where officers have been compelled to borrow funds to equip themselves and leave their families with a small amount of funds. I have read many confidential letters outlining the condition which the families of officers are now facing.

In brief, I can only bring to the attention of the committee arguments in favor of authorizing commutation of quarters when on active service the following:

(a) Expenses are now higher than ever before.

(b) When the family is left behind the necessary expense of maintenance is increased not less than 50 per cent above that needed when it is not necessary to be absent.

(c) If the family is taken to concentration camps, the rent on quarters is always higher than at home, if quarters are available at all.

(d) The expense of maintaining oneself has increased 75 per cent over the previous cost, price of clothing and all other equipment having increased from 20 to 75 per cent.

(e) It has been recognized that the enlisted man absolutely needs additional pay, whether married or single, and the married men are receiving discharges nearly as fast as they can be issued, while in not furnishing officers with quarters, or, in lieu of quarters, commutation of quarters, with the policy to provide additional means of support for enlisted men.

(f) The additional expense for doctors' bills are now added to the officer's expense account, unless he happens to have his family near his regiment or station, which is practically impossible in the case of National Guard and National Army officers and impossible for all officers who go to Europe.

Further, it does not seem fair to deprive any officer of any part of his allowances, or, in other words, make him pay for being allowed to be an officer in times like these.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman realizes that this bill does not touch the salary of officers in any respect.

Mr. GOULD. I appreciate that; but I sat here yesterday and heard the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER], authorized by the committee, make a statement that if any Member of the House had any suggestions to make that would add to the justice of the bill, the committee would be glad to see them adopted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, yes; germane amendments.

Mr. GOULD. Well, I see no reason why this is not germane; it affects the officers and men who are to be taken care of.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman can get an amendment in under the rules, it is all right.

Mr. GOULD. As I have said, I can not see why the amendment is not germane. Pretty nearly every congressional district in this House has a National Guard organization or a company of some sort. Our boys are in that organization. You gentlemen, perhaps, have sons in the Army, and some have grandsons. In these cases the family ought to have the protection and assistance that is rightfully their due. I can not see for the life of me why this amendment should not be adopted and our officers taken care of. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not germane. The Chair has examined the amendment carefully, and clearly it is not germane to this bill, and therefore he sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN was recognized.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move at the end of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that at the end of five minutes all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. ADAMSON. I said at the end of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois. I thought his time might be extended.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think I shall take more than the five minutes. Mr. Chairman, section 210, to which I shall address myself, reads:

That upon receipt of any application for family allowance the commissioner shall make all proper investigations and shall make an award, which award shall be certified to the War Department or Navy Department, as may be proper. Whenever the commissioner shall have reason to believe that an allowance has been improperly made or that the conditions have changed, he shall investigate or reinvestigate and may modify the award. The amount of each monthly allotment and allowance shall be determined according to the conditions then existing.

Here we have a section of the bill directing the commissioner to make an award and to certify it to the War Department or the Navy Department. And then in the same section we have a provision that compels the commission to reinvestigate and withdraw the award, or to modify the award, and this occurs every month.

Now, in the first place he is compelled to make an award, and the department to which he certifies the award must pay it. Later on he is compelled to reinvestigate his own award and to modify or withdraw it.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I think the gentleman said in the House yesterday that he was not a lawyer. I understand that this was drawn by an eminent judge on the United States bench. Does not the gentleman think he will be in contempt of court for criticizing this particular section as he proceeds to criticize it, without license from the United States or anybody at all to criticize the composition of a section of this kind?

Mr. MADDEN. I am anxious for the passage of a bill that can be worked so that an ordinary man like I am can understand it. When a man appointed as commissioner is compelled to make an award and at the same time compelled to take it back there must be some inconsistency there.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. In the language of that section he could make a third investigation and change the award again.

Mr. MADDEN. He is compelled to make an award every month, and then compelled to review the award after it is made, and then compelled to modify it, and then compelled to withdraw it, and the people that have been paid the money may not have any money to pay the award back and may be sued by the Government for taking the money they were awarded.

Now, I am not in favor of that kind of legislation, and that is what this means. I do not care who drew the law or how eminent the judge was. I have some common sense myself, I think, and I think I know when I come up against a stone wall, but it does not seem to make any difference. Any suggestion anybody makes here that has any common sense to it is overridden just the same as if there was no suggestion made at all. They have got so much pride of opinion about the language of the bill that they would forego any common sense in connection with it in order to pass it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have his time extended two minutes so that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] may ask him a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want any more time; let the gentleman from Missouri talk in his own time.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE III.

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH OR DISABILITY.

SEC. 300. That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the course of the service by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 17, line 5, after the word "service," insert the words "in the line of duty."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, we are willing for that amendment to be disagreed to.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the committee amendment. I want to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the purpose of the committee in putting in those words, "in the line of duty."

Mr. ADAMSON. We are willing to disagree to it.

Mr. IGOE. Then I do not want to say anything if the committee does not want us to adopt it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the committee amendment. It is in all the previous laws.

Mr. IGOE. If the committee is divided on it, I want to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does anyone desire to speak for the amendment before the gentleman speaks against it?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I speak in favor of the amendment for this reason. A disease may be contracted in the course of a man's service for which the service is by no means responsible. He may have drunk too much and had other bad habits, and he may have contracted a disease and still he has contracted it in the course of service. For that reason, all previous pension laws have had in the words "contracted in the service in the line of duty." This, of course, has to be liberally construed and is liberally construed. If a man is serving, and he receives an injury at any time while he is doing his duty, even if he is allowed to go on leave for a few hours out of camp, he still receives it in the line of duty and while he is wearing his uniform. If one of these men is knocked down on the street while wearing a uniform he would be entitled to his pension but not if they seek trouble and are injured or contract a disease not in the line of their duty, not contemplated by Army regulations, by their orders, or by their enlistment.

Whatever they do while in the service, as long as they stand by their duty, is in the line of duty. For whatever they do in the service which is against the regulations they are not entitled to pension. I believe that is all very thoroughly determined by decisions of the Pension Bureau, and I do not think it would be wise to go against that long line of decisions in reference to this language at the present time.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to inquire if the gentleman believes that while a soldier is off duty if he should contract pneumonia that he should not be given a pension for payment under this law?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And would there be any question as to the construction that he was within the line of duty?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There has never been any construction of the Pension Office that where a man was serving and doing his duty, even if he was on leave, if he contracted a disease during the course of that service, still he was not going against his duty. I think I am stating that very thoroughly.

Mr. DOWELL. And he would be considered, under the ruling, as in the line of duty?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. So long as he was not doing anything wrong and did not bring the disease upon himself.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. Unless this amendment goes in, if a man went and got drunk and was killed in a drunken brawl, he would be entitled to $5,000?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It seems to me so. We have a statute which has been thoroughly construed by the Pension Department, by the Pension Bureau, which everybody understands, which has been construed for the last 50 or 100 years—I do not know how long those words have been in the United States Statutes—that the injury must have been received or the disease contracted in the line of duty.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest these words have been interpreted one way by one bureau of the Government and another way by another bureau of the Government. The Pension Department has held one way in the case of a man on leave and the Court of Claims department has held another. I have a specific instance noted down here where an officer was taking some fellow officer home in an automobile after a dance and was killed and the Pension Office held it was not in the line of duty and the Judge Advocate General held that it was.

I intend, if this amendment is not agreed to, to offer an amendment at the end of that section.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman whether he thinks it is safe to vary language which has received very careful construction and on which the construction now is settled? It may have been doubted at one time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the construction of that language is settled.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In the Pension Bureau; yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. If these men go into the trenches, they will be in line of duty there. A man staying in the trenches a few days will need recreation. There is no question about that. Suppose he goes down to Paris on a leave of absence for a few days, or to some other town; do you construe that he will be in line of duty?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am afraid they would not construe it that way.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This is a pension, and I propose after this section to insert the words "compensation by way of pension." I want to get the advantage under this section of the decisions of the Pension Bureau, which now hold that unless an injury is the result of the man's own vicious habits it is to be considered as received in the line of duty.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was intending at the end of that section to offer an amendment to the effect that no compensation shall be payable for the injury that has been caused by a man's own willful misconduct.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Let us stick to what we have. I think it is dangerous to vary the language. There are gentlemen on the Committee on Pensions who know more about it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will give the gentleman a specific instance that came within my own knowledge. There was a veteran in my district who, on a frolic with members of his company, threw a watermelon rind and hit a comrade with it. The comrade attacked him with a knife, and as a result his arm had to be amputated. The objection was that he was not in the line of duty at the time he suffered his injury, but he afterwards got a pension by act of Congress.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We have those questions up in the law, and you can not get away from them. This amendment could not get away from it. This man threw a watermelon rind, and ought not to have done it.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment of the committee will not be adopted. The committee is trying to frame the bill somewhat on the theory of the compensation laws, and any man who has studied the compensation laws knows that there are no words in the entire laws that have caused more confusion in the courts than in trying to determine what is meant by "in the course of duty," or "within the line of duty," and such expressions as that. Now, in the compensation law we passed the language was, "sustained while in the performance of his duty." And there was an exception where injury was due to the willful misconduct of the employee, or due to intoxication, or to his deliberate intention to bring about injury. In dealing with soldiers there is all the more reason why this language should not be used, because the soldier is in the service of the Government during his whole period—24 hours a day. But this question may come up. He may have a furlough or leave of absence. He may be getting on a train to go some place while off duty; and unquestionably the officer, in passing upon this question, will take and construe these words, "in the line of duty," and hold that unless the man is actually performing military service he will be barred. And it seems to me we ought to make this thing clear, and that we ought to provide that he gets his compensation if he is injured in the service, or his people get it if he is killed in the service, but make a separate provision, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], to exclude cases where the injury or death is brought about by the willful misconduct of the soldier or by his intention to bring about the injury to himself. Or if you want to go further and include intoxication or some other things, do that. But to include the words "in line of duty" means that many of these cases will have to be argued before a board, and if men will take the decisions of the compensation boards and the decisions of the courts they will find thousands and thousands of cases where facts differ, and the courts have had to pass upon the question of whether or not the man is entitled to compensation. And as we will have many cases arising under this act and we want to be sure that the families or the men get this compensation, it seems to me this language ought not to be inserted.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Let us agree on the time on this section. I ask that at the end of 30 minutes the debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. ADAMSON. It does not exclude amendments. It limits debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want the time allotted to me on the discussion of this bill at this time.

Mr. ADAMSON. How much time?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Thirty minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not keep the gentleman from having it. I will ask then to close the balance of the time on this section.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have an amendment to offer to the section.

Mr. ADAMSON. Can it be included in the 30 minutes?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for the present.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard a moment on the language under discussion, namely, "in line of duty." The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] has just called my attention to information relating to Army and Navy pensions, where I think this identical phrase has been decided. Section 3434 in these rules and regulations as to line of duty provides that—

Line of duty is a technical phrase which is defined in the administration of the pension laws as that relation which a soldier or sailor sustains to the military or naval service of the United States when performing an act connected with any of the possible conditions or requirements of the service, or in the observance of the proper orders of his superior, not in violation of the Army or naval regulations.

When he is performing service under orders of his superiors and an injury results to him, under the construction placed upon the phrase "in line of duty" by the Pension Bureau he is entitled to a pension.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose he is on leave of absence not in line of duty?

Mr. COX. Then he would be clearly entitled to a pension; surely, if he has got a leave of absence. He is subject to the orders of his superior, and has got to return when his leave of absence expires, and if, while he is taking his leave of absence, without violation of the regulations or anything unlawful or wrong on his part he gets hurt, he is entitled to a pension.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I think the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken.

Mr. COX. Well, take your time and make your own speech.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. That is not the construction put upon it by the Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. COX. The gentleman can make his own speech. Note the words: "When performing an act connected with any of the possible conditions or requirements of the service, or in the observance of the proper orders of his superior, not in violation of the Army or Naval Regulations." Now, the query was put here: Supposing a soldier was taken out of the trenches in France and he wanted to go to the city of Paris. It is perfectly plain that he could not go unless he got orders to go, or permission to go. But supposing, while he was making the journey from the trenches to the city of Paris, without any fault on his part whatever, he got hurt. Under the phrase here, "in line of duty," that soldier in my opinion would clearly be entitled to a pension. I do not think there is any question about it. But if he got a furlough to go from the trenches to the city of Paris, and through vicious habits, and not in consequence of any order of his superior which he was compelled to obey, he purposely or intentionally, or even unintentionally brought injury to himself by reason of his vicious habits, he would not be performing his duty or be in line of duty.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think the Pension Bureau has adopted in their decisions this formula, "not the result of his own vicious habits."

Mr. COX. That is true. But we who have been up against the Bureau of Pensions are frequently met with the proposition: Here is an injury, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] argued, that might have occurred to the soldier in the course of his service, but not in line of duty. For that reason he is not entitled to a pension. But if the injury occurred to the soldier while in line of his duty and not on account of his own vicious habits, then he is entitled to a pension under the pending article of this bill, and I dislike to see the committee yield and vote it down, because I think it is a protection to the honest, careful, moral soldier who is going over to France.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think that the words "not the result of his own vicious habits" would be better than the words "employed in the line of duty"?

Mr. COX. I am not a stickler on a certain form of language; but when a form of language has been employed in a statute from time immemorial, and when it is well understood by all the men in this country and by the courts of the country and the soldiers of this country, I would rather adhere to the original language than see new language go in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to say just a word on this amendment. The suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] as to the language, "not the result of his own vicious habits or conduct," as a substitute does not quite reach the case. A man's conduct may not be vicious in the sense in which the words are ordinarily used, and yet it may not be in line of duty and in violation of orders; and if you substitute the words, "not the result of his own vicious habits," for "in line of duty," you might make it possible for a man to be pensioned because this section is a pension section—when the injury is clearly the result of conduct out of the line of duty and in violation of his orders.

Now, there is no one in this House who I think more heartily indorses this bill than I do. I want to do everything that should be done and can be done for the men who are going abroad to fight our battles. But I do not think it is an unreasonable requirement that the soldier shall be required, if he expects to benefit by the provisions of this bill, to observe the rules and regulations laid down by his Government while serving as a soldier of these United States, and certainly with the construction that has been placed upon it by the department that ought to deal and will deal largely with the construction of this language, if the injury is the result of conduct not in violation of the regulations and rules laid down by his Government, he is entitled to a pension, and the language ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield there?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I call the gentleman's attention right along the line of his argument to the fact that if the committee amendment is not permitted to remain in he might get compensation or a pension as the result of an actual violation of his orders.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Sure.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I was trying to say. The gentleman is saying it better. For instance, he might go out and engage in a poker game and get drunk and take a cold.

Mr. SIMS. It is against the law to sell him any liquor.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know where the gentleman's place of business would be, or who would be the clerk; but I object to saying that he shall receive the benefit unless the injury or death is caused by his own vicious habits, because they may not be vicious, and yet they may be clearly in violation of the regulations and rules, and I do not believe anybody can object if we give him this compensation if he is injured or contracts disease while within the performance of his duties and not doing anything in violation of the rules and regulations. That is all I want to say. I hope this proposed committee amendment stays in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RUSSELL: Amend by striking out lines 3, 4, and the first part of line 5, on page 17, up to and including "duty," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That for death from any cause not the result of his own fault or misconduct at any time after suffering total disability resulting from personal injury or disease contracted in the course of service in the line of duty or for total disability incurred in such service in the line of duty."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not at all affect the question of disability. On the first reading of it you might think, on first reflection, that it did, but it does not. But this affects no case except death and the status that his widow would occupy after he had died.

My contention is that where a soldier who has left a wife and children at home goes out into this war, either as a volunteer or as a drafted man, and is totally disabled in the service and dies afterwards of some other disease, his widow ought to be entitled to a pension. I think I can make myself clearer by illustrating it in this way: I assume that there are two brothers, both married, each having four children. They both volunteer in this war. In the same battle they have both legs shot off. One of them dies of his wounds. The other, after long suffering in the hospital, survives. Then the war is ended. He goes home and in a month afterwards dies of smallpox or pneumonia. His earning capacity has been destroyed, his legs were shot off while he was in the service of his country in time of war. His wife while he was in the service was at home trying to take care of those four children. Now, what results? One of the brothers may be wealthy and the other may be poor, to make it stronger. The widow of the brother who died from his wounds will get $60 per month the balance of her life unless she remarries. The other brother, who rendered the same service, had the same family, suffered the same total disability, with a wife and four children at home, did not die from his wounds, and his family will not get a single cent. I think the stating of that case is enough for every gentleman in this House to see that it will be inequitable and unfair.

I am not fighting this bill. I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I want to see it pass; but I want to see it pass in a way that will not be criticized as being unjust and inequitable; and if you do not put an amendment of this sort in this bill to make it consistent you will do the very thing that you say you do not want to do. You will invite pension committees in future Congresses to make the correction. Let us make this bill correct, consistent, and just to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this amendment confined to a case where a man who has suffered total disability dies subsequently, but his death is not attributable directly to the disability?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. If this amendment is adopted, I will offer one later to cover cases of partial disability, giving the corresponding amount in such cases. But you may not be in favor of that. This is for total disability alone, where a man's eyes are shot out, or where his legs are shot off, where his earning capacity is destroyed, and where his wife was at home with her children while he was fighting the battles of his country.

Mr. BORLAND. This amendment is confined to that kind of a case?

Mr. RUSSELL. Absolutely.

Mr. BORLAND. Where he himself is a pensioner for total disability?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Then he dies, leaving a wife and dependents, but his death is not traceable directly to his total disability?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is this exact case; and I hope the committee will agree to this amendment and make this a better bill.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. What effect would it have if we should pass an amendment of that kind, for instance, if the soldier had one arm shot off and one leg shot off? Would you call that total disability?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; that would be partial disability.

